To see so plainly, to go so thoroughly, the trouble, the blindness, the folly, the imbecility, the ingratitude, the incorrigibility, the strange perverseness, perfiduousness, malice, and cruelty of mankind in so many instances—would it not astute a mind so pure?

INCORRIGIBLENESS.† n. s. [from incorrigible.] Hopeless depravity; badness beyond all means of amendment.

What we call penitence becomes a sad attestation of our incorrigible.

Dryden of Priory.

I would not have chiding used, much less blows, till obstinacy and incorrigible make it absolutely necessary.

Locke.

INCORRIGIBLY.† adv. [from incorrigible.] To a degree of depravity beyond all means of amendment.

Some men appear incorrigibly mad; Their cleanliness and company renounce.

Reverence.

INCORRUPT.† } adj. [in and corrup- INCORRUPTED.] } tus; Latin; incor- rompt, French.]

1. Free from foulness or depravation.

The first church the apostles were most pure and incorrupt; but the papists have clearly varied from the usage and example of that church.

Alp. Crumner, Def. of the Sacra. (1550.) fol. 116.

Sin, that first

Distemper'd all things, and, of incorrupt,

Corrupted.

2. Pure of manners; honest; good. It is particularly applied to a mind above the power of bribes.

Where the multitude is incorrupt and religious, all things are done justly, and without compulsion.

Rabbi, Arts of Empire, ch. 26.

INCORRUPTIBILITY.† n. s. [incorruptibility, Fr. from incorruptible.] Insusceptibility of corruption; incapacity of decay.

Philo, in his book of the world's incorruptibility, allegorizes the verses of a Greek tragic poet.

Hawdell on Providence.

A testification of our faith in the resurrection of bodies, and a symbol of future incorruptibility.

Greenleaf, Art of Enslaving, p. 64.

INCORRUPTIBLE.† adj. [incorruptible, Fr. in and corruptible.] Not capable of corruption; not admitting decay.

In such abundance lies our choice, As leaves a great store of fruit untouch'd, Still hanging incorruptible.

Milton, P. L.

Our bodies shall be changed into incorruptible and immortal substances, our souls be sustained with the most ravishing objects, and both continue happy throughout all eternity.

Wade.

INCORRUPTION.† n. s. [incorruption, Fr. in and corruption.] Incapacity of corruption.

So also is the resurrection of the dead: it is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption.

1 Cor. ix. 42.

INCORRUPTNESS.† n. s. [in and corrupt.]

1. Purity of manners; honesty; integrity.

Purity of mind, integrity, and incorruption of manners, is preferable to fine parts and subtle speculations.

Woodward.

2. Freedom from decay or degeneration.

INCORRUPTIVE.† adj. [from incorrupt.] Free from decay or corruption.

The wealth of incorruptive praise.

Alcander, Poem. of Imag. B. 1.

To INCRA'SSATE. v. a. [in and crassus, Lat.] To thicken; the contrary to attenuate.

If the cork be too tight to sink under the surface, the body of water may be attenuated with spirits of wine; if too heavy, it may be incrassated with salt.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Acids dissolve or attenuate, alkalies precipitate or incrassate.

Norton, Opuscula.

Acids, such as are austere, as verjuice fruits, produce too great a stricture of the fibres, incrassate and coagulate the fluids; from whence pains and rheumatism.

Arbuthnot.

To INCRA'SSATE.† v. n. To become thick; to grow fat.

Their spirits fattened and incrassated within them.

INCRA'SSATE.† part. adj. [from the verb.] Fattened; pilled.

Their understandings were so gross within them, being fattened and incrassated with magical phantasies.

INCRASSA'TION. n. s. [from incrassate.]

1. The act of thickening.
  2. The state of growing thick.
- Nothing doth conglutinate but water; for the determination of quicksilver is fixation, that of milk conglutination, and that of oil incrassation.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

INCRASSATIVE. n. s. [from incrassate.]
That which has the quality of thickening.

The two latter indicate restringents to stomach, and incrassatives to thicken the blood. Harvey.

TO INCREASE.† v. n. [increo, Lat. increasce, old Fr. See TO ENCREASE.]

1. To grow more in number, or greater in bulk; to advance in quantity or value, or in any quality capable of being more or less.

Hear and observe to do it, that it may be well with thee, and that you may increase mightily.

Profane and vain babbling will increase unto ungodliness. 2 Tim. ii. 16.

From fifty to threecore he loves not much in fancy, and judgement, the effect of observation, still increases. Dryden.

Henry, in knots, involv'd his Emma's name
Upon this tree; and, as the tender mark,
Grew with the year, and wider'd with the bark;
Venus had heerd the virgin's soft address,
That as the wound the passion might increase.
Prior.

2. To be fertile.

Fishes were more numerous or increasing than beasts or birds, as appears by their numerous spawn. Hale.

TO INCREASE. v. n. [See TO ENCREASE.]
To make more or greater.

Hyæ thes from this slaughter-house,
Lost thou increase the number of the dead.
Shakespeare.

He hath increased in Judah mourning and lamentation. Ezek. vii. 16.

I will increase the famine. Sam. v. 16.

I will increase them with men like a flock. Ezek. xxxvi.

It serves to increase that treasure, or to preserve it. Temple.

INCREASE.† n. s. [from the verb. Though, in the poetical examples, the accent falls on the last syllable of this word, and Dr. Johnson accordingly so marks it; it has, in modern times, been often placed on the first; by way of so distinguishing the substantive from the verb.]

1. Augmentation; the state of growing more or greater.

For three years he liv'd with large increase
In arms of honour, and esteem in peace. Dryden.
Hail, bard triumphant! born in happier days,
Whose honours with increase of ages grow,
As streams roll down, enlarging as they flow.
Pope.

2. Increment; that which is added to the original stock.

Take thou no usury of him nor increase.

3. Produce.

The increase of the threshing-floor, and the increase of the wine-press. Nam. xviii. 30.
As Herod sings, spread waters o'er thy field,
And a most just and glad increase 'twill yield.
Drahan.

Those grains which grew produced an increase beyond expectation. Mortimer, Husbandry.

4 Generation.

Into her womb convey sterility;
Dry up in her the organs of increase,
And from her derogate body never spring a babe.
Shakespeare.

5. Progeny.

All the increase of thy house shall die in the flower of their age. 1 Sam. ii. 33.
Him young Thais bore, the bright increase Of Phœbus. Pope, Odyssey.

6. The state of waxing, or growing full orbed. Used of the moon.

Seeds, hail, null, bedges, and herbs, will grow soonest, if set or cut in the increase of the moon.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

INCREASEFUL.† adj. [increase and full.]
Abundant of produce.

To cheer the ploughman with increaseful crops.
Shakespeare, Rape of Lucrece.

INCREASE.† n. s. [from increase.] He who increases.

A lover and increaser of his people.
Bacon, and Fl. Fontenay.

Though melancholy persons love to be dark and alone, yet darkness is a great increase of the humours. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 261.

INCREASEABLE.† adj. [from increase.] That may be increased. Sherrwood.

INCREATE.† adj. [in and creatus, Lat.]
Not created. Bullockar.

Bright effluence of bright essence increate.
Milton, P. L.

The alcoran was not the increate word of God. L. Addison, Life of Mahomet, p. 48.

INCREATED.† adj. Not created.

Since the desire is infinite, nothing but the absolute and increate Infinite can adequately fill it. Cheyne.

INCREDIBLE.† n. s. [incredibilis, Fr.]
The quality of surpassing belief.

For objects of incredibility, none are so removed from all appearance of truth as those of Corneille's Andronicus. Dryden.

INCREDIBLE.† adj. [incredibilis, Lat.]
Surpassing belief; not to be credited.

The ship Argo, that there might want no incredible thing in this fable, spoke to them. Raleigh.

Presenting things impossible to view,
They wander through incredible to trace. Granville.

INCREDIBLENESS.† n. s. [from incredible.]
Quality of being incredible.

The very strangeness, or incredibleness, of the story. M. Cassanov, Of Credulity, &c. (1668.) p. 180.

INCREDIBLY.† adv. [from incredible.] In a manner not to be believed.

The arts are incredibly improved.
Hakewell on Providence, p. 245.

INCREDULITY.† n. s. [incredulité, Fr.]
Quality of not believing; hardness of belief.

Let not the incredulity of them trouble thee, that speak against thee. 2 Esdr. xv. 3.

He was more large in the description of Paradise, to take away all scruple from the incredulity of future ages. Raleigh.

INCREDULOUS.† adj. [incredulus, Fr. incredulus, Lat.] Hard of belief; refusing credit.

I am not altogether incredulous but there may be such candles as are made of salamander's wool, being a kind of mineral, which whiteneth in the burning, and consumeth not. Bacon.

INCREDULOUSNESS. n. s. [from incredulous.] Hardness of belief; incredulity.

INCREMABLE.† adj. [in and cremo, Lat.]
Not consumable by fire.

If from the skin of the salamander these incremable pieces are composed. Brown, Vulg. Err.

INCREMENT. n. s. [incrementum, Lat.]

1. Act of growing greater.

Divers conceptions are concerning the Nile's increment, or inundation. Brown's Vul. Err.

2. Increase; matter added.

This stratum is expanded at root, serving as the seminary that furnisheth matter for the formation and increment of animal and vegetable bodies. Woodward.

3. Produce.

The orchard loves to waste
With winter wild before the gems exert
Their feeble heads: the loosen'd roots then drink
Large increment, earnest of happy years. Philips, Ode, B. 2.

TO INCREPATE.† v. a. [increpo, Lat.]
To chide; to reprehend. Cockerm.

INCREPATION.† n. s. [increpation, Lat. inreprehension, Fr.] Reprehension; chiding.

His answer was a kind of soft increpation to them, and a strong instruction to all times. W. Montague, Div. Ess. P. I. (1648.) p. 311.

Here we have David's increpation of Doeg. By Richardson on the Old Test. p. 226.

Whosoever shall in the sincerity of his heart acquit himself as to all the foregoing duties, and thereby prepare and adorn himself to meet and converse with his Saviour at this divine feast, shall never be accused with the thunder of that dreadful increpation from him, "Friend, how camest thou in hither, not having a wedding-garment?" South, Ser. ii. 306.

The admonitions, fraternal or paternal, of his fellow Christians, or of the governors of the church; then, more publick reprehensions and increpations. Hammond.

TO INCREMENT.† See TO ENCREASE.

INCRUENT.† adj. [Lat. in cruentus.]
Unbloody; without bloodshed.

He musters out as many places as he can find, that make any mention of luxury, oblation, holy victim, incrumental sacrifice. Brentin, Soul and Sam. at Endor, (1674.) p. 408.

TO INCRUST.† v. a. [incrasto, Lat. TO INCRUSTATE.]† incruster, Fr.]

To cover with an additional coat adhering to the internal matter.

The finer part of the wood will be turned into air, and the grosser stick baked and incrusted upon the sides of the vessel. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Some rivers bring forth spurs, and other mineral matter, so as to cover and incrust the stones. Woodward.

Save but our army; and let Joe increase Swords, pikes, and guns, with everlasting run. Pope.

Any of these sun-like bodies in the centres of the several vortices, are so incrusted and weakened as to be carried about in the vortex of the true sun. Cheyne.

The shield was purchased by Woodward, who incrusted it with a new rust. Archibald and Pope.

INCRUSTATION. n. s. [incrustation, Fr. from incrusto, Lat.] An adherent covering; something superinduced.

Having such a prodigious stock of marble, their chapels are laid over with such a rich variety of incrustations as cannot be found in any other part. Addison on Italy.

TO INCUBATE. v. n. [incubo, Lat.] To sit upon eggs.

INCUBATION. n. s. [incubation, Fr. incubatio, Lat.] The act of sitting upon eggs to hatch them.

Whether that vitality was by incubation, or how else, is only known to God. Raleigh, Hist.

Birds have eggs enough at first conceived in them to serve them, allowing such a proportion for every year as will serve for one or two incubations.

When the whole tribe of birds by incubation produce their young, it is a wonderful deviation, that some few families should do it in a more novel way. Derham.

As the white of an egg by incubation, so can the serum by the action of the fibres be attenuated. Arbutnot.

INCUBATURE.* n. s. [incubitus, Lat.] Incubation.

If you go on and describe it, [the Manuicodactyl], as Cardan, Hernandez, Scaliger, and others have done, that it is a bird which lives in the air, without ever coming near the earth till it falls down dead upon it, that its food is a dew of heaven, and the incubation of the female on the back of the male, their ideas will be enlarged according to the degree of information; but no fecundity of the mind can make them perceive one single property, further than they are instructed.
Ellis, Knowledge of Div. Things, p. 155.

INCUSUS.† n. s. [Lat. incube, Fr. We use sometimes the Latin plural incusi; and sometimes incubatus. Dr. Johnson has given only the solitary medical citation from Floyer. The incubus of the older time was a fairy: he succeeded, as Mr. Tytwhitt observes, to the ancient Fauni, and like them was supposed to inflict that oppression, which goes under the name of the ephaltes, or night-mare. So Bullokar: "The vulgar think it [the incubus] some spirit, but the physicians affirm it to be a natural disease, &c. The incubus had the character also of being a great lover of women."

1. A pretended fairy or demon.
A legendary fable, that Luther was begotten by an incubus.
Bp. Hall, Hen. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 136.
Stories—of hags, of incubi.
Mare, Precinct, at 45.

That old fabulous fancy, which they say some of the fathers had from the Jews, of devils being incubuses, and that in their courtesies to women they gratified them with those inventions, which might help their decaying beauties.
Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsum, p. 121.

Belial, the dissolutest spirit that fell,
The sensualist, and, after Aemond,
The bestial incubus. Milton, P. R. ii. 152.

2. The night-mare.
The incubus is an inflation of the membranes of the stomach, which hinders the motion of the diaphragma, lungs, and pulse, with a sense of a weight oppressing the breast. Floyer.
Such as are troubled with tacitus, or witch-ridden, as we call it.
Burton, Anat. of Med. p. 91.

To INCULCATE.† v. a. [inculco, Lat. inculquer, Fr. We had formerly the pedantic word incult; but inculcate is also a very old word, although Dr. Johnson could find no earlier example of it than that from Aterbury. It existed a century and a half before his time. Incult, though not to be used, has public authority for it; as it occurs in the "Injunctions" given by the Queen's Majesty, 1559. Sign. B. ii. b. "The same minister shall inculte these or such sentences." To impress by frequent admonitions; to enforce by constant repetition.

The apostles of Christ the Lord—very often inculcate, that men are justified before God by faith.

Manifest truth may deserve sometimes to be inculcated, because we are too apt to forget it.

Aterbury.
Homer continually inculcates morality and piety to the gods.
Brown, Notes to Pope's Odyssey.

INCULCATION.† n. s. [from inculcate, Fr. inculcation.] The act of impressing by frequent admonition; admonitory repetition.

Industry in action being as importunity in speech, by continual inculation forcing a yielding beyond the strength of reason.

Feller, Holy War, p. 154.
Often inculcation of warning necessarily implies a danger.
Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 5.
It requires the helps and assistances of frequent inculcation.

INCULPABLE.† adj. [inculpable, old Fr. in and culpabilis, Lat.] Unblamable; not reprehensible.

Ignorance, so far as it may be resolved into natural inability, is as to men, at least inculpable, and consequently not the object of scorn, but pity.
South.
It was an innocent and inculpable piece of ignorance.
Killingbeck, Serms. p. 150.

INCULPABLENESS.* n. s. [from inculpable.] Unblamableness.

Since the inculpableness of their merely natural imbecility abates to them the shame of owning it, let them not at least voluntarily surcharge themselves with such imperfections, as want that excuse and extenuation.

INCULPABLY.† adv. [in and culpabilis, Lat.] Unblamably; without blame.

As to errors or infirmities, the frailty of man's condition has inevitably, and therefore inculpably, exposed him.
South.

INCULT.† adj. [inculte, French incultus, Lat.] Uncultivated; untilld. This word is not the coinage of Thomson, as the solitary citation from his Autumn by Dr. Johnson might lead the reader to suppose. It was in use a century before his time.

Germany then, saith Tacitus, was incult and horrid; now full of magnificent cities.

Burton, Anat. of Med. p. 82.
His forests huge,
Incult, robust, and tall, by Nature's hand Planted of old. Thomson, Autumn.

INCULTIVATED.* adj. [in and cultivatus.] Not cultivated; not improved by tillage.

The soil, though incultivated, so full of vigour, that it procures without seed.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 280.

INCULTIVATION.* n. s. [in and cultivation.] Want or neglect of cultivation.

Inhabited by wild beasts, and in that state of incultivation which nature in her luxuriant fancies loves to form, the wilderness was of no value to its proprietors.

INCULTURE.* n. s. [in and culture.] Want or neglect of cultivation.

The inculture of the world would perish it into a wilderness, should not the activeness of commerce make it an universal city.

INCUMBENT.† n. s. [from incumbent.]

1. The act or state of lying upon another.

We find them more fragile, and not so well qualified to support great incumbencies and weights.

Evelyn, B. i. ch. 3. sect. 17.

2. Imposition as a duty.

The duties of a man, of a friend, of a husband, of a father; and all the incumbencies of a family.

Donne, Lett. to Sir H. G. Parnes, p. 266.

3. The state of keeping a benefice.

These fines are only to be paid to the bishop, during his incumbency in the same see. Swift.

INCUMBENT.† adj. [incumbens, Latin.]

1. Resting upon; lying upon.

Then with expanded wings he steers his flight
Aloft, incumbent on the dusky air,
That felt unusual weight. Milton, P. L.

The ascending parcels of air, having now little more than the weight of the incumbent water to surmount, were able both to spread themselves as to fill up that part of the pipe which they pervaded, and, by pressing every way against the sides of it; to lift upwards with them what water they found above them. Boyle.

With wings expanded wide ourselves we'll rear,
And fly incumbent on the dusky air.
Dryden.

Here the rebel giants lie;
And when to move they incumbent load they try,
Ascending vapours on the day prevail. Addison.

Man is the destiny of prey of pestilence,
And o'er his guilty domain
She draws a close incumbent cloud of death. Thomson.

2. Imposed as a duty.

All men, truly zealous, will perform those good works that are incumbent on all Christians.

Spenser, Scen.
There is a double duty incumbent upon us in the exercise of our powers. L'Estrange.

Thus, if we think and act, we shall see ourselves duly mindful not only of the advantages we receive from such acts, but of the obligations also which are incumbent upon us. Aterbury.

INCUMBENT.† n. s. [incumbens, Latin; old French, incumbent,] pourvu d'un bénéfice, celui qui l'occupe. Lacombe.
He who is in present possession of a benefice.

In many places the whole ecclesiastical dues are in lay hands, and the incumbent lieth at the mercy of his patron. Swift.

To INCUMB.† v. a. [encombrer, Fr.; ingombrare, Ital.] To embarrass. See To ENCOMBER.

So huge a rout
My cause is call'd, and that long look'd-for day
Is still incumber'd with some new delay. Dryden, Juv.

INCUMBRANCE.* See ENCOMBRANCE.

INCUMBROUS.* adj. [from incumber.] Cumbersome; troublesome.
Harde language, and harde matter.
Is incumbrous for thee to bere. Chaucer, House of Fame, ii. 254.

To INCUR. v. a. [incurro, Latin.]

1. To become liable to a punishment or reprehension.

I have incurred displeasure from inferiors for giving way to the faults of others. Hayward.

They, not obeying,
Incurred what could they less? the penalty;
And, manifold in sin, deserv'd to fall. Milton, P. L.

So judge thou still, presumptuous! till the wrath,

Which thou incurs't by flying, meet thy flight
Sev'nfold, and scourge that wisdom back to hell.
Milton, P. L.

They had a full persuasion that not to do it were to desert God, and consequently to incur damnation. South.

2. To occur; to press on the senses;
with to or into.

The motions of the minute parts of bodies are invisible, and incur not to the eye; but yet they are to be depercepted by experience. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The mind of man, even in spirituals, acts with corporeal dependence; and is to be helped or hindered in its operations, according to the different quality of external objects that incur into the senses. South.

INCURABLE. n. s. [incurabilis, Fr. from incurable.] Impossibility of cure; utter incurability of remedy.

We'll instantly upon a dower to the manner of a proper and improper consumption, together with the reason of the incurability of the former, and facile cure of the other. Horne.

INCURABLE. adj. [incurable, Fr. in and curable.] Not admitting remedy;
not to be removed by medicine; irre-mediable; hopeless.

Pause not; for the present time's to sick,
That present medicine must be ministered.
Or overthrow incurable causes. Shakespeare.

Stop the rage betime,
Before the wound do grow incurable;
For being green, there is great hope of help. Shakespeare.

A scurvis is not absolutely incurable, because it has been known that fresh pueris has cured
it in cattle. Arbuthnot.

If idiots and lunatics cannot be found, in- curables may be taken into the hospitals. Swift.

INCURABLENESS. n. s. [from incurable.]
State of not admitting any cure.

This incurability in every sickness — is indeed the very soul of the sickness, whereby it lives, though the patient die. Fatherly, Attkin. (1622), p. 242.

INCURABLY. adv. [from incurable.] Without remedy.

We cannot know it is or is not, being incurably ignorant. Lack.

INCURIOSITY. n. s. [incuriositas, French, Cotgrave.] Want of curiosity; inattentiveness; negligence.

That you may not charge me with incuriosity,
Watson, Lett. (1611).

Thinking all things become a good mat; even his gestures and little incuriosities.

By Taylor, Sermon. (1651), p. 195.

His incuriosity or indifference, when truth was offered to be laid before him as a private man, and by one who, he knew, had the repute of exercising every spiritual power necessary to enforce it, shews him [Pilate] in a light much less excusable.

INCURIOS. n. s. [incuriosus, Latin.] Pronounced by Heylin, in 1656, an in-couth and unusual word. But it had been in use many years before. See also INCURIOSITY, and INCURIOSNESS.

Negligent; inattentive.

Can we think that the Providence, which is so precisely curious as to mark and observe the falling of sparrows, should be so supinely incurious as to slight and neglect the falling of kingdoms? Fatherly, Attkin. (1622), p. 270.

The Creator did not bestow so much skill upon his creatures, to be looked upon with a careless

VOL. II.

He seldom at the Park appear'd;
Yet, not incurious, was inclin'd
To know the converse of mankind. Swift.

INCURIOSITY. n. s. [from incuriosus.]
Without nice examination; without in-quisitiveness.

It is enough for me to rest in the hope, that I shall outgrow them; in the mean time, let me be learnedly ignorant, and incuriously devout, silently blessing the power and wisdom of my infinite Creator, who knows how to honour himself by all these glorious and unrevealed subordinations.

By Hall, Invisible World, i. 17.

In such an age publick money will be easily granted, and publick accounts rarely or incur-iously inspected. Bolingbroke on Parties, Lett. 19.

INCURIOSNESS. n. s. [from incuriosus.]
Negligence; inattentiveness; carelessness.

Our reverential fear of the God of heaven calls us to eschew in the other extreme all sordid in-curiosities, and slovenly neglect, in his immediate service. By Hall, Lett. Rem. p. 258.

Tell me, have you gone away currently with this incuriosus or unconcernedness for Conf? Goodman, Wind. Ex. Conf. p. 13.

INCURSION. n. s. [from incurro, Latin.]
1. Hack; mischievous occurrence.

Size of daily incursion, and such as human frailty is unavoidably liable to. South.

2. [Incursion, Fr.] Invasion without conquest; inroad; ravage.

Spain is very weak at home, or very slow to move, when they suffered a small fleet of English to make an hostile invasion, or incursion, upon their havens and roads. Bacon.

Now the Partisan king hath gather'd all his host
Against the Scythian, whose incursions wild
Have wasted Scythians. Milton, P. R.

The incursions of the Gothic disorders the affairs of the Roman empire. Arbuthnot on Com.

TO INCURVATE. v. a. [incurvo, Lat.]
To bend; to crook.

Mr Isaac Newton has shewn, by several experiments of rays passing by the edges of bodies, that they are incurvated by the action of these bodies. Clerke.

TO INCURVE. v. a. [incurvo, Lat.] To bow; to bend. Cockerham.

INCURVATION. n. s. [from incurvo, Lat.]
1. The act of bending or making crooked.

Religious incurvation towards a crucifix, or the host, as to an object, and not a mere unaccompanied accidental circumstance, is idolatry. More, Antid. against Atheism, ch. 1.

They bow down the dead man's thumb into the hollow of the hand; and by that incurvation they fancy to express the Name of God. L. de la, State of the Jews p. 293.

2. State of being bent; curvity; crookedness.

One part moving while the other rests, one would think, should cause an incurvation in the line. Glanville.

3. Flexion of the body in token of reverence.

He made use of acts of worship which God hath appropriated; as incurvation, and sacrifice.
Sifting-fair.

INCURVITY. n. s. [from incurvus, Latin.] Crookedness; the state of bending inward.

The incurvity of a dolphin must be taken not really, but in appearance, when they leap above water, and suddenly shoot down again: strait bodies, in a sudden motion, protruded obliquely downward, appear crooked. Brown.

TO INDAGATE. † v. a. [indago, Latin.]
To search; to beat out. Cockerham.

INDAGATION. n. s. [from indago.]

[the soul] by; and the takes in errors into her the same conduits the death truths. Byge.

Parcellus directs us, in the indagation of colours, to have an eye principally upon salts.

Part hath been discovered by himself, and some by human indagation. Brown, Fat. Err.

INDAGATOR. n. s. [indagator, Latin.] A searcher; an enquirer; an examiner.

For men to make nothing of this royal law of Christ, and yet to pretend to be more accurate indagators into matters of religion, and more affectionate lovers of piety than ordinary, is either to be abominably hypocritical, or grossly ignorant in the most precious and necessary parts of Christianity. More, Conf. Clem. (1652), p. 200.

The number of the elements of bodies requires to be searched into by such skillful indagators of nature. Byge.

TO INDAMAGE. n. s. See TO ENDAMAGE.

TO INDEAR. n. s. See TO ENDEAR.

INDEARMENT. n. s. [from indear.] Cause of love. See ENDEARMENT.

Likeness is the greatest indowment of love, and the most natural foundation of light and complacency. Norris on the Beatitudes, p. 172.

TO INDEART. v. a. [in and dart.] To dart
in; to strike in.

I'm loke to like, if looking likeing move;
But no more deep will I indent mine eyes,
Than your consent gives strength to make it fly. Shakespeare.

TO INDEBT. v. a.

1. To put into debt.

2. To oblige; to put under obligation.

Forgive us our sins; for we forgive every one that is indebted to us. St. Luke, xl. 4.

Attestment for himself, or offering asset,
Indebted and undone, has none to bring. Milton, P. L.

This best alliance may
The indebted nation bounteously repay. Granville.

INDEBTED. participial adj. [in and debt.]
Obliged by something received; bound to restitution; having incurred a debt.

It has to before the person to whom the debt is due, and for before the thing received.

If the course of politick affairs cannot in any good course go forward without it instruments, and that which fitteth them be their virtues, let polity acknowledge itself indebted to religion, godliness being the chiefest top and well-spring of all true virtues, even as God is of all good things.

Hosler.

Few consider how much we are indebted to government, because few can represent how wretched mankind would be without it. Atterbury.

Let us represent to our souls the love and beneficence for which we daily stand indebted to God. Rogers.

We are wholly indebted for them to our ancestors. Swift.

INDEBTMENT. n. s. [from indebted.] The state of being in debt.

Fear thou a worse prison, if thou wilt needs wilfully live and die in a just indebtedness, when thou mayest be at once free and honest.

By Hall, Balm of Gilead.

INDECENCY. n. s. [indecence, French.] Any thing unbecoming; any thing contrary to good manners; something wrong, but scarcely criminal.

INDECORUM. n. s. [Latin.] Indecency; something unbecoming.

They — commit many absurdities, many indecorums, unbefitting their gravity and person.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 553.

As if a herald, in the achievement of a king, should commit the indecorum to set his helmet sideways and close, not full-faced and open in the posture of direction and command.

Milton, Tetrachordon.

As I design to have notices from all public assemblies, I shall take upon me only indecorums, improprieties, and negligences, in such as should give us better examples.

Tatler, No. 3. The soft address, the castigated grace, are indecorums in the modern maid. Young.

INDEED. adv. [in and deed.]

1. In reality; in truth; in verity.

Yet loving indeed, and therefore constant. Sedley.

Though such assentments be had indeed for religion's sake, harmful nevertheless they may prove, as well in regard of their fitness to serve the turn of heretics, and such as privily will venture to instil their poison into our minds.

Hobbes. Some, who have not deserved judgement of death, have been for their goods sake caught up and carried straight to the bough: a thing indeed very painful and horrible. Spenser.

2. Above common rate. This use is emphatical.

Then didst thou utter, I am yours for ever; 'Tis grace indeed. Shakspeare.

Burrows, in mean affairs, his subjects pains; But things of weight and consequence indeed, Himself doth in his chamber them debate. Davies.

Such sons of Abraham, how highly soever they may have the luck to be thought of, are far from being indeed illustrious. South.

I were a head, indeed, to do you wrong, I who have lov'd and honour'd you so long. Dryden.

3. This is to be granted that. A particle of connection.

This imitation, indeed, of our author, will save those the labour who would look for Adam's heir amongst the race of brutes; but will very little contribute to the discovery of one next heir amongst men.

Lacks. Some sons indeed, some very few we see, Who keep themselves from this infection free. Dryden.

There is nothing in the world more generally dreaded, and yet less to be feared, than death: indeed, for those unhappy men whose hopes terminate in this life, no wonder if the prospect of another seems terrible and amazing. Walc.

4. It is used sometimes as a slight assertion or recapitulation in a sense hardly perceptible or explicable, and though some degree of obscure power is perceived, might, even where it is properly enough inserted, be omitted without miss.

I said I thought it was confederacy between the juggler and the two servants; 'tho' indeed I had no reason so to think. Bacon.

There is indeed no great pleasure in visiting these magazines of war, after one has seen two or three of them. Addison.

5. It is used to note concession in comparisons.

Against these forces were prepared to the number of near one hundred ships; not so great of bulk indeed, but of a more nimble motion.

Bacon, War with Spain.

Blackhouse, Hist. of the B.B. B. 4. ch. i.

INDEFICIENT.* adj. [in and deficient.]
Not failing; perfect; complete.

Faith heightened into vision, hope satisfied in possession, love completed in fruition, peace consummated in insatiable, and indeficient delectation: In these four things came to consist the endowments of glorified souls, so far as we can here frame any judgement of the glory to come.
Ep. Reynold's Works, p. 1107.

INDEFINABLE.* adj. [in and definable.]
Not to be defined.

INDEFINITE. adj. [indefinitus, Latin; indefinit, Fr.]

1. Not determined; not limited; not settled.

Though a position should be wisely rejected, yet that negative is more pregnant of direction than an indefinite; as ashes are more generative than dust.
Bacon, Essays.
Her advancement was left indefinite; but she, that it should be as great as ever any former queen of England had.
Bacon.

Tragely and picture are more narrowly circumscribed by place and time than the epic poem: the time of this last is left indefinite.
Dresden, Defensory.

2. Large beyond the comprehension of man, though not absolutely without limits.

Though it is not infinite, it may be indefinite; though it is not boundless in itself, it may be so to human comprehension.
Spectator.

INDEFINITELY. adv. [indefinite.]
1. Without any settled or determinate limitation.

We observe that custom, wherunto St. Paul allured; and whereof the fathers of the church in their writings make often mention, to show indefinitely what was done; but not universally to bind for ever all prayers unto one only fashion of utterance.
Hobbes.

We conceive no more than the letter beareth, that is, four times, or indefinitely more than thrice.
Brown.

A duty to which all are indefinitely obliged, upon some occasions, by the express command of God.
Snaulridge.

2. To a degree indefinitely.

If this world be indefinitely extended, that is, so far as no human intellect can fancy any bounds of it, then what we see must be the least part.
May on the Creation.

INDEFINITENESS.* n. s. [indefinite.]
The state or quality of being indefinite.

INDEFINITUDE. n. s. [indefinite.]
Quantity not limited by our understanding, though yet finite.

They arise to a strange and prodigious multitude, if not indefinitely, by their various positions, combinations, and conjunctions.

INDELIBERATE.* adj. [indeliberi, Fr.; indeliberat, & deliberate.]
Unpremeditated; done without consideration.

Actions proceeding from blandishments, or sweet persuasions, if they be indeliberate, as in children, who want the use of reason, are not presently free actions.
Ep. Bramhall.

I distinguish between free acts and voluntary acts: the former are always deliberate, the latter may be indeliberate.

The love of God better can consist with the indeliberate commissions of many sins, than with an admissible persistence in any one. Goe. of the Tongue.

INDELIBILITY.* n. s. [from indelible.]
The quality of being indelible.

Truth hath champions that will utterly raise his so seeming indelibility.

Jon. Rich. the Portraiture, &c. (1648.) Ded. A. i. b. When this question of the indelibility of the sacred character came to be much agitated in this House, it was argued, &c.

Ep. Horsley, Speeches in Parliament, p. 421.

INDELIBLE.* adj. [indeleble, Fr.; indelebilis, Lat. in deleble.]
It should be written indeleble. Dr. Johnson.

In fact, our old and good authors usually write the word indeleble; and so Cocke-gram gives it in his old vocabulary. I have brought Bacon and bishop Hall, to shew this orthography; and could have added numbers, so writing it, about their time. Bentley, in more modern times, observed it; and is also now adduced.]

1. Not to be blotted out or effaced.

Their character was yet, by confession, indeleble.

Goodman, Writ. Ec. Conf. P. ii.
Some primary notions and general principles of the law of nature, so indelibly stamped and impressed on the soul of man.

Ellis, Knowledge of Div. Things, p. 59.

INDELICACY. n. s. [in and delicacy.]
Want of delicacy; want of elegant decency.

Your papers would be chargeable with worse than indelicacy, they would be immoral, did you treat detestable uncleanness as you rally an impertinent self-love.
Addison.

INDELICATE.* adj. [in and delicate.]
Wanting decency; void of a quick sense of decency.

Their luxury was inelegant, their pleasures indelicate.
Warren.

INDEMNIFICATION.* n. s. [from indemnify.]

1. Security against loss or penalty.

2. Reimbursement of loss or penalty.

The Franciscans enjoyed from the popes the privilege of distributing indulgences; a valuable indemnification for their voluntary poverty.

Warren, Hist. E. p. 194.

To INDEMNIFY† v. a. [in and dammify.]
Old Fr. dammifier. Our old exicography gives "indemnify" without damage, or exempt from harm." Huotet.

1. To secure against loss or penalty.

2. To maintain unhurt.

Indemnt signifies rude and haughty, indemnify to keep safe.

INDEMNITY. n. s. [indemnuit, Fr.]

Ormerby, Character, sig. II. 7.

To INDENT† v. a. [in and dens, a tooth, Latin].
To mark any thing with inequalities like a row of teeth; to cut in and out; to make to wave or undulate.

About his neck
A green and gilded snake had wreath'd it self,
Who with her head, nimble in thrusts, approach'd
The opening of his mouth; but suddenly,
Seeing Orlando, it unlik'd it self,
And with indent'd glides did slip away
Into a bush.
Shakespeare, As you like it.

The serpent then, not with indent'd waves,
Prent on the ground, as since; but on his rear
Circular base of rising folds, that tower'd Fold above fold, a surging maze! Milton, P. L.

Trent, who, like some earth-burnt giant, spreads
His thirty arms along the indent'd meads.
Milton, Voss. Ec.

The margins on each side do not terminate in a straight line, but are indent'd.

Woodward.

To INDEXT† v. n. [from the method of cutting counterparts of a contract together, that, laid on each other, they may fit, and any want of conformity may discover a fraud.]

1. To contract; to bargain; to make a compact.

Shall we buy treason, and indent with fears,
When they have lost and forfeited themselves?
Shakespeare.

I do indent, you shall return the money.
R. Jonson, Staple of News.

He descends to the solemnity of a pact and covenant, and has indented with us.

Decry of Piety.

2. To run in and out.

Then shalt thou see the dew-bedabbled wretch
(the hare)

Turn, and return, indenting with the way.

Shakespeare, Ven. and Adon.

INDE<sup>N</sup>ENT.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Inequality; incisure; indentation. This is little used.

Trent shall not wind with such a deep indent,
To rob us of so rich a bottom here.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

2. Stamp.

Only an indent or impression.

Philos. Transact. vol. II. p. 576.

INDENTATION. n. s. [in and dens, Latin.]

An indentation; waving in any figure.

The margins do not terminate in a straight line, but are indented; each indentation being continued in a small ridge, to the indentation that answers it on the opposite margin. Woodward.

INDE<sup>N</sup>MENT.† n. s. [from indent.] An indenture. Not in use.

The babbling neighbours on him call

For counsel in some crabbed cue of law,
Or some indentments, or some bond to draw.

By. Hall, Sat. iv. 2.

INDE<sup>N</sup>TURE.† n. s. [low Lat. indentura ; Fr. indenture.] A covenant, so named because the counterparts are indented or cut out by the other; a contract, of which there is a counterpart.

The promises and engagements of an higher indenture, those of the Christian.

Hammond, Works, li. 497.

The Books of the Old and New Testament (as they are usually distinguished) do, like a pair of indentures, justify one another, and assure us that there can be no fraud or forgery in either of them.

Goodman, Winer, Ec. Conf. P. iii.

The law is the best expositor of the gospel; they are like a pair of indentures; they answer in every part.

Lestie, Short Method with the Jews.

The critic to his grief will find

How firmly these indentures bind. Swift.

To INDE<sup>N</sup>TURE.† v. n. To run in and out; to indent. See the second sense of the verb INDE<sup>N</sup>T.

They took

Their staves in hand, and at the good man strook;
But, by indenturing, still the good man 'scap'd.

Heywood's Hier. of Angels, (1635), p. 134.

To INDE<sup>N</sup>TURE.† v. a. [from indent.] To indent; to wrinkle.

Though age may creep on, and indenture the brow,

Still then shall our constancy last.

1. Freedom; exemption from reliance or control; state over which none has power.

Dreams may give us some idea of the great excellency of a human soul, and some intimations of its independence on matter. Addison, Spect.
Let fortune do her worst, whatever she makes us lose, as long as she never makes us lose our honesty and our independence. Pope.

Give me, I cry'd, enough for me,
My bread and independence;

So bought an annual rent or two,
And liv'd just as you see I do. Pope.

2. The state of those, called independents.

See INDEPENDENT, n. s.

Independence is much more dangerous than

Brownism. Pugin's Hierarchy, p. 79.
O God, put it into the heart of our king and Parliament to take speedy order for the suppression of this wild variety of sects, and lawless independence, ere it be too late.

1. Not depending; not supported by any other; not relying on another; not controlled. It is used with on, of, or from before the object; of which on seems most proper, since we say to depend on, and consequently dependent on.

Creation must needs infer providence, and God's making the world irrefragably proves that he governs it too; or that a being of dependent nature remains nevertheless independent upon him in that respect. South.

Since all princes of independent governments are in a state of nature, the world were war without men in that state. Locke.

The town of St. Gaul is a protestant republic, independent of the abbot, and under the protection of the cantons. Addison.

2. Not relating to any thing else, as to a superior cause or power.

The consideration of our understanding, which is an accidental substance independent from matter; and the contemplation of our own bodies, which have all the stamps and characters of excellent contrivance; these alone do very easily guide us to the wise Author of all things. Bentley.

3. Belonging to the independents.

A very famous independent minister was head of a college in those times. Addison, Spect.

INDE<sup>N</sup>P<sup>N</sup>DEPENDENT. n. s. One who in religious affairs holds that every congregation is a complete church, subject to no superior authority.

We shall, in our sermons, take occasion to justify such passages in our liturgy as have been unjustly quarrelled at by presbyterians, independents, or other puritan sectaries. Sanderson.

INDE<sup>N</sup>TERMINATION. n. s. [in and determination.] Want of determination; want of fixed or stated direction.

By contingents I understand all things which may be done, and may not be done, may happen, or may not happen, by reason of the indetermination or accidental concurrence of the cause.

By. Branshall against Hobbes.

INDE<sup>N</sup>TERMINED. adj. [in and determined.]

Unsettled; unfixed.

We should not unuse ourselves with floating words of indetermined signification, which we can use in several senses to serve a turn. Locke.

devoted; little affected. Colgrave.

Mr. Wotton tells me he has disposed of all the Table, and Mr. Mortlock says the same, and you will have your money by Dr. Mills or me; but they give a good account of the other little book. There are so many of the same arguments, and so indevoted an age. But you must have a little patience. Bentley, Lett. p. 181.

Not attached; disaffected.

It grieved him to find persons of the best condition, and who loved his king and church, exceedingly indevoted to him. [Land.]

Hard, Diss.

INDE<sup>N</sup>VO<sup>T</sup>ION.† n. s. [indevotion, Fr.; in and devotion.] Want of devotion; irreligion.

That, that was licentiousness, grows ambition; and that comes to induration, and spiritual coldness.

Dowse, Devot. (1624), p. 611.

Look on your indevotion, that heartless, real-less behaviour in the house of God.

Hammond, Works, li. 514.

Their profaneness and irreverence do increase God's displeasure. Berron, Works, l. 90.
Let us make the church the scene of our penitence, as of our faults; deprecate our former irreverence, and, by an exemplary reverence, redress the scandal of profaneness.

Decay of Chr. Piety.

INDEVOU'T.† adj. [indevot, Fr.; in and devout.] Not devout; not religious; irreligious.

They are only our prayers, that must stay us from being carried away with the violent assaults of discontentment; under which a praying soul can no more intricacy, than an indevout soul can enjoy safety. Bp. Hall, Of Contemnation, § 25.

A wretchedness, careless, indevout spirit. Bp. Taylor, Sermon, (1655.)

He prays much, yet curses more; whilst he is meek, not indevout. Decay of Chr. Piety.

INDEVOU'TLY. * adv. (from indevout.) Without devotion.

INDEX.† n. s. [Lat. Our word has sometimes the apparently Latin plural indices. But we have also the singular indice, though hitherto unnoticed. See therefore INDEX.]

1. The discoverer; the pointer out.

Tastes are the indices of the different qualities of plants, as well as of all sorts of aliment. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

That which was once the index to point out all virtues, does now mark out that part of the world where least of them resides. Decay of Piety.

2. The hand that points to any thing, as to the hour or way.

They have no more inward self-consciousness of what they do or suffer, than the index of a watch, of the hour it points to. Bentley.

3. The table of contents to a book. Formerly prefixed to the book, as the first citation from Shakespeare shews; "in indices to their subsequent volumes." Hence it was used generally for preface, any thing preparatory to.

In such indices, although small prices to their subsequent volumes there is seen The baby figure of the giant mass Of things to come, at large. Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

At me, what act, That roars so loud, and thunders in the index. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

An index and obscure prologue to the history of lust and foul thoughts. Shakespeare, Othello.

If a book has no index, or good table of contents, 'tis very useful to make one as you are reading it; and in your index to take notice only of parts new to you. Watts.

INDEXE'TRITY. * n. s. [in and dexterity.] Want of dexterity; want of readiness; want of handiness; clumsiness; awkwardness.

The indextrity of our consumption-cures demonstrates their dimness in beclouding its causes. Harvey on Consumption.

Sadler, Rights of the Kingdom, (1645,) p. 182.

2. A writer.

He that willfully strives to fasten some sense of his own upon it, other than the very nature of the place will bear, must needs take upon him the person of God, and become a new *indict*er of scripture: — If he then that shaves the prince's coin deserves to die, what is his desert, that, instead of the tried silver of God's word, stamps the name and character of God upon Nehushtan, upon base brass stuff of his own. Hales, Rem. p. 14.

INDICTION.† n. s. [indiction, Fr.; indicio, Lat.]

1. Declaration; proclamation.

After a legation ad res repetendas, and a refusal, and a denunciation, and indiction of a war, the war is left at large. Incon.

There is a solemn mourning, and there is a private and domestic; the solemn is by public indiction of authority. My. Hall, Rem. p. 166.

2. [In chronology.] The indiction, instituted by Constantine the Great, is properly a cycle of tributes, orderly disposed, for fifteen years, and by it accounts of that kind were kept. Afterwards, in memory of the great victory obtained by Constantine over Mezentius, 8 Cal. Oct. 312, by which an entire freedom was given to Christianity, the council of Nice, for the honour of Constantine, ordained that the accounts of years should be no longer kept by the Olympiads, which till that time had been done; but that, instead thereof, the indiction should be made use of, by which to reckon and date their years, which hath its epocha A. D. 313, Jan. 1.

The emperor Justinian made a law, that no writing should pass without the date of the indiction. Gregory, Pothum. p. 140.

INDICTIVE.* adj. [indictivus, Lat.] Proclaimed; declared.

In all the funerals of note, especially in the public or indictive, the corpse was first brought with a vast train of followers, into the forum. Kresser, Rem. Antiq. v. 5.

That discourteous dame with scornful pride,
And foul entreasy him indignify. Spenser, F. Q. vi. l. 30.

2. To treat unbecomingly.

I therefore in closure of a thankful mind,
I down it best to hold generally.
Their bounteous deeds and noble favour's shroud,
Than by discourse them to indignify. Spenser, Colin Clout.

INDIGNITY. n. s. [indignitas, from indignus, Lat.; indignité, Fr.] Contumely; contemptuous injury; violation of right, accompanied with insult.

Bishops and prelates could not but have bleeding hearts to behold a person of so great place and worth constrained to endure so foul indignities. Hooker.

No emotion of passion transported me, by the indignity of his carriage, to any thing unbecoming myself. King Charles.

Mass he made, and for him built
Magnificent this world, and earth his seat,
His lord pronounce'd; and, O indignity!
Subjected to his service angel-wings,
And flaming ministers, to watch and tend
Their earthly charge. Milton, P. L.

They do not see how that mighty passion for the church can well consist with those indignities and that contempt men bestow on the clergy. Swift.

To more exalted glories born
Thy mean indignities I scorn. Petition.

INDIGO. n. s. [indicum, Lat.] A plant, by the Americans called anil.

In the middle of the flower is the style, which afterwards becomes a jointed pod, containing one cylindrical seed in one partition, from which indigo is made, which is used in dying for a blue colour. Müller.

INDILATORY. † adj. [in and dilatory.] Not slow; not delaying.

Since you have framed — new orders, — you would be pleased in like manner to give them a new form of indilatory execution. Corwallis to Sp. King, Suppl. to Cabala, (1654), p. 105.

INDULGENCE. † n. s. [in and dilige.]

Stiffness; carelessness.

Is it not as great an indigility, that so excellent conceit and capacity, by the indigence of an idle tongue, should be disgraced? B. Jonson, Discoveries.

He that is bound to use all diligence to subdue his corruptions, at least to repress them; if he do not so, this indigence of his hath some of his consent. Hammond, Works, i. 191.

He tarreteth them not only with indigence and ignorance, but with folly also. Sp. Calvin, Cons. of Scripture, p. 194.

INDULIGENT. † adj. [induligent, Fr. Cotgrave.] Not diligent; careless.

Neither are they [wisdom and knowledge] so casual — as to fall upon the indiligent and underserving. Falsham, Sermon on Eccl. ii. 11.

INDULIGENTLY. † adv. [from indiligent.]

Without diligence.

I had spent some years, not altogether indiligently, under the ferule of such masters as the place afforded. Sp. Hall, Spectator of his Life.

INDIVINISHABLE. † adj. [in and diminishable.] Not to be diminished.

Have they been dead of late to check the common law, to slight and treat the undignified majesty of our highest court, the lawgiving and sacred parliament? Milton, Of Ref. in Eng. B. ii.

— By, what an indirect and previus course — Is this of hers? Shakespeare, Rich. III.

4. Not fair; not honest.
- Think you, that any means under the sun
Can as secure us indirect a course?

David, Civil Wars.

Upon sundry indirect considerations, let pass; and although themselves do not err, yet may they deceive others. Hobbes.

O pity and shame! that they who to live well
Enter do so fairly, should turn aside, and Pursue indirect. Milton, P. L.

Indirect dealing will be discovered one time or other, and then he loses his reputation.

Tillotson.

INDIRECTION.† n. s. [in and direction.]

1. Oblique means; tendency not in a straight line.
- And dus do we, of wisdom and of reach,
With wisdoms, and with wisest of bias,
By indirections find directions out. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

2. Dishonest practice.

I had rather coin my heart than wing
From the hard hands of peasants their vile trash,
By any indirection. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.
Most of the indirection and artifice, which is used among men, does not proceed so much from a degeneracy in nature, as an alteration of appearing men of consequence by such practices. Taylor, N. 191.

INDIRECTLY. adv. [from indirect.]

1. Not in a right line; obliquely.
2. Not in express terms.

Sell she suppresses the name, which continues his doubts and hopes; and at last she indirectly mentions it. Broom.

3. Unfairly; not rightly.

He bids you then resign
Your crown and kingdom indirectly held:
From him the true challenger. Shakespeare, Hen. F.
He that takes any thing from his neighbour, which was justly forfeited, to satisfy his own revenge or avarice, is tied to reparation, but not to restitution: because I took the forfeiture indirectly, I am answerable in God for my uncharitable, unjust, or uncharitable circumstances. Sp. Taylor.

INDIRECTNESS.† n. s. [in and directness.]

1. Obliquity.
  2. Unfairness; dishonesty; fraudulent art.
- The auditors of this doctrine of purgatory have, noedinks, used a worse kind of indirectness in their exposure of it.

W. Mountague, Diss. Eux. P. II. (1654.) p. 142.

INDISCERNIBLE.† adj. [in and discernible.] Not perceptible; not discoverable.

Speculation, which, by my dark soul,
Depriv'd of reason, is as indiscernible
As colours to my body, wanting sight. Denham, Sophy.

A motion that was almost instantaneous, and so indiscernible. South, Ser. vii. 17.

These small and almost indiscernible beginnings and seeds of ill luxury, have ever since gone on in a very visible increase and progress.

Burnet, Hist. of his own Time. An 1680.

Although the ministry of angels be now for the most part invisible, yet to the observant it is not altogether indiscernible. Sp. Bull. Works, ii. 494.

INDISCERNIBLENESS.† n. s. [from indiscernible.] Incapability of discernment. I should have shew'd you also the indiscernibleness, to the eye of man, of the different states, till God by his promulgate sentence have made the separation. Hammond, Works, iv. 494.

INDISCERNIBLY.† adv. [from indiscernible.] In a manner not to be perceived.

INDISCERNIBILITY.† n. s. [from indiscernible.] Incapability of dissolution or separation.

To such a being (God) belongs spirituality, which implies immortality; and even but a mad-man can imagine the Divine essence discernible into parts? Annot on Glanville, &c. (1682.) p. 181.

INDISCERNIBLE.† adj. [in and discernible.] Incapable of being broken or destroyed by dissolution of parts.

A soul — is a spirit, and therefore of an indivisible, that is of an indiscernible essence.

More, Immortality of the Soul, p. 113.

The nature of the soul, which is immortal and indiscernible. Glanville, Pre-æxi, p. 55.

INDISCERNIBLENESS.† n. s. [from indiscernible.] The quality or state of being indiscernible.

We must understand the term of an indiscernibleness not arising from thinner and thinner parts of matter, as he imagines air to be more hardly discernible than earth or water.

Annot on Glanville, &c. pp. 221, 222.

INDISCERNPTIBLE.† adj. [in and discernptible.] Not to be separated; incapable of being broken or destroyed by dissolution of parts.

We have no way of determining, by experience, what is the certain bulk of the living being each man calls himself; and yet, till it be determined that it is larger in bulk than the solid elementary particles of matter, there is no ground to think any natural power can dissolve, there is no sort of reason to think death to be the dissolution of it, of the living being, even though it should not be absolutely indiscernible. Sp. Haller, Analogy of Religion, p. I. ch. i.

INDISCERNPTIBILITY.† n. s. [from indiscernptible.] Incapability of dissolution.

INDISCIPLINABLE.† adj. [in and disciplinable.] Incapable of improvement by discipline.

A sensible indisposableness of heart.

Bp. Hall, Soling. 73.

The quantity we take in, more than agree with nature, whose burden appears by too much fulness, drowsiness, or indisposableness of head or stomach.

Hitcock, Memoir of the Emp. p. 500.

It is not any innate harshness in purity that renders the first essays of it unpleasant; that is owing only to the indisposableness of our own hearts.

Decay of Chr. Fety.

INDISPOSITION. n. s. [indisposition, Fr. from indispense.]

1. Disorder of health; tendency to sickness; slight disease.

The king did complain of a continual infirmity of body, yet rather as an indisposition in health than any set sickness.

Hopwood.

I have known a great loss lose great occasions, by an indisposition of the Admiral, while he was neither well enough to exercise, nor ill enough to have the command.

Temple.

Wisdom is still looking forward, from the first indispositions, into the progress of the disease.

L'Estrange.

For more comfort it were for us to be joined with you in bands of indisposableness love and amity, to live as if our persons being many, our souls were but one.

Hooker.

2. Disinclination; dislike: with to or towards.

The indisposition of the church of Rome to reform herself, would be no stay unto us from performing our duty to God.

Hooker.

The mind, by every degree of affected unbelief, contracts more and more of a general indisposition towards believing.

Atterbury.

INDISPUTABLE. adj. [in and disputable.] Uncontrovertible; incontestable; evident; certain.

There is no maxim in politics more indisputable, than that a nation should have many honours to reserve for those who do national services.

To give this contract its most essential quality, namely, indissolubility.

Warburton, Sermon. 17.

INDISSOLUBLY. adj. [indissoluble, Fr. indissolubilis, Lat. in and dissolvable.]

1. Resisting all separation of its parts; firm; stable.

When common gold and lead are mingled, the lead may be severed, almost unaltered; yet if, instead of the gold, a tincture of the red steel be mingled with the saturn, their union will be so indissoluble, that there is no possible way of separating the diffused elixir from the fixed lead.

Boyle.

2. Binding for ever; subsisting for ever; not to be loosed.

For more comfort it were for us to be joined with you in bands of indissoluble love and amity, to live as if our persons being many, our souls were but one.

Hooker.

There is the supreme and indissoluble consanguinity between us, of which the heathen poet saith we are all his generation.

Bocon, Holy War.

They might justly wonder, that men to testify, as obliged to be kind to all, should behave themselves so contrary to such heavenly instructions, such indissoluble obligations.

South.

INDISSOLUBLENESS. n. s. [from indissoluble.] Indissolubility; resistance to separation of parts.

Adam, though consisting of a composition intrinsically dissolvable, might have held, by the Divine Will, a state of immortality and indissolubleness of his composition.

Hale.

INDISSOLUBLY. adv. [from indissoluble.] 1. In a manner resisting all separation.

On they move
Indissolubly firm; nor obvious hill,
Nor strain'ning vale, nor wood, nor stream divide
Their perfect rank, nor ever
Milton, P. L.

The remaining adam, by a further degree of fire, may be indissolubly united into glass. Boyle.

They willingly unite
Indissolubly firm; from Dubris south
To northern Oreades. Philips.

2. For ever obligatorily.

INDISTANCY. † n. s. [in and distance.] State of inseparation.

The soul thus existing after death, and separated from the body, though of a nature spiritual, is really and truly in some place; by it self by way of circumscription, as proper bodies are, yet by way of determination and indistancy; so that it is true to say, this is really and truly present here, and not elsewhere.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 5.

INDISTINCT. adj. [indistinct, Fr. in and distinctus, Latin.]

1. Not plainly marked; confused.

That which is now a horse, even with a thought, The rack dissolves, and makes it indistinct.
As water is in water. Shakespeare.

She warbled in her throat,
And turn'd her voice to many a merry note;
But indistinct, and neither sweet nor clear.

Dryden.

When we speak of the infinite divisibility of matter, we keep a very clear and distinct idea of division and divisibility; but when we come to parts too small for our senses, our ideas of these little bodies become obscure and indistinct. Watts.

2. Not exactly discerning.

We throw out our eyes for brave Othello,
Ev'n ill we make the main and ill's aerial blue
An indistinct regard. Shakespeare.

Confusion; uncertainty; obscurity.

There is uncerainty or indistinctness in the style of these places, concerning the origin and form of the earth.

Old age makes the cornea and coat of the crystalline humour grow flatter; so that the light, for want of a sufficient refraction, will not converge to the bottom of the eye, but beyond it, and by consequence paint in the bottom of the eye a confused picture; and according to the indistinctness of this picture, the object will appear confused. Newton.

INDISTINGUISHABLE. adj. [in and distinguishable.] Not plainly marked; indeterminate.

Do I curse thee? —
— Why no, you virtuous butt; you whoreson
indistinguishable cur. Shakespeare, Tr. and Com.

With an individual kin. Milton, Ode on Time.

To give thee being, I sent
Out of my side to thee, nearest my heart,
Substantial life, to have thee by my side
Henceforth an individual solace dur. Milton, P. L.

Under his great vicegerent reign abides
United, as one individual soul,
For ever happy. Milton, P. L.

INDIVIDUAL. n.s. A single thing; a single person.

Neither is it enough to consult, secedum genera, what the kind and character of the person should be; for the most judgment is shown in the choice of individuals. Bacon.

They present us with images more perfect than the life in any individual. Dryden, Dufrenoy.

Know, all the good that individuals find,
Lie in three words: health, peace, and competence. Pope.

We see each circumstance of art and individual of nature summoned together by the extent and fecundity of his imagination. Pope, Pref. to the Iliad.

INDIVIDUALITY. n.s. [from individual.]
Separate or distinct existence.

He said tell his instructor, that all men were not singular; that individuality could hardly be predicated of any man; for it is commonly said that a man is not the same he was, and that mad men are beside themselves. Arbutnot.

INDIVIDUALLY. adv. [from individual.]
1. With separate or distinct existence; numerically.

How should that submit solitarily by itself, which hath no substance, but individually the very same whereby others submit with it. Hobbes.

2. Not separably; incommunicably.

I dare not pronounce him omniscious, that being an attribute individually proper to the godhead, and incommunicable to any created substance. Hakewill on Providence.

TO INDIVIDUATE. v.s. [from individus, Lat.] To distinguish from others of the same species; to make single.

Life is individuated into infinite numbers that have their distinct scene and pleasure.

No man is capable of translating poetry, who, besides a genius to that art, is not a master both of his author's language and of his own; nor must we understand the language only of the poet, but his particular turn of thought and expression, which are the characters that distinguish and indicate him from all other writers. Dryden.

INDIVIDUOUS. adj. [from the verb.]
Undivided.

O Thou, the third in that eternal trine,
In individuate unity divine!

The Student, ii. 811. (1751.)

INDIVIDUATION. † n.s. [from individus.]

How openly did the oracle betray his indivinity unto Crenus, who being ruined by his ambiguo-lity, and expostulating with him, received no higher answer than the excuse of his impotency! Brown, Vulg. Erc.

INDIVISIBLE. n.s. [from indivisible.]
State in which no more division can be made.

A pestle and mortar will as soon bring any particle of matter to indivisibility as the acutest thought of a mathematician. Locke.

INDIVISIBLE. adj. [indivisible, Fr. in and divisible.] That cannot be broken into parts; so small as that it cannot be smaller; having reached the last degree of divisibility.

By atom, no body will imagine we intend to express a perfect indivisible, but only the least sort of natural bodies. Digby.

Here is but one indivisible point of time observed, but one action performed; yet the eye cannot comprehend at once the whole object.

Dryden, Dufrenoy.

INDIVISIBLE. n.s. That which is incapable of division.

If quantity consists of indivisibles or atoms, it will follow that a scetchum is all one with an isoceries, &c.

More, Song of the Soud, Notes, p. 376.

INDIVISIBLE. adj. [from indivisible.] So as it cannot be divided.

Their act of allowance to the Greek church implies a fair independency of them two, which some of their clamorous clients appear to have indivisibly coupled.

Bp. Hall, Hom. of the Mar. Clergy, p. 11.

INDIVISIBLE. adj. [in and divisible.] Unteachable; insusceptible of instruction.

Contracted and clung together with sensual delights, now he becomes utterly indivisible.

They are as ignorant and indivisible as any fool.
Dr. Griffith, Fear of God and the King, p. 79.

INDIVISIBLE. † adj. [indivisible, Fr. indivisible, Lat. Dr. Johnson gives our word without the e final, indoci; though he writes docile with it. The solitary instance of the present word, which he brings from Bentley's Sermons, is clearly indoci; but indoci is the elder and preferable way of writing it.]

Un teachable; incapable of being instructed.

Hugs and more indoci boasts shall be taught to labour.

Sir H. Petty, Adv. to Harbitt, (1648), p. 23.

These certainly are the fools in the text, indoci, intractable fools, whose stolidity can baffle all arguments, and be proof against demonstration itself. Heathley, Sermon, i.

INDIVISIBILITY. n.s. [indivisible, Fr. in and docility.] Un teachableness; refusal of instruction.

To have left us in their miserable darkness and indivisibility. Bp. Hall, St. Paul's Combat.

The stiffness and indivisibility of the Parties.
Mr. Montaigne, Des Ess. B. I. Pref. to the Court.

TO INDOTRINATE. v.s. [endotrinare, old French.] To instruct; to tincture with any science, or opinion.

Under a master that discoursed excellently, and took much delight in indotrating his young unexperienced favourite, Buckingham had obtained a quick conception of speaking very gracefully and pertinently.

They that never precept beyond the common belief, in which their easy understandings were at first indotrated, are strongly assured of the truth of their receptions. Glennville.

INDOTRINATION. n.s. [from indotrinare.]
Instruction; information.

Although postulates are very accommodable unto junior indotrinations, yet are these authorities not to be embraced beyond the minority of our intellectuals. Brown.

INDOLENCE. n.s. [in and doles, Latin;
indolency.] Indolence, French.]

1. Freedom from pain.

As there must be indolence where there is happiness, so there must not be indolency.

Barnet, Theory

I have ease, if it may not rather be called intemperance. Hought.

2. Laziness; inattention; listlessness.

Let Epicurus give indolence as an attribute to his gods, and place it in the happiness of the bliss: the divinity which we worship has given us not only a precept against it, but his own example to the contrary. Dryden.

The Spanish nation, roused from their indolence and ignorance, seem now to improve trade. Edinburgh.

INDOLENT. adj. [French.]

1. Free from pain. So the chirurgous speak of an indolent tumour.

tamable. Cockran.

INDOMITABLE. adj. [indomptable, Fr. indomitus, Lat.] Untamable.

It is so fierce and indomitable.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 383.

INDOMITE. adj. [indomitus, Lat.] Untamed; wild; savage.

No tiger so fierce, no fowl so revelling, no whale so monstrous, no not any creature, so indomite, but that it was subject to man's dominion, while man was subject to his Lord and Maker. Baldet, Treat. of Paradise, (1617), p. 182.

TO INDORSE. v. See TO ENDORSE, and its derivatives.

TO INDOW. v. a. [indotare, Lat.] To portion; to enrich with gifts, whether of fortune or nature. See ENDOW.

INDRAUGHT. n. s. [in and draught.]

1. An opening in the land into which the sea flows.

Ebbes and floods there could be none, when there was no indrawings, bays, or gulphs, to receive a flood. Raleigh.

2. Inlet; passage inwards.

Navigable rivers are indrawings to attain wealth. Bacon.

TO INDRENCHE. v. a. (from drench. Sax. in-spencan.) To soak; to drown.

My hopes lie indrenched; in many fathoms deep They lie indrenched. *Shakespeare, Tril. and Cren. If in this flesh, where thou indrenched dost lie, Poor souls, thou canst rear up thy limed wings, Carry my thoughts up to the sacred sky.*

John's Musical Dream, (1609.)

INDUBIOUS. adj. [in and dubious.] Not doubtful; not suspecting; certain.

Hence appears the vulgar way of repeating an indubious confidence in those unspendible spirits. Harvey.

INDUBITABLE. adj. [indubitabilis, Lat. indubitabile, Fr. in and dubitable.] Undoubted; unquestionable; evident; certain in appearance; clear; plain.

The invocation of them is notwithstanding a very presumptuous invasion of the indubitable rights of God. Mow against Idolatry, ch. 2.

When general observations are drawn from so many particulars as to become certain and indubitable, these are jewels of knowledge.

Watte on the Mind.

INDUBITABLY. n. s. [from indubitable.] The state of being indubitable.

INDUBITABLY. adv. [from indubitable.] Undoubtedly; unquestionably.

If we transport these proportions from audible to visible objects, there will indubitably result from either a graceful and harmonious contentment. Wotton, Architecture.

The patriarchs were indubitably invested with both these authorities. Spreng.
I appeal to all sober judges, whether our souls may be only a mere echo from clashing atoms; or rather indubitably must proceed from a spiritual substance. Hentley.

INDUBITATE. adj. [indubitatus, Lat.] Unquestioned; certain; apparent; evident.

If he stood upon his own title of the house of Lancaster, he knew it was condemned by parliament, and tended directly to the disinclination of the line of York, held then the indubitable heirs of the crown. Bacon, Hen. VII.

I have been tempted to wonder how, among the intonations of state and court, Edgar Atheling could subsist, being then the apparent and indubitable heir of the Saxon line. Wotton.

TO INDUCE. v. a. [induire, Fr. inducere, Lat.].

1. To influence to any thing; to persuade: of persons.

The self same argument in this kind, which doth bid the vulgar sort to fight, may contain the wiser to yield.

This lady, albeit she was furnished with many excellent endowments, both of nature and education, yet would she never be induced to entertain marriage with any. Hayward.

Deceit with thee still longer to converse. Milton, P. L.

Let not the covetous design of growing rich induce you to ruin your reputation, but rather satisfy yourself with a moderate fortune; and let your thoughts be wholly taken up with acquiring to yourself a glorious name. Dryden.

2. To produce by persuasion or influence: of things.

Let the vanity of the times be restrained, which the neighbourhood of other nations have induced, and we strive space to exceed our Father.

As belief is absolutely necessary to all mankind, the evidence for inducing it must be of that nature as to accommodate itself to all species of men. Forbes.

3. To offer by way of induction, or consequential reasoning.

They play much upon the simile, or illustrative argumentation, to induce their malignities upon the people, and take up popular conceits. Brown, Vulg. Err.

4. To inculcate; to enforce.

This induces a general change of opinion, concerning the person or party like to be obeyed by the greatest or strongest part of the people. Temple.

5. To cause extrinsically; to produce; to effect.

Some things induce a contraction in the nerves, placed in the mouth of the stomach, which is a great cause of appetite. Bacon.
Acidity, as it is not the natural state of the animal fluids, but induced by aliment, is to be cured by aliment with the contrary qualities. Arbutnot on Aliments.

6. To introduce; to bring into view.

To exprobiate their stupidity, he induced the providence of storks; now, if the bird had been unknown, the illustration had been obscure, and the exprobation not so proper. Brown.

The poet may be seen inducing his personages in the first Iliad, where he discovers their humours, interests, and designs. Pope.

7. To bring on; to superinduce; to effect gradually.

Schism is marked out by the apostle as a kind of petrifying error, which induces that induration to which the feverish expectations of wrath is consequent. Johnson of Chr. Pulp.

INDUCEMENT. n. s. [from induce.] Motive to any thing; that which allures or persuades to any thing.

The former inducements do now much more prevail, when the very thing hath ministered farther reason. Hooker.

Many inducements, besides Scripture, may lead me to that, which I suppose to be against, they are of no value, yet otherwise are strongly effectual to persuade. Hooker.

That mov'd me to't, Then mark th' inducement. Shaks. Hen. VIII.

Higher degree of life; inducement strong For us. Milton, P. L.

My inducement hither, Was not at present here to find my son. Milton, S. A.

Instances occur of oppression, to which there appears no inducement from the circumstances of the actors. Rogers.

INDUCER. n. s. [from induce.] A persuader; one that influences.

How can he be a more persuader or inducer of the people to widowhood, which hath himself been often married?

Martin, Merr. of Friends, (1564), C. iii. b.
As if he were the great impeller and inducer of men to this. South, Ser. viii. 85.

INDUCIBLE. adj. [from induce.]

1. That may be offered by way of induction.

Many things in philosophy [are] confirmable by sense, yet not inducible by reason. Brown, Rel. Medic.

2. That may be caused.

The satisfaction of prosperity, issuing from sense, is subject to all the changes, from the restless commotions of outward causes affecting and altering the sense. Barnes, Works, lib. 99.

TO INDUCT. v. a. [inductus, Lat.].

1. To introduce; to bring in.

The ceremonies in the gathering were first inducted by the Vestments of the Trinity.

2. To put into actual possession of a benefice.

If a person thus instituted, though not inducted, takes a second benefice, it shall make the first void. Ayliffe, Purger.

INDUCTION. n. s. [induction, Fr. inductio, Lat.].

1. Introduction; entrance; anciently preface, and also something introductory to a play.

This is well known to be true, of them, that have any leisure to read Holy Scripture; who, remembering themselves by this my little induction, will leave to neglect history. Sir T. Eliza, Gov. fol. 905. b.

These promises are fair, the parties assure. And our induction full of prosperous hope. Shaks.
Inductions are out of date, and a prologue in verse is as stale as a black velvet cloak. Benson and Fl. Woman-Hater, Prolog.

This is but an induction; I will draw The curtains of the tragical induction. Messenger, Guardian.

An induction to those succeeding evils, which pursued that inconsiderate marriage. Sir G. Buck, Hist. Rich. III. p. 118.

2. Induction is when, from several particular propositions, we infer one general: as, the doctrine of the Socinians cannot be proved from the gospels, it cannot be proved from the acts of the apostles, it cannot be proved from the epistles, nor the book of Revelation: therefore it cannot be proved from the New Testament.

Watts, Logic.

The inquisition by induction is wonderful hard; for the things reported are full of fables, and new experiments can hardly be made but with extreme caution.

Bacon.

Mathematical things are only capable of clear demonstration: conclusions in natural philosophy are proved by induction of experiments, things moral by moral arguments, and matters of fact by credible testimony.

Locke.

Although the arguing from experiments and observations by induction be no demonstration of general conclusions, yet it is the best way of arguing which the nature of things admits of, and may be looked upon as so much the stronger by how much the induction is more general; and if no exception occur from phenomena, the conclusion may be general.

Newton, Optics.

He brought in a new way of arguing from induction, and that grounded upon observation and experiments.

3. The act of giving possession to the person, who has received institution of his church; by virtue of a mandate from the archdeacon, empowering another clergyman to induct him into the real, actual, and corporal possession of his rectory or vicarage: first laying his hand on the key of the church, in the church door; and the incumbent afterwards tolling one of the bells. See INDUCTOR. Institution is the investiture of the spiritual part of the benefice; induction, of the temporal.

In dignities possession is given by instalment; in rectories and vicarages, by induction.

Blackstone.

INDUCTIVE. adj. [from induct.]

1. Leading; persuasive: with to.

A brutish vice.

Inductive mainly to the sin of Eve. Milton, P. L.

2. Capable to infer or produce.

Absentments may take away so inflexible conclusion in these evidences of fact, yet they may be probable and inductive of credibility, though not of science.

Hale, Orig. of Manikind.

3. Proceeding not by demonstration, but induction.

INDUCTIVELY. adv. [from inductive.] By induction; by inference.

This I shall make appear inductively, by recounting the several ends and intents, to which, with any colour of reason, it may be designed.

South, Sermon, vi. 127.

INDUCTOR. n. s. [from induct.] The person who inducts another into a benefice.

He puts the incumbent into possession of the church, who, when he has tolled a bell, comes forth; and the inductor indorses a certificate of such his induction on the warrant of the archdeacon, attested by those who were designees.

Directions, &c. Clergyman's Assistant (3d edit.) p. 312. n.

TO INDUCE. v. a. [induco, Lat.]

1. To invest; to clothe.

Diana's shape and habit then induced.

He said; My mistress, &c. Sandys, Ovid, B. 2.

One first matter all

Induc'd with various forms. Milton, P. L.

2. It seems sometimes to be, even by good writers, confounded with endow or indow, to furnish or enrich with any quality or excellence. Dr. Johnson.—This, however, is more fully explained under the second sense of TO ENDUE.

The angel, by whom God induced the waters of Bethesda with supernatural virtue, was not seen; yet the angel's presence was known by the waters.

Huaker.

His powers, with dreadful strength induc'd.

Chapman.

INDUCEMENT. n. s. [from induc.] Endowment. Not now in use.

Solomon's experience should disclose all men in relying upon the virtue of their spirit, when we see that his no singular inducement with the Holy Spirit was not security against the danger of this presumption.

W. Montague, Den. Ess. P. I. (1648), p. 170.

TO INDULGE. v. a. [indulgeo, Lat.]

1. To encourage by compliance.

The lazy glutton safe at home will keep, Indulge his sloth, and fatten with his sleep. Dryden.

2. To fondle; to favour; to sleep with concession; to foster. If the matter of indulgence be a single thing, it has with before it; if it be a habit, it has in; as, he indulged himself with a draught of wine; and, he indulged himself in shameful drunkenness. It has sometimes, though rarely, to.

By the excess of pleasures, which he indulged to himself, he was indeed without the true delight and relief of any.

A mother was wont to indulge her daughters with dogs, squirrels, or birds; but then they must keep them well.

Lodge.

To live like those that have their hope in another life, is that we indulge ourselves in the gratifications of this life very sparingly.

Antiquary.

3. To grant not of right, but favour.

Ancient privileges, indulged by former kings to their people, must not, without high reason, be revoked by their successors.

By Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

The virgin enter bright, indulge'd the day
To the brown cave, and break'd the dewy way.

Dryden.

But since among mankind so few there are,
Who will conform to philosophic fare,
This much I will indulge thee for thy ease.

And mingle something of our times to please.

Dryden, Jun.

My friend, indulge one labour more,
And seek Atreides.

Pope, Odyssey.

Yet, yet a moment, one dim may of light
Indulge, dread chaos and eternal night.

Pope.

TO INDULGE. v. n. [A Latinism not in use.] To be favourable; to give indulgence; with to.

He must, by indulging to one sort of reprovable discourse himself, defeat his endeavours against the rest.

Gov. of the Tongue.

INDULGENCE. n. s. [indulgentia, Fr. from INDULGENT.] } indulge.

1. Fondness; fond of kindness.

Restraint she will not brook;

And left to herself, if evil thence ensue,
She first his weak indulgence will disavow.

Milton, P. L.

The glories of our isle,
Which yet like golden ore, unripe in beds,
Expect the warm indulgence of heaven. Dryden.

2. Forbearance; tenderness: opposite to rigour.

Your majesty is well pleased, by the excellency of your nature, and by the indulgence of your judgement, to accept honest zeal for discretion.

Watson, Dispatch dated 1630, Rem. p. 528.

They err, that through indulgence to others, or fondness to any sin in themselves, substitute for repentance any thing less.

Hammond on Fundamentals.

In knows images of life, I guess
The labour greater, as the indulgence less. Pope.

3. Favour granted; liberality.

If all these gracious indulgences are without any effect on us we must perish in our own follies.

Agnes.

4. Compliance with; gratification of; as, self-indulgence; indulgence in any vice.

The looseness and indulgences of this age—bear a proportion with the religion of the Romans.

Sir R. Tempest, Entert. of Sidi. (1649), p. 5.

5. Grant of the church of Rome, not denied by themselves. Dr. Johnson.—

This is a definition of it according to one of that church: "The true meaning and signification of indulgence, and their efficacy, consists in this, viz. that it is a release of the temporal penalty remaining due to sin, after the guilt thereof, and the eternal punishment entailed on it, had been remitted in the sacrament of penance, or through a sincere and unfeigned contrition."

Important Inquiry, &c. 2d edit. 1758, p. 227.—The church of Rome makes a distinction also of partial and plenary indulgence. See the example from bishop Jeremy Taylor.

The exposition of the present sense of indulgences, in the unanswerable remarks of one of the brightest ornaments of the Protestant church, must also here follow.

"The doctrine of indulgences, as it was before the council of Trent, and hath been since taught in the church of Rome, is big with gross errors. It depends on the fiction of purgatory; it supposeth a superfluity of the satisfactions of the saints; which, being jumbled together (horreo referens) with the merits and satisfaction of our Saviour, make up one treasury of the church; that the bishop of Rome keeps the key of it, as having the sole power of granting indulgences, either by himself immediately, or by others commissioned from him. Lastly, it very absurdly extends the effect of the power of the keys, left by Christ in his church, to men in the other world."

Bishop Hull, Corrupt. of the Ch. of Rome, in Ans. to the Bishop of Meux's Queries.

Thou, that giv'st whorcs indulgences to sin,
I'll surpass thee.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Indulgences dispense, pardon, bulls,
The sport of winds. Milton, P. L.

Your best way is to get a plenary indulgence; and that may be had on reasonable terms; but take heed you do not think yourself secure; for a plenary indulgence does not do all that it may be you require; for there is an indulgence more full, and another, most full; and it is not agreed upon among the doctors, whether a plenary indulgence is to be extended beyond the taking off those penances, which were actually enjoined by the confessor, or how far they go further.

By Taylor, Dedicatory from Purgatory, &c. 4.

In purgatory, indulgences, and supererogation, the ascetics seem to be unanimous in nothing but profit.

Decay of Chr. Party.

Leo X. is deservedly infamous for his base prostitution of indulgences. Asterbury.

INDULGENT, adj. [indulgent, Fr. indulgent, Lat.]

1. Kind; gentle; liberal.
God has done all for us that the most indulgent Creator could do for the work of his hands. Rogers.

2. Mild; favourable.
Hereafter such in thy behalf shall be
Th' indulgent censure of posterity. Waller.

3. Gratifying; favouring; giving way to; with off.
The feeble old, indulgent of their ease. Dryden, Æn.

INDULGENTIAL, adj. [from indulgent.]
Relating to the indulgences of the Romish church.

You are dressed with rare indulgent privileges.

INDULGENTLY, adv. [from indulgent.]
Without severity; without censure; without self-reproach; with indulgence.

He that not only commits some act of sin, but lives indulgently in it, is never to be counted a regenerate man. Hemond.

Ills?—There are none; All-gracious, none from Thee!—
Where threats are mercies, whose injunctions guides,
Assisting, not restraining, reason's choice;
Whose sanctions, unavoidable results
From nature's course, indulgently reveal'd.

Young, Night Th. 9.

INDULGENT, n. s. [from indulge.] One who indulges.

If, as Saint Peter saith, the severest watchers of their nature have task hard enough, what shall be hoped of the indulgers of it?

W. Montague, Dec. Est. P. i. (1648), p. 160.

INDULT, n. s. [Ital. and Fr.] Privilege. INDULTO, o exemption.

It was a tax laid upon the English a great many years ago, with their own consent, for the privilege of going to Aleppo.— This is a most scandalous indult. Drummond, Trav. (dat. 1746), p. 180.

TO INDURATE, v. n. [induro, Lat.] To grow hard; to harden.

Stones within the earth at first are but rude earth or clay; and so minerals come at first of juices concrete, which afterwards indurate. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

That plants and ligneous bodies may indurate under water, without approachment of air, we have experiments in coral-ines. Brown, Vulg. Err.

TO INDURATE, v. a.

1. To make hard.
Glass may be so indurated by fire, that it may scorn the force of the hammer.

Cayton on D. Quin. (1654).
A contracted indurated bladder is a circumstance sometimes attending on the stone, and indeed an extraordinary dangerous one. Sharp, Surgery.

2. To harden the mind; to sear the conscience.

Love's and friendship's finely pointed dart
Fall blasted from each indurated heart. Goldsmith, Traveller.

INDURATE, adj. [from the verb.]

1. Impenitent; hard of heart; obdurate.
After he hath passed one year and a half in repentance,—then, lest he make be indurate, let him be admitted to the receiving of the body and blood of Christ. Martin, Mass. of Prentis. (1554).

Thine heart is full hard, indurate, as was the heart of Pharoah.

For. Acts, &c. Exam. of W. Thorpe.

Of insensible, indurate, and intolerable unthankfulness of the sons of Adam!

2. Hard; not soft; dried; made hard.
Dried, soured, indurate fish. Burton, Anat. of Med. p. 70.

Avoid at all times indurate, salt, and especially spice and windy meat. Burton, Anat. of Med. p. 402.

INDURATION, n. s. [from indurate.]

1. The state of growing hard.
This is a notable instance of condensation and induration, by burial under earth, in caves, for a long time. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. The act of hardening.
Obduracy; hardness of heart.

Schism is marked out by the apostle as a kind of petrifying crime, which induces that induration to which the fearful expectation of wrath is consequent. Decay of Chr. Piety.

INDUSTRIOUS, adj. [industrious, Fr. industrious, Lat.]

1. Diligent; laborious; assiduous; opposed to slothful.

Frugal and industrious men are commonly friendly to the established government. Temple.

2. Laborious to a particular end: opposite to remiss.

He himself, being excellently learned, and industrious to seek out the truth of all things concerning the original of his own people, hath set down the testimony of the ancients truly. Spenner on Ireland.

Let our just commerce
Attend the true event, and put we on Industrious soldiiership. Shakespeare.

His thoughts were low:
To vice industrious; but to nobler deeds
Timorous and slothful. Milton, P. L.

3. Designed; done for the purpose.
The industrious perforation of the tendons of the second joints of fingers and toes, draw the tendons of the third joints through.

More, Divine Dialogues.
Observe carefully all the events which happen either by an occasional concurrence of various causes, or by the industrious application of knowing men. Watts on the Mind.

INDUSTRIOUSLY, adv. [from industrious.]

1. With habitual diligence; not idly.
And of myself industriously inclin'd. Mir. for Mag. p. 525.

2. Diligently; laboriously; assiduously.
Great Britain was never before united under one king, notwithstanding that the uniting had been industriously attempted both by war and peace. Bacon.

3. For the set purpose; with design.
Some friends to vice industriously defend
These innocent diversions, and pretend
That it's the tricks of youth too roughly blame. Dryden, Jun.

I am not under the necessity of declaring myself, and I industriously conceal my name, which wholly exempts me from any hopes and fears. Swift.

INDUSTY, n. s. [industrie, Fr.; industria, Lat.]

"Industry hath not bene so long time used in the English tongue, as providence; wherefore, it is the more strange, and requireth the more plaine exposition. It is a qualitie proceeding of witte and experience, by the which a man perceyeth quickely, inventeth freshely, and counseyleth speedily. Wherefore they, that be called industrious, doo mooste craftely and deeply understande in all affairs what is expedient, and by what means and ways they may soonest explore them." Sir T. Eliot, Gov. fol. 73.] Diligence; assiduity; habitual or actual laboriousness.

The sweat of industry would dry and die,
But for the end it works to. Shakespeare, Cymb.

See the industrious bee
For little drops of honey fees,
And there with humble sweets content her industry. Cowley.

Providence would only initiate mankind into the useful knowledge of her treasures, leaving the rest to employ our industry, that we might not live like idle loiterers. More.

INDWE'LER, n. s. [in and dwell.] An inhabitant.

Too true that lands indwellers since have found.
Un capable of any mortal indwellers. Spenner, F. Q. vii. li. 55.

An house ready to fall on the head of the indwellers. Sp. Hall, Occas. Med. § 110.

TO INEBRIATE, v. a. [inebrio, Lat.] To intoxicate; to make drunk.

Wine sugared indubitably less than wine pure; tops in wine, quantity for quantity, inebriate more than vice of itself. Bacon.

Fish, entering for in and meeting with the fresh water, as if inebriated, turn up their bellies and are taken. Sander.

TO INEBRIATE, v. n. To grow drunk; to be intoxicated.

At Cosantiope fish, that come from the Euxine as into the fresh water, do inebriate and turn up their bellies, so you may take them with your hand. Bacon.

Thy brains inebriate so,
That thou thy nakedness shall boldly show. Sonnet, Parnass. Lament. ch. 4.

INEBRIATION, n. s. [from inebriate.] Drunkenness; intoxication.

That cornelians and bloodstones may be of virtue, experience will make us grant; but not that an amethyst prevents inebriation. Brown.

INE'DITED, adj. [ineditus, Lat.] Not published; not put forth.

An inedited coin of queen Elizabeth.
Warton, Hist. Eng. Poetry, vol. ii. Add.

INEFFABLE, n. s. [from ineffable.] Unspeakableness.

INEFFABLE, adj. [ineffable, Fr.; ineffabilis, Lat.] Unspeakable; unutterable; not to be expressed. It is used almost always in a good sense.

To whom the Son, with calm aspect and clear,
Lightning divine, ineffable, serene,
Made answer. Milton, P. L.

Reflect upon a clear, unblotted, acquitted conscience, and feed upon the ineffable comforts of the memorial of a conquered temptation. South.

INEFFABLENESS, n. s. [from ineffable.] Unspeakableness. Scott.

INEFFABLY, adv. [from ineffable.] In a manner not to be expressed.

So dyd the divinity ineffably put itselfe into the visible sacrament. Atq. Commens. Anas. to Sp. Gardiner, p. 371.

He all his Father full express'd Ineffably into his face receiv'd. Milton, P. L.

INEFFECTIVE, adj. [ineffectivus, Fr.; in and effective.] That can produce no effect; unactive; inefficient; useless.

As the body, without blood, is a dead and lifeless trunk; so is the word of God, without the spirit, a dead and ineffective letter. Sp. Taylor.

He that assumes himself to be never err, will always err; and his presumptions will render all attempts to inform him ineffective. Glenville.

INEFFECTUAL, adj. [in and effectual.] Unable to produce its proper effect;
weak; wanting power.

The public reading of the Apocrypha they condemn as a thing effectual unto evil: the bare reading even of Scriptures themselves they mislike, as a thing ineffectual to do good. Himler.

The death of Patroclus, joined to the offer of Agamemnon, which of itself had proved ineffectual. Pope.

INEFFECTUALLY, adv. [from ineffectual.]
Without effect.

In nineteen days' time there were above 1000 great shot spent ineffectually on the brave loyalists, who held out against the menaces of Manchester's whole army. Ashmole, Hist. of Berks, ii. 286.

INEFFECTUALNESS, n. s. [from ineffectual.]
Inefficiency; want of power to perform the proper effect.

St. James speaks of the ineffectualness of some men's devotion. Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss. Wade.

INEFFECTUOUS, adj. [inefficace, Fr.; inefficax, Latin.] Unable to produce effect; weak; feeble. Ineffectual rather denotes an actual failure; and ineffectacious, an habitual impotence to any effect.

Is not that better than always to have the rod in hand, and, by frequent use, misapply and render ineffectacious this useful remedy? Lodge.

INEFFECTUOUSNESS, n. s. [from ineffectacious.]
Want of power to perform the proper effect.

To this we may probably impute that strange ineffectuousness we see of the word: Alas! men rarely apply it to the right place.

Lively Oracles, &c. p. 194.

INEFFECTIVE, n. s. [in and efficax, Lat.]

Want of power; want of effect.

INEFFICIENCY, n. s. [in and efficiency.]
Want of power; inactivity.

Venice owes its security to its neutrality and inefficiency. Ld. Chesterfield.

INEFFICIENT, adj. [in and efficient.]
Unactive; ineffective. See Dr. Johnson's definition of INEFFECTIVE.

He is as insipid in his pleasures, as inefficient in every thing else. Ld. Chesterfield.

INELABORATE, adj. [in and elaborate.] Not done with much care. Cockram.

INELANGUE, n. s. [from inelangu.] Cockram.

INELANGENCY, n. s. [from inelangu.] sense of beauty; want of elegance.

INELEGANT, adj. [inelegant, Lat.]

1. Not becoming; not beautiful; opposite to elegant.

What order, so contriv'd as not to mix
Tastes, not well join'd, inelegant, but bring Taste after taste, upheld with kindless change.

This very variety of sea and land, hill and dale, which is here reputed so inelegant and unbecoming, is indeed extremely charming and agreeable. Woodward.

2. Wanting ornament of language.

Modern critics, having never read Homer, but in low and inelegant translations, imagine the measure of the translation to the poet.

Broom on the Odyssey.

INELEGANTLY, adv. [from inelegant.]

1. Not becoming; not beautifully.

The pretensions of the southern transport is pinnacled, not inelegantly, with a flourish'd crown. Warren, Hist. of Kildington, p. 8.

2. Coarsely; without ornament of language.

Nor will he, if he have the least taste or application, talk inelegantly. Ld. Chesterfield.

In an invective to rhyme, while he is not inelegantly illustrating the pleases of an easy association of consonant syllables, he artfully intermixes the severities of satire.

Warren, Hist. E. p. iv. 60.

INELUQUENT, adj. [in and eloquent, Lat.]

Not persuasive; not oratorical; opposite to eloquent.

Nor are thy lips ungraceful, sire of meo.

INELUCTABLE, adj. [ineluctabilis, Lat.]

Not to be avoided or overcome.

Cockram.

As if the damnation of all sinners now were ineluctable and eternal. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 5.

INELUDIBLE, adj. [in and eludible.] Not to be defeated.

Most pressing reasons, and ineludible demonstrations.

Glanville, Pre-Exist. p. 14.

INENARRABLE, adj. [inenarrabilis, old French; inenarrabilis, Lat.] Not capable of being told; inexpressible.

Cockram.

INEPT, adj. [ineptus, old Fr.; ineptus, Lat.]

1. Trifling; foolish.

The works of nature being neither useless nor inept, must be guided by some principle of knowledge.

After their various unsuccessful ways, Their fruitless labour, and inept essays,
No cause of these appearances they'll find,
But power asserted by th' Eternal Mind. Blackmore.

2. Unfit for any purpose; useless.

When the upper and vegetative stratum was once washed off by rains, the hills would have become barren, the strata below yielding only mere sterile matter, such as was wholly inept and improper for the formation of vegetables.

Woodward.

INEPTITUDE, n. s. [from ineptus, Latin.]

Unfitness.

The grating and rubbing of axes against the sockets, wherein they are placed, will cause some ineptitude or resistency to rotation of the cylinder.

Willist.

An omniscient agent works infallibly and irresistibly, no ineptitude or stubbornness of the matter being ever able to hinder him. Ray on the Creation.

There is an ineptitude to motion from too great latitude, and an ineptitude to motion from too great tension. Arbutnot.

INEPTLY, adv. [inepté, Lat.] Triflingly;

foolishly; unfitly.

None of them are made foolishly or ineptly.

Moor.
All things were at first disposed by an omniscient intellect, that cannot contrive ineptly.

Glanville.

INEPTNESS, n. s. [from inept.] Unfitness.

The freedom and miserable ineptness of infancy. Moor, Pre-Exist. of the Soul, (1647) Pref.

INEQUAL, adj. [inegal, Fr. inequalis, Lat.] This is the ancient form of our word unequal, used by Chaucer, and given in the old dictionary of Barret, viz. "an inequal or unjust contention."

In modern times, Shenstone often uses it.

Welcome all toils the inequal fates decree,
While toils adorn thy faithful charge to me.

Shenstone, Jucy of Hercules.

He, not imprudent, at the night declin'd
The inequal conflict. Shenstone, Econ. P. ii.

INEQUALITY, n. s. [inegalité, Fr. inequalitas, Latin.]

1. Difference of comparative quantity.

There is so great an inequality in the length of our legs and arms, as makes it impossible for us to walk on all four. Ray.

2. Unevenness; interchange of higher and lower parts.

The country is cut into so many hills and inequalities as renders it defensible. Addison on Italy.

The glass seemed well wrought; yet when it was quick-silvered, the reflection discovered innumerable inequalities all over the glass. Newton, Opt.

If there were no inequalities in the surface of the earth, nor is the seasons of the year, we should lose a considerable share of the vegetable kingdom.

Newton, Opt.

3. Disproportion to any office or purpose; state of not being adequate; inadequateness.

The great inequality of all things to the appetites of a rational soul appears from this, that in all worldly things a man finds not half the pleasure in the actual possession that he propounds in the expectation.

4. Change of state; unlikeness of a thing to itself; difference of temper or quality.

In some places, by the nature of the earth, and by the situation of woods and hills, the air is more unequal than in others; and inequality of air is ever an enemy to health. Bacon.

5. Difference of rank or station.

If so small inequality between virtue and man makes them in modesty a commendable virtue, who respecting superiors as superiors, can neither speak nor stand before them without fear. Hobbes.

INEQUITABLE, adj. [in and equitable.]

Not equitable; unjust.

The way of process men take in this affair is so inequitable, as certainly proves the partiality of the sentence. Dec. of Chr. Party, p. 64.

INERRABILITY, n. s. [from inerrable.]

Exemption from error; infallibility.

These hideous notions of the inerrability of a man of sin. Ep. Hall, Rem. p. 405.

I cannot allow their wisdom such a completeness and inerrability as to exclude myself from judging. King Charles.

INERRABLE, adj. [in and err.] Exempt from error.

We have conviction from reason, or decisions from the inerrable and requisite conditions of sense. Brown.

Infallibility and inerrableness is assumed by the Romish church, without any inerrable ground to build it on.

Hammond on Fundamentals.

INERRABLENESS, n. s. [from inerrable.]

Exemption from error.

Infallibility and inerrableness is assumed and inculcated by the Romish church, without any inerrable ground to build it on.

Hammond on Fundamentals.

INERRABLY, adv. [from inerrable.] With security from error; infallibly.

INERRINGLY, adv. [in and erring.] Without error; without mistake; without deviation.

That divers limners at a distance, without copy, should draw the same picture, is more conceivable, than that matter should frame itself so inerringly according to the idea of its kind. Glanville.

INERT, adj. [iners, Lat.] Dull; sluggish; motionless.

Body alone, inert and brute you'll find;
The cause of all things is by you assigned.

Blackmore.

Informer of the planetary train!

Without whose quickening glance their cumbrous orbs
Were brute unliving mass, inert and dead.

Thomson.

INERTLY. adv. [from inert.] Sluggishly; dully.

Ye powers,
Suspend a while your force inertly strong.

INERTNESS.* n. s. [from inert.] Want of motion.

A state of silence and inaction.
Glennville, Proverbi. p. 125.

Into a state of more stupor and inertness.
Ibid. p. 127.

To INESCAT.* v. a. [inesco, inescatus, Latin.] To lay a bait for; to allure.

Many such pranks are played by our Jews, sometimes in their own habits, sometimes in others,
— to inescate and beguile young women.

Barton, Ann. of Mal. p. 505.

INEXCAUTION.† n. s. [in and esco, Lat.] The act of baiting.

Hercules lies true fortitude and courage, in overcoming all the deceitful alluresments and incitations of flesh and blood.

Hollywood, Exord. of Moral Virtues, (1699.) p. 107.

INEXSTIMABLE. adj. [inestimabile, Latin.] Too valuable to be rated; transcending all price.

I thought I saw a thousand fearful wrecks,
A thousand men that fishes 'knew' I'd upon;
Wedges of gold, great anchors, heaps of pearl,
Inestimable stones, unval'd jewels.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

The pope thereupon took advantage, abusing the simplicity of the king to suck out inestimable sums of money, to the intolerable grievance of both the clergy and temporality.

There we shall see a truly worthy dying for, this blessed Saviour, of whom the Scripture does so excellently entertain us, and who does so highly deserve of us, upon the score of his infinite perfections, and his inestimable benefits.

And shall this price, the inestimable price,
On that rapacious hand for ever blaze!

Pope.

INEXSTIMABLY.* adv. [from inestimabile.] So as not to be sufficiently rated.

Things inestimably excellent.

Morr, Sleep of the Soul, iii. iii. 7.
Heavenly and instructive volumes, inestimably overvaluing any the earth affords.

Boyle, Style of Holy Scripture, p. 27.

INEVIDENCE.* n. s. [in and evideo.] Obscurity; uncertainty.

Charge them, says St. Basil, that they trust not to uncertain riches, that is, in the obscurity or invidience of riches.

Barrow, Works, i. 1449.

INEVIDENT.† adj. [inevident, Fr. and invident.] Not plain; obscure. Not in use, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the example from Brown. It is a word, however, which boasts better authority than that of Brown; and has been adopted, from them, by a modern author of eminence. See also INEVIDENCE.

Our schoolmen make a distinction of a certainty; evident and inevident. Sp. Ital. Rem. p. 367.
The habit of faith in divinity is so argument of things unseen, and a stable assent upon things inevident, upon authority of the divine revealer.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

The object of faith is inevident.

"Faith is the evidence of things not seen;" by which words I conceive we may understand an undoubting assent to those things which are of themselves inevident. Sp. Compend. Rem. vol. ii. S. 5.

INEVITABILITY.† n. s. [from inevitabile.] Impossibility to be avoided; certainty.

By liberty, I do understand neither a liberty from sin, misery, servitude, nor violence, but from necessity, or rather necessitation; that is, an universal immunity from all inevitability and determination to one.

By. Drunkell against Hobbes.
The overthrow is described to be given so it were by a double blow and a twofold weapon, to shew the certainty and inevitability of it.

Shelford, Learned Discourses, p. 289.

INEVITABLE. adj. [inevitabile, French; inevitabilis, Lat.] Unavoidable; not to be escaped.

I had a pass with him: — he gives me the stock-io with such a mortal motion, that it is inevitable.

Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

Fate inevitable

Milton, P. L.

Since my inevitable death you know,

You safely unavailing pity shew.

Dryden, Aurengzebe.

INEVITABLENESS.* n. s. [from inevitabile.] Certainty; inevitability.

The inevitableness of the account we are to make, and the uncertainty of the time we shall be called to it.

By. Prohemus, Euclid, p. 106.

INEVITABLY. adv. [from inevitabile.] With out possibility of escape.

The day thou eat'st thereof, thy sole command
Transgress, inevitably thou shalt die. Milton, P. L.

How inevitably does an immoderate laughter end in a sigh?

South.

If they look no further than the next life, it will inevitably follow that they can drive to no certain point.

Inflammations of the bowels oft inevitably tend to the ruin of the whole. Harvey on Consumptions.

If our sense of hearing were exalted, we should have no quiet or sleep in the silent nights, and we must inevitably be stricken deaf or dead with a clap of thunder.

Bentley.

INEXECUTION.* n. s. [in and execution.] Non-performance. This word has been pronounced an Americanism in a "Vocabulary, or Collection of Words and Phrases which have been supposed to be peculiar to the United States of America, by John Pickering, 8vo. Boston, 1816:" in which it is said, that "English writers use the term non-execution" and the American example is,

"the inexecution of the treaty of peace," from Judge Marshall's Life of Washington, Vocab. p. 113. It happens, however, that this is an old overpassed English word.

They not only deferred to his counsels to public assemblies, but he was moreover the umpire of domestic matters, and decided quarrels arising between husbands and wives, without there ever being any inexecution or complaint against his decisions and decrees.

Spence, Tr. of Varilla's Hist. of the H. of Medic. (1686.) p. 306.

INEXCUSABLE. adj. [inexcusable, Fr. inexcusabilis, Latin, and excusable.] Not to be excused; not to be palliated by apology.

It is a temerity and a folly inexcusable, to deliver up ourselves needlessly into another's power.

J. Esdras.

As we are an island with ports and navigable seas, we should be inexcusable if we did not make these blessings turn to account.

Adrian, Frechtler.

Such a favour could only render them more odious, and more inexcusable; it would increase their guilt.

Atterbury.

If learning be not encouraged under your administration, you are the most inexcusable person alive.

Swift.

A fallen woman is the more inexcusable, as, from the cradle, the sex is warned against the delusions of men.

Richardson, Clarissa.

INEXCUSABLENESS. n. s. [from inexcusable.] Enormity beyond forgiveness or palliation.

Their inexcusableness is stated upon the supposition of this very thing, that they knew God, but for all that did not glorify him as God.

South, Sermon, ii. 365.

INEXCUSABLY.† adv. [from inexcusable.] To a degree of guilt or folly beyond excuse.

Behold where wherein Eve, and after her Adam, did fall inexcusably!

Herman, Tr. of Hes's Sermon, (1587.) p. 35. It will inexcusably condemn some men, who having received excellent endowments, yet have frustrated the intention.

Brown.

INEXHAUSTIBLE. adj. [in and exhaust.] That cannot evaporate.

A new-land, will not so easily be boiled hard, because it contains a great stock of humid parts, which must be evaporated before the heat can bring the inexhaustible parts into consistence.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

INEXHAUSTED.† adj. [in and exhaust.] Unemptied; not possible to be emptied.

So wet, both born into a useful strain,
As new-land, will not so easily be boiled hard, because it contains a great stock of humid parts, which must be evaporated before the heat can bring the inexhaustible parts into consistence.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

INEXHAUSTED.† adj. [in and exhaust.] Unemptied; not possible to be emptied.

So wet, both born into a useful strain,
As new-land, will not so easily be boiled hard, because it contains a great stock of humid parts, which must be evaporated before the heat can bring the inexhaustible parts into consistence.

Bentley, Sermon, vii.

INEXHAUSTIBLE. adj. [in and exhaustible.] Not to be drawn all away; not to be spent.

Reflect on the variety of combinations which may be made with number, whose stock is inexhaustible, and truly infinite.

Locke.

The stock that the mind has in its power, by varying the idea of space, is perfectly inexhaustible, and so it can multiply figures in infinitum.

Locke.

INEXHAUSTIBLENESS.* n. s. The state or quality of being inexhaustible.

Scott.

INEXHAUSTIVE.* adj. [in and exhaust.] Not to be all drawn off; inexhaustive.

Whose power,

To life approaching, may perform my lays
With that fine oil, those aromatic gums,
That inexhaustive flow continual round.

Thomson, Spring.

INEXISTENT. adj. [in and existent.] 1. Not having being; not to be found in nature.

To express compounded significations they took a liberty to compound and piece together creatures of allowable forms into mixtures inexistent.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Existing in something else. This use is rare.

We doubt whether these heterogeneities be much as inexistent in the concrete, whence they are abstracted.

Boyle.

INEXISTENCE.* n. s. [in and existence.] 1. Want of being; want of existence.

He calls up the heroes of former ages from a state of inexistence to adorn and diversify his poem.

Brown, on the Odyssey.

2. State of existing; inherence. So used by South, but improperly.

Concerning these gifts, we must observe also, that there was no small difference among them, as to the manner of their inexistence in the person who had them.

South, Sermon, iii. 414.

INEXORABLY.† adv. [from inexorable.] The state or quality of being inexorable.

Swift.

Your father's inobservance not only grieves but amazes me. Johnson, Letter in Boswell's Life of him.
INEXORABLE, adj. [inexorabilis, Fr. inexorabilis, Lat.] Not to be entreated; not to be moved by entreaty.

You are more inhuman, more inexorable,
 Oh ten times more, than tigers of Hyrcania!

Shakespeare.
Inexorable dog. Shakespeare, Merch. of Venice.

The scourge
Inexorable calls to penance. Milton, P. L.

The guests invited came,
 And with the rest th' inexorable dame. Dryden.

Th' inexorable gods were bair'd,
 And nought was seen, and nought was heard,
 But dreadful gleams, shrieks of woe.

Pope, St. Cecilia.
 We can be deaf to the words of so sweet a charmer, and inexorable to all his invitations.

Rogers.
INEXORABLENESS, n. s. [from inexorable].
 The state of being inexorable.

The former aversion, and inexorableness, is taken away. Chillingworth, Sermon, on Rom. viii. 34.

INEXORABLY, adv. [from inexorable].
 So as not to be moved by entreaty.

Phocion the good, in public life severe,
 To virtue still inexorably firm. Thomson, Winter.

INEXPECTION, n. s. [in and expectation].
 State of having no expectation, either with hope or fear; want of forethought.

It is therefore fit, we take heed of such things as are like multiplying chances, and show fears either more numerous or bigger far, than they are.

Such are inexpectation, unaccounted, want of preparation. Inexpectation: the sudden blow and strokes; but, foreseen, is either ward or avoided.

A surprise alone is torture. Fiddler, Rev. li. 5.

INEXPECTED, adj. [inexpectatus, Lat.].
 Not expected.

If the suddenness of an unexpected evil have surprised his thoughts, and infected his cheeks with paleness: he had no sooner digested it in his conceit, than he gathers up himself, and insults over mischief.

Bp. Hall, Character, p. 24.
 Our greatest ills we least mistrust, my lord,
 And unexpected harms do hurt us most.

Kyd, Span. Trng.
INEXPECTEDLY, adv. [from unexpected].
 Without expectation.

Such marvellous light opened itself unexpectedly to us. Bp. Hall, Spectacles of his Life.

INEXPEDIENCE, n. s. [in and expedi-EXPEDIENT]. diency. Want of fitness; want of propriety; unsuitability to time or place; inconvenience.

It concerneth superiors to look well to the expedience and inexpedience of what they enjoy in sufficient things. Sunderum.

INEXPEDIENT, adj. [in and expedient].
 Inconvenient; unfit; improper; unsuitable to time or place.

It is not inexpedient they should be known to come from a person altogether a stranger to chym-ical affairs. Boyle.

We should be prepared not only with patience to bear, but to receive with thankfulness a repulse,
 if God should see them to be inexpedient.

Sinclair.
INEXPERIENCE, n. s. [inexperience,
Fr. in and experience]. Want of experimental knowledge; want of experience.

Thy words at random Argue thine inexperience. Milton, P. L.

Prejudice and self-sufficiency naturally proceed from inexperience of the world, and ignorance of mankind. Addison.

INEXPERIENCED, adj. [inexpertus, Lat.].
 Not experienced.

They fight all inexperienced young men, from any tolerable compliance in matters of religion.

Mace, Conj. Cobb. (1654), p. 227.
INEXPERT, adj. [inexpertus, Lat. in and expert]. Unskilful; unskilled.

It must be considered,—whether he be learned or ignorant; whether skilful in languages and arts, or whether inexpert in both.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience.
 The race elect
 Safe towards Canaan from the shore advance
 Through the wild desert, not the readiest way;
 Lost, entering on the Canaanite alarm'd;
 War terrified them inexpert. Milton, P. L.

Not inexpert in letters and in laws Præ-

INEXPIABLE, adj. [inexpiabile, Fr. in- expiabilis, Latin].

1. Not to be atoned.
 A papist writes it; and then it is well enough.
 For some of our writers to have said but as much, or scarce so much as these, in this matter and manner, in there is an inexpiable transgression.

Dr. Froude, Autog. Tr. over Mos. (1619), p. 228.
 It is such an inexpiable crime in poets, to tax vice generally. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

2. Not to be mollified by atonement.
 Love seeks to have love:
 My love how could'st thou hope, who took'st the
 way

To raise in me inexpiable hate? Milton, S. A.

INEXPIABLY, adv. [from inexpiable].
 To a degree beyond atonement.

Excursions are inexpiable bad.
 And 'tis much safer to leave out than add.

Racine.
INEXPLA, adj. [in and explain- able]. That cannot be explained.

Cockerm.
INEXPLEABLY, adv. [in and exple, Lat.].
 Inexplicably. A word not in use.

What were these harpans but flatterers, delators, and the inexplicably covetous? Sandys, Travels.

INEXPLICABLE, adj. [inexplicable, Fr. in and explic, Lat.] Incapable of being explained; not to be made intelligible;
 not to be disentangled.

What could such apprehensions breed, but, as their nature is, inexplicable passions of mind, desirous absorbing what they embrace, and embracing what they absorb? Hobbes.

To me at least this seems inexplicable, if light be nothing else than precision or motion propagated through ether. Newton.

None eludes sagacious reason more,
 Than this obscure inexplicable power. Blackmore.

INEXPLICABLENESS, n. s. [from inexplic- able]. The state or quality of being inexplicable.

Ath.
INEXPLICABLY, adv. [from inexplicable].
 In a manner not to be explained.

The power of godliness is denied by wicked men. How then? What is their case? Surly inexplicably, unconceivably fearful.

Bp. Hall, The Hypocrite, Works, li. 392.
INEXPLORABLE, adj. [inexploratus, Lat.].
 Not to be discovered.

It was the king's own immovable and inexplor- able doom.

Sir G. Buck, Hist. Rich. III. (1646), p. 82.
INEXPRESSIBLE, adj. [in and express].
 Not to be told; not to be uttered; unutterable.

Thus when in orbs
 Of circuit inexpressible they stood,

Nothing can so peculiarly gratify the noble dispositions of human nature, as for one man to see another so much himself as to sigh his griefs, and groan his pains, to sing his joys, and do and feel every thing by sympathy and secret inexpres- sible communications. South.

The true God had no certain name given to him; for Father, and God, and Creator, are but titles arising from his works; and God is not a name, but a notion ingrafted in human nature of an inexpresible being. Stillingfleet.

There is an inimitable grace in Virgil's words;
 and in them principally consists that beauty, which gives so inexpresible a pleasure to him who best understands their force; this diction of his is never to be copied. Dryden.

INEXPRESSIBLY, adv. [from inexpresible].
 To a degree or in a manner not to be uttered; unutterably.

God will protect and reward all his faithful servants in a manner and measure inexpressibly abundant. Hammond.

He began to lay open it; the sound was exceeding sweet, and wrought into a variety of tones that were inexpressibly melodious. Addison, Spect.

INEXPRESSIVE, adj. [See UNEXPRES-
SIVE]. Ineffable. Dr. Johnson has been publicly blamed for not inserting in- expressive, in his Dictionary, because "Milton makes such fine use of it in his Lycidas." The word in Lycidas is unexpressive; so it is in the same poet's Ode on the Nativity, from which Dr.
 Johnson has inaccurately cited it, as if it were inexpressive. Nor is it in- expressive in Shakespeare, whose poetry is also misused. Inexpressive has since been found in the poetry of Akenside by one of those gentlemen who have made additions to Johnson:

The inexpressive strain
 Diffuses its enchantments.

Pleasures of Imag. B. I. 124.

INEXPU, adj. [inexpugnabile, Fr.;
inexpugnabilis, Latin]. Impregnable; not to be taken by assault; not to be subdued.

He may have fortified himself in some in- expugnable castle or fortress.

Shelton, Tr. of Don Quix. li. iv. 19.
 Fortified, as he were, with a trench and palisado, and with inexpugnabile endonem, and

Shelton, Tr. of the Septuagint, p. 95.
 Philip, king of Macedon, thought of cities.
 There is none so inexpugnabile, but an ass laden with gold may enter them.

Horrell, Lett. (died 1637), li. 4.
 There is one objection,—which the Symenians press there, as being inexpugnabile.

Bp. Morton, Episcopacy Assert. p. 88.
 This castle — was accounted inexpugnabile.

Sir T. Herbert, Trans. p. 89.
INEXTINCT, adj. [inextinctus, Lat.].
 Not quenched; not put out. Cockerm.

INEXTINGUISHABLE, adj. [inextinguibilis,
Fr. in and extinguo, Lat.] Our own word was formerly, like the French,
inextinguible. "Perpetual motion, in- extinguible lights." Burton, Anat. of Mel, p. 281. Unquenchable.

Pillars, statues, and other memorials, are a sort of shadow of an endless life, and show an in- extinguishable desire which all men have of it.

Grew.
INEXTINGUISHABLE, adj. [in and extinguish- able]. Not to be rooted out. Cockerm.

INEXTRICABLE. adj. [inextricable, Fr.; inextricabilis, Lat.] Not to be disentangled; not to be cleared; not to be set free from obscurity or perplexity.

He that should try inextricable knots, only to baffle the industry of those that should attempt to unloose them, would be thought not so to have served his generation.

Shopt by awful heights, and gulfy charms
Of wisdom, and of vast omnipotence,
She trembling stands, and does in wonder gaze,
Lost in the wild inextricable maze. Blackmore.
Men are led into inextricable mazes by setting up themselves as judges of the world. Shedd.

INEXTRICABLENESS. n. s. [from inextricable.] The state or quality of being inextricable.

There is no perplexity in thee, my God, no *inextricable*ness in thee.

Donne, Devot. (1625), p. 192.

INEXTRICABLY. adv. [from inextricable.] To a degree of perplexity not to be disentangled.

The mechanical atheist, though you grant him his laws of mechanism, is nevertheless inextricably puzzled and baffled with the first formation of animals.

In vain they strive; the intangling snares deny,
Inextricably firm, the power to fly. Pope, Ode.

INEXUPERABLE. adj. [inexuperabilis, Lat.] Not to be passed over; not superable; not to be conquered.

Cockeram.
To INEXPER. v. n. [in and eye.] To inoculate; to propagate trees by the insertion of a bud into a foreign stock.

Let sage experience teach thee all the arts
Of grafting and inexper. Philips.

INFABRICATED. adj. [infabricatus, Lat.]

Unwrought. Cockeram.
INFALLIBILITY. n. s. [infallibilis, Lat.]
INFALLIBleness. n. s. [infallibilis, Lat.]
INFALLIBLY. adv. [Fr.; from infallibilis.] Inerrability; exemption from error.

Fancy, wherein there must either be vanity or infallibleness, and no either not to be respected, or not to be prevented.

The veracity and infallibleness of the party that affirms it.

By Hall, Rem. p. 267.
Infallibility is the consequence of the knowing faculty, and consequently the highest degree of ascent. Tillotson.

INFALLIBLE. adj. [infallibilis, Fr.; in and fallible.] Privilege from error; incapacity of mistake; not to be misled or deceived; certain. Used both of persons and things.

Every cause admitteth not such infallible evidence of proof, as leaveth no possibility of doubt or scruple behind it.

Believe my words;
For they are certain and infallible.

The success is certain and infallible, and none ever yet miscarried in the attempt. South.

INFALLIBLY. adv. [from infallible.]

1. Without danger from deceit; with security from error.

We cannot be as God infallibly knowing good and evil.

South.

2. Certainly.
Our blessed Lord has distinctly opened the scene of futurity to us, and directed us to such a conduct as will infallibly render us happy in it.

Rogers.

To INFA'ME. v. a. [infamer, Fr.; infamo, Lat.] To represent to disadvantage; to defame; to censure publicly; to make infamous; to brand. To defame is now used.

Livia is infamed for the poisoning of her husband.

Hitherto obscured, infam'd,
And thy fair fruit left hang, as to no end Created. Milton, P. L.

INFAMOUS. adj. [infamē, infamant, Fr.; infamia, Lat.] It had the accent formerly on the second syllable.]

1. Publicly branded with guilt; openly censured; of bad report.

Many there thou found, which were accus'd
His falsehood, and with foul infamous blot
His cruel deeds and wicked wyles did spot.

Spenner, F. Q. lib. vi. 13.
Those that be near, and those that be far,
Thou shalt mock thee which art infamous.

Each, xiii. 5.

These are as some infamous bawd or whore
Should praise a matron; what could hurt her more?

After-times will dispute it, whether Hellum were more infamous at Hull or at Tower-hill.

King Charles.

Persons infamous, or branded in any public court of judicature, are forbidden to be advocates.

2. With for.

The fleet
Glides by the Sirens' cliffs, a shelly coast,
Long infamous for ships and navies lost.

Dryden, Aeneid.

3. Dismal. A Latinism.

And now he haunts the infamous woods and downs. P. Fletcher, Psc. Ed. l. 14.

Infamous hills, and sandy perilous wilds.

Milton, Comus.

INFAMOUSLY. adv. [from infamous.]

1. With open reproach; with publick notoriety of reproach.

He that wrongs me, better I proclaim,
He never had away'd to touch my fame;
For he shall weep, and walk with every tongue
Throughout the city, infamously sung.

B. Jonson, Poetaster.

2. Shamefully; scandalously.

This poem was infamously bad. Dryd. DuRoi.

INFAMOUSNESS. n. s. [infamie, Fr.;

Arbuthnot on Coins.

INFAMOUS. adj. [infandus, Lat.] So abominable as not to be expressed.

This infamous custom of swearing, I observe, reigns in England later more than any where else; though a German, in highest puff of passions, swears a hundred thousand sacraments.

Howell, Lett. (1639), i. v. 11.

INFAMETH, or kingfangtheft, or infangtheft, is compounded of three Saxon words: the preposition, in, fang, or fong, to take or catch, and thef. It signifies a privilege or liberty granted unto lords of certain manors to judge any thief taken within their fee.

Cowel.

INFANT. n. s. [infans, Fr.; infans, Lat.] "The common word infant, Latin infans, comes not from in and fari, one who cannot speak, as our herd of lexicographers say; but from fa, to nourish, to feed, whence fari itself is derived.—Lye mentions fauntain as an old English word, signifying an infant or little boy, which he rightly derives from the Icelandic fante, a young man; whence the Italian fante, a page or servant, and the French fantassin, a soldier who serves on foot, and of those whom we call infantry." Callander, Observ. on Two Anc. Scott. Poems, p. 65. See also INFANTRY.]

1. A child from the birth to the end of the seventh year.

It being a part of their virtuous education, serveth greatly both to nourish in them the fear of God, and to put us in continual remembrance of that powerful grace, which openeth the mouths of infants to sound his praise.

There shall be no more than an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filed his days.

INFATUATION n. s. [from infatuare.] The act of striking with folly; deprivation of reason.

Where men give themselves over to the defence of wicked interests and false propositions, it is just with God to smite the greatest abilities with the greatest infatuations. Smith.

INFATUING n. s. [from infatuans, Lat.] The act of making unlucky. An odd and inelegant word.

As the king did to some part remove the envy from himself, so he did not observe that he did withal bring a kind of malediction and infatuating upon the marriage, as an ill prognostick. Bacon, Hen. VII.

INFESASIBLE adj. [in and fesable.] Impracticable; not to be done.

This is so difficult and infesable, that it may well drive modesty to despair of science. Glaucile.

INFESIBLENESS† n. s. [from infesable.] Impracticability.

He began the work; and being disabused in point of the infesibleness, pursued his task, and perfected it. W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. II. (1654.) p. 117.

To INFECT v. a. [infector, Fr. infectus, Lat.]

1. To act upon by contagion; to affect with communicated qualities; to hurt by contagion; to taint; to poison; to pollute.

One of those fantastical mind infected people, that children and musicians call lovers. Stancy.
Thine eyes, sweet lady, have infected mine. Shakespeare.

The nature of bad news infects the teller. Shakespeare.

Every day
It would infect his speech, that if the king Should without consent, he'd carry in to me To make the sceptre his. Shaksp. Hen. VIII.
Infected minds
To their dear pillows will discharge their secrets. Shakespeare.

She speaks piniards, and every word stabs; if her breath were as terrible as her terminations, there were no living near her; she would infect to the earth star. Shakespeare.

I am return'd your soldier; No more infected with my country's love, Than when I parted hence. Shaksp. Coriol.

The love tale

2. To fill with something hurtfully contagious.

Infected be the air whereon they ride, And damn'd all those that trust them! Shakespeare, Macbeth.

INFECT† part. adj. [from the verb.] Infected; polluted.

Are you not sick,
For whose infectious persuasions, I could scarce Kneel out my prayers? Turner, Rescuer's Tragedy.

A bloded eye, a closed ear,
A hand with broken infect. Shakespeare, Coriol.

Infected be the air whereon they ride, And damn'd all those that trust them! Shakespeare, Macbeth.

INFECTIOUS n. s. [infectio, Fr. infectio, Lat.] Contagion; mischief by communication; taint; poison.

Infection is that manner of communicating a disease by some effluvia, or particles which fly off from distempred others, and mixing with the juices of bodies, occasion the same disorders as in the bodies they came from. Quincy.

What a strange infection
Is fall'n into thy ear! Shakespeare, Cymb.

The blessed gods
Purge all infections from our air, whilst you Do climate here. Shakespeare, Wind. Tale.

Vouchsafe, diffus'd infection of a man,
For these known evils but to give me less;
By circumstance, to curse thy cursed self. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

Hence,
Lest that the infection of his fortune take Like hold on thee. Shakespeare, E. Lear.

The transmission or emission of the thinner and more airy parts of bodies, as in odours and infectious, is, of all the rest, the most corporeal; but withal there be a number of those emissions, both wholesome and unwholesome, that give so small at all. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

INFECTIOUS adj. [from infect.] Contagious; influencing by communicated qualities.

The most infectious pestilence upon thee! Shakespeare.

In a house,
Where the infectious pestilence did reign. Shaksp.

Some known diseases are infectious, and others are not: those that are infectious are such as are chiefly in the spirits, and not so much in the humours, and therefore pass easily from body to body, such as pestilences and ligitudes. Bacon.

Smells may have much power to do good as to do harm, and contribute to health as well as to diseases; which is too much felt by experience in all that are infectious, and by the operations of some poisons, that are received only by the smell. Temple.

INFECTIOUSLY adv. [from infectious.] Contagiously.

The will dates, that is inclinable
To what infectiously itself affects. Shakespeare.

INFECTIOUSNESS. n. s. [from infectious.]
The quality of being infectious; contagionous.

INFECTIVE.† adj. [from infect.] Having the quality of acting by contagion.

True love, well considered, hath an infective power.
There is no stink in the world so infective as they are.

Outrid, Tr. of Cape on Proverbs, (1580), fol. 190. b.
Command her, you grave beldam, that know

My deadly reasons; since I drew them
From the infective fountain of your own.
Bacon and Fl. Bloody Brother.

INFECOND. n. s. [infecondus, Lat.]
Unfruitful; infertile.

How safe and agreeable a conservatory the earth is to vegetables, is manifest from their rotting, drying, or being rendered infecond in the waters, or the air; but in the earth their vigour is long preserved.
Darham, Physico-Theol.

INFECONDITY.† n. s. [infeconditas, Lat.]
Want of fertility; barrenness. Bullockar,
To INFEUBLE.* See To INFERIBLE.

INFELICITY. n. s. [infelicitas, Fr. infelicitas, Lat.]
Unhappiness; misery; calamity.

Whatever is the ignorance and infelicity of the present state, we were made wise and happy.

Here is our great infelicity, that, when single words signify complex ideas, one word can never distinctly manifest all the parts of a complex idea.
Watts.

INFUDATION.* See INFUDATION.

To INFERF.* See To INFERF.

To INFER.† v. a. [infer, Fr. infer, Lat.]

1. To bring on; to induce.
Serena—led away, infer’d
Of villainy to be her infer’d.
Spenser, F. Q. vi. vii. 32.
Vomits infer some small detriment to the lungs.

2. To infer is nothing but, by virtue of one proposition laid down as true, to draw in another as true, i. e. to see or suppose such a connection of the two ideas of the inferred proposition. Locke.
Yet what thou can’st attain, which best may serve

To glorify the Maker, and infer
There also implies, shall not be with-held Thy learning. Milton, P. L.

Or bright, infer not excellence: the earth
Though in comparison of heaven so small,
Nor glistening, may of solid good contain
More plenty than the sun, that barren shines.

One would wonder how, from so differing premises, they should all infer the same conclusion.
Decay of Chr. Party.

They have more opportunities than other men have of purchasing public esteem, by deserving well of mankind; and such opportunities always imply obligations. Aiturbury.

3. To offer; to produce. Not in use.
Full well hath Clifford paid the orator,
Infering arguments of mighty force.
Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

INFERABLE.† adj. [from infer.] Deducible from premised grounds. This is the modern way of writing and pronouncing what was formerly inferible or rather inferrible, with the accent on the second syllable. See INFERIBLE.

A sufficient argument — is inferable from these premises.

INFERENCE. n. s. [inference, Fr. from infer.]
Conclusion drawn from previous arguments.

Though it may chance to be right in the conclusion, it is yet unjust and mistaken in the method of inference.

These inferences or conclusions are the effects of reasoning, and the three propositions, taken all together, are called syllogism or argument. Watts.

INFERIBLE.† adj. [from infer.] It should be rather inferrible, as Sir T. Brown certainly wrote it; and as Dr. Johnson himself writes referrible; though in the first of the following examples he has given it inferible.] Deducible from premised grounds.

As single mistakes commonly beget fallacies, so men from fallacious foundations, and misapprehended mediums, erect conclusions no way inferible from their premises.

That Sodom could not be far from Segor, which was seated under the mountains near the side of the lake, seems inferrible from the sudden arrival of Lot, who, coming from Sodom at day-break, attained to Segor at sun-rising.

INFERIORITY. n. s. [inferiorité, Fr. from inferior.] Lower state of dignity or

The language, though not of equal dignity, yet as near approaching to it as our modern barbarism will allow; and therefore we are to rest contented with that only inferiurity which is not possibly to be remedied.

Hooker.

INFIDEL. adj. [infidèle, French.] Unbelieving; characteristic of an unbeliever.

You have written what you dreamed in your sleep, rather than what you learned of any other catholic or infidel.

Atty. Crammer, Answer to Bp. Gardiner, p. 369.

Their old infidel tenor.

Hurd on Chivalry and Romance.

The parliament [may be] not infidel. They deplore the infidelity of that parliament. Bold words these, indeed!

Bp. Horne, Letters on Infidelity, L. 15.

INFIDELITY. n. s. [infidélité, Fr. infidelitas, Lat.]

1. Want of faith.

The consideration of the divine omnipotence and infinite wisdom, and our own ignorance, are great instruments of silencing the murmurs of infidelity.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

2. Disbelief of Christianity.

Osa would fancy that infidels would be exempt from that single fault, which seems to grow out of the impudent ferocity of religion; but so it is, that infidelity is propagated with as much ferocity and contention, as if the safety of mankind depended upon it.

Addison, Spect.

3. Treachery; deceit; breach of contract or trust.

The infidelities on the one part between the two sexes, and the caprices on the other, the vanities and vexations attending one the most refined delights that make up this business of life, render it silly and uncomfortable.

Spectator.

INFINITE. adj. [infini, French, infinitus, Lat.]

1. Unbounded; boundless; unlimited; immense; having no boundaries or limits to its nature.

Impossible it is, that God should withdraw his presence from any thing because the very substance of God is infinite.

Hooker.

What's time, when on eternity we think? A thousand ages in that we must sink:

Time's nothing but a word; a million

Is full as far from infinite as one.

Denham.

Thou sov'reign pow'r, whose secret will controls

The inward bent and motion of our souls!

Why hast thou plac'd such infinite desires?

Between the cause and cure of my disease? Prior.

When we would think of infinite space or duration, we at first make some very large idea; as perhaps of millions of ages or miles, which possibly we multiply several times.

Locke.

Even an angel's comprehensive thought

Cannot extend as far as thou hast wrought:

Our vast conceptions by swelling brought,

Swallow'd and lost in infinite, to nought.

Denham.

2. It is hyperbolically used for large; great.

INFINITELY. adv. [from infinite.]

The king saw that contrivance it would follow, that England, though much less in territory, yet should have infinitely more soldiers of their native forces than those other nations have.

Infinitely the greater part of mankind have professed to act under a full persuasion of this great article.

Rogers.

INFINITENESS. n. s. [from infinite.] Immensity; boundlessness; infinity.

The coming of his history, the realness of his tears, the infiniteness of his woes, were but among the weakest threads of his net.

Sidney.

Let us always bear about us such impressions of reverence, and fear of God, that we may humble ourselves before his Almightyness, and asperse that infinite distance between his influences and our weaknesses.

Bp. Taylor.

INFINITESIMAL. adj. [from infinite.] Infinitely divided.

The notion or idea of an infinitesimal quantity, as it is an object simply apprehended by the mind, hath been already considered.

Bp. Berkeley, Analyst, § 12.

INFINITIVE. adj. [infinitus, Fr. infinitus, Lat.] In grammar, the infinitive affirms, or intimates the intention of affirming, which is one use of the indicative; but then it does not do it absolutely.

Clarke, Lat. Grammar.

The mode is the manner of representing the being, action, or passion. When it is simply declared, or a question is asked concerning it, it is called the indicative mode. — When it is barely expressed, without any limitation of person or number, it is called the infinitive.

Leath, Introduct. Eng. Grammar.

INFINITUDE. n. s. [from infinite.]

1. Infinity; immensity.

Confusion heard his voice, and wild uproar

Stood rull'd, stood vast infinite confusion'd.

Milton, P. L.

Though the repugnancy of infinite be equally incompatible to continued or successive motion, or continued quantity, and depends upon the impossibility of the very nature of things successive or extensive with infinite; yet that impossibility is more conspicuous in discrete quantity, that ariseth from parts actually distinguished.

Hale.

2. Boundless number.

We see all the good sense of the age cut out, and minced into almost an infinite of distinctions.

Addison, Spect.

INFINITY. n. s. [infinité, French, infinitas, Lat.]

1. Immensity; boundlessness; unlimited quantities.

There cannot be more infinities than one; for one of them would limit the other.

Raleigh, Hist.

The better, the more desirable; that therefore must be desirable, wherein there is infinity of goodness; so that if any thing desirable may be infinite, that must needs be the highest of all things that are desired: no good is infinite but only God, therefore he is our felicity and bliss.

Hooker.

2. Endless number. An hyperbolical use of the word.

Homer has concealed faults under an infinity of admirable beauties.

Broom, Notes on the Odyssey.

The liver, being swelled, compresseth the stomach, stops the circulation of the juices, and produces an infinity of bad symptoms.

2. Ascendant power; power of directing or modifying. It was anciently followed by into; now, less properly, by upon.

Incomparable lady, your commandment doth not only give me the will, but the power to obey you; such influence hath your excellency. Sidney.

God hath his influence into the very essence of all things, without which influence of Deity supporting them, their utter annihilation could not cluse but follow. Hooke.

A wise man shall over-rule his stars, and have a greater influence upon his own content than all the constellations and planets of the firmament.

Ry. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

Foreknowledge had no influence on their fault.

Milton, P. L.

Religion hath so great an influence upon the felicity of men, that it ought to be upheld, not only

out of a dread of the divine vengeance in another world, but out of regard to temporal prosperity.

Tillotson.

Our inconsistency in the pursuit of schemes thoroughly digested, has a bad influence on our affairs.

Addison.

So astonishing a scene would have present influence upon them, but not produce a lasting effect. Atterbury.

Where it ought to have greatest influence, this obvious indisputable truth is little regarded. Rogers.

TO INFLUENCE v. a. [from the noun.

Addison has used the following expression: "To influence the reader with pity and compassion towards them." Spect.

No. 357. Upon which bishop Hurd justly remarks, that it is hard and scarcely allowable. "When we use influence, as a verb," he says, "we use it absolutely; as, such considerations influenced him;

that is, had an effect or influence upon him; without specifying the effect produced. He had expressed himself better, if he had said, to fill the reader's mind with; or, to engage the reader's passion." To act upon with directive or impulsive power; to modify to any purpose; to guide or lead to any end.

These experiments succeed after the same manner in vacuum as in the open air, and therefore are not influenced by the weight or pressure of the atmosphere. Newton, Opticks.

This standing revelation was attested in the most solemn and credible manner; and is sufficient to influence their faith and practice, if they attend. Atterbury.

All the restraint men are under is, by the violation of one law, broken through; and the principle which influenced their obedience has lost its efficacy on them. Rogers.

opinions, but that which looks most judiciously and influentially unto goodness. Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 3.

INFLUX, n. s. [influxus, Lat.]

1. A set of flowing into any thing.

We will enquire whether there be, in the footsteps of nature, any such transmission and influx of immaterial virtues, and what the force of imagination is, either upon the body in general, or upon another body. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

If once contracted in a systole, by the influx of the spirits, why, the spirits continually flowing in without let, doth it not always remain so. Ray on the Creation.

An elastic fibre, like a bow, the more extended, it restores itself with the greater force; if the spring be destroyed, it is like a bag, only passive as to the influx of the liquid. Arbuthnot.

2. Infusion; intromission.

There is another life after this; and the influx of the knowledge of God, in relation to this everlasting life, is infinitely of moment. Hale, Orig. of Monkism.

3. Influence; power. In this sense it is now not used.

Adam, in innocence, might have held, by the continued influx of the divine will and power, a state of immortality. Hale.

These two do not so much concern sea-fish, yet they have a great influx upon rivers, ponds, and lakes. Hale.

INFLUXION, n. s. [influxus, Lat.] Infu-

TO INFORM, v. a. [informer, Fr. in- formare, Lat.]

1. To animate; to actuate by vital powers.

All alike inform'd

With radiant light, as glowing iron with fire. Milton, P. L.

Let others better mould the running mass

Of metals, and inform the breathing brass;

And soften into flesh a marble face. Dryden, Aen.

As from chaos, huddled and deform'd,

The god struck fire, and lighted up the lamps

That beautify the sky; so he inform'd

This ill-shap'd body with a daring soul. Dryden and Lee.

Breath informs this fleeting frame. Prior.

This sovereign arbitrary soul

informs, and moves, and animates the whole. Blackmore.

method of reducing the laws into their original causes. Hooke.

I have this present evening from my sister been well informed of them, and with cautions.

Shakespeare.

Our ruin, by thee inform'd, I learn.

Milton, P. L.

The long speeches rather confounded than in- formed his understanding. Clarendon.

The difficulty arises not from what sense in- forms us of, but from wrong applying our notions.

Digby.

Though I may not be able to inform men more than they know, yet I may give them the occasion to consider. Temple.

The ancients examined in what consists the beauty of good postures, as their works sufficiently inform us. Dryden.

He may be ignorant of these truths, who will never take the pains to employ his faculties to in- form himself of them. Locke.

To understand the commonwealth, and religion, is enough : few inform themselves in these to the bottom. Locke.

A more proper opportunity tends to make the narration more informing, or beautiful. Brownie, Notes on the Med.

I think it necessary, for the interest of virtue and religion that the whole kingdom should be informed in some parts of your character. Swift.

3. To offer an accusation to a magistrate.

Tertullus informed the governor against Paul. Acts, xiv. 1.

To INFORM, v. n. To give intelligence.

It is the bloody business which informs Thus to mine eyes. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

INFORM, adj. [informe, Fr. informis, Lat.] A proper word. See what is said under ENORM. Shapeless; ugly.

Colgrave, and Sherwood.

Openly; fairly; candidly; generously.

Ingeniously I speak, No blame belongs to thee. Shakespeare, Timon.

It was a notable observation of a wise father, and no less ingeniously confessed, that those which held and persecuted persons of consciences were commonly interested. Bacon.

I will ingeniously confess, that the helps were taken from divines of the church of England. Dryden.

INGEN'OUSNESS.† n. s. [from ingenious.]

Openness; fairness; candour.

There seems to have been no occasion for the equivocal word "ingenuity" to distinguish between "openness" and "dissimulation," while we have the term ingenuus to answer the purpose distinctly. Pegge, Anecd. Eng. Lang.

INGENY. n. s. [ingenium, Lat.] Genius; wit. Not now in use.

Watters of the production of his ingeny comes into foreign parts, is highly valued. Boyle.

TO INGE'ST. v. a. [ingestus, Lat.] To throw into the stomach.

Nor will we affirm that Iron, ingested, receiveth in the belly of the ostridge no alteration. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Some the long funnel's curious mouth extended, Through which ingested meats with ease descended. Blackmore.

INGESTION. n. s. [from ingest.] The act of throwing into the stomach.

It has got room enough to grow into its full dimension, which is performed by the daily ingestion of milk and other food, that's in a short time after digested into blood. Harvey.

INGLE.* n. s. [probably from igniculus, dimin. of ignis, Lat. a sparkle of fire.

Dr. Jamieson notices the Gael, ingael, which has been rendered, fire.] Fire, or flame: a blaze. North. Ray, Yorkshire Glossary, and Grose. "Engle, or ingle-wood, signifies wood for firing." Ritson, Anc. Popular Poet. Englewood, or Ingelwood, is the name of a forest in Cumberland. An ingle of sticks is a common expression in Cumberland.

INGLORIOUS* adj. [inglorius, Lat.]

1. Void of honour; mean; without glory.

Let rear four them about to Egypt, countless Inglorious life with servitude. Milton, P. L.

It was never held inglorious or derogatory for a king to be guided by his great council, nor dishonourable for subjects to yield and bow to their king. Howard.

Yet though our army brought not conquest home, I did not from the fight inglorious come. Dryden.

2. Regardless of glory; insensible to the charms of glory; unambitious.

Great Julius, whom now all the world admires, The more he grew in years, the more inflam'd With glory, yet desire he had liv'd so long Inglorious. Milton, P. R.

My next desire is, void of care and strife, To lead a soft, secure, inglorious life. Dryden, Georg.

INGLORIOUSLY.† adv. [from inglorius.]

With ingominy; with want of glory.

Herod Archelaus died ingloriously at Vienna in Austria. Lee, Biogr. of Br. Emu. (1614.) p. 23.

Fride and revere broke his heart, and so he [Boniface the eighth] there died ingloriously. Mary in the Seven Churches, p. 63.

This was the chief of errors, Reprehend it not ingloriously in home. Pope.

Their flaming courage being ingloriously extinguish'd. Shakespeare, v. 31. Dy. Winton's Edict.

INGLO'IOUSNESS.* n. s. [from inglorius.]

State of being inglorious.

Seeing the outward meanness, poverty, and ingloriousness of his life and death. Bp. Gauden, Hierarchy, (1655.) p. 306.

TO INGO'ROE.* See TO ENGORGE.

INGOOT.* n. s. [ingot, French; or from ingegoten, melted, Dutch. Dr. Johnson.

— Ingot, q. d. inguten, from in and Goth. gieta, Si. giuta, fundere. Serenius. Chaucer uses ingot, repeatedly, for a mould for casting ingots.] A mass of metal.

If thou art rich, thou'rt poor;
For like an ass, whose back's with ingots bound,
Thou bear'st thy heavy riches but a journey,
And death unloadeth thee. Shaksp. Mous. for Mous.
Within the circle arms and tripod lie,
Ingots of gold and silver heap'd on high.

Dryden, Æn.
Every one of his pieces is an ingot of gold, intrinsically and solidly valuable. Præf.

To INGRA'FE. v. a. [in and graff.]

To INGRA'FT. v. a. [in and graff.]

1. To propagate trees by incision.

Not are to ingraft how the valleys alike in all
How to ingraft, how to inoculate. Mary, Virgil.
2. To plant the sprig of one tree in the stock of another; as, he ingrafted an apple upon a crab.

3. To plant or introduce any thing not native.

All his works on me,
Good, or not good, ingraft; my merit those Shall perfect, and for these my death shall pay.
Milton, P. L.

As next of kin, Achilles' arms I claim;
This fellow would ingraft a foreign name
Upon our stock. Dryden.

4. To fix deep; to settle.

For a spur of diligence, we have a natural stir after knowledge ingrafted in us. Hooker.
'Tis great pity till the noble Moor
Should hazard such a place as his own second.
With one of an ingraft infirmity. Shaksp. Othello.
Ingraffed love be hearts to Cassio.

Shakspere, Jul. Cæs.

INGRA'FMENT. n. s. [from ingraft.]

1. The act of ingrafting.

2. The sprig ingrafted.

INGRA'INED.* adj. [from grain.] Dyed in grain; deeply indixed.

Ingrain'd habits, they'd with often dips,
Are not so soon discoloured. Morison, Source of Vill. i. 4. (1599).

'Tis an ingrained, rational, and judicious nor-row. Norris, Lett. on his Niece's Death.

INGRA'PPLED.* adj. [from grapple.] See

TO ENGRAFFLE. Seized on; twisted together.

Two lions—

With their armed paws ingrappled dreadfully.

Dryden, Polyd. S. 12.

INGRA'FE† } adj. [ingratus, Lat.]

INGRA'TEFUL† } ingrat, French. Ingrate is proper, but ingrateful less proper than ungrateful. Dr. Johnson.—

Accordingly Dr. Johnson gives but a solitary example of ingrateful, and that under the second definition. Yet no word has been more in use, by our best writers, in both senses, than in- grateful.]

1. Ungrateful; unthankful.

That we have been familiar,

Ingrate forgetfulness shall poison, rather Than pity note how much. Shakspere, Coriol.

And you degenerate, you ingrate revolt.

Shakspere.

No man could be so impudently ingrate.

Younger Prother's Apology, (1655.) p. 55.

So will fall

He and his faithless progeny; whose fault?

Whose but his own? Ingrate; he had of me

All he could have: I made him just to fall.

Sufficient to have stood, though free to fall.

Milton, P. L.

It is the love, it is the recompence

Of mine to thee, ingrateful Eve? Milton, P. L.

Ingrateful and treacherous guests to their best friends and entertainers.

Milton, Obscure on the Art. of Peace.

He found that city which he had saved so in-grateful. Hakewill on Providence, p. 445.

He proved extremely false and ingrateful to her.

History, vol. iv. Lett. xxviii.

Perfidious and ingrate!

His stores ye ravage, and usurp his state.

Pope, Odyssey.

2. Unpleasing to the sense.

The causes of that which is unpleasing or ingrate to the hearing, may receive light by that which is pleasing and grateful to the sight.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

How ingrate soever it (as a scævola) may seem at first, yet by it becomes sufficiently pleasant.

Sir T. Herbert, Treat. p. 118.

No ingrateful food.

Milton, P. L.

Few would venture upon the ingrateful office of reproving. Goodman, Wint. Ec. Conf. p. iii.

He was never suspected—in the least degree to dissimile his own opinions or thoughts, how ingrateful soever it often proved.

Ld. Clarendon, Life, i. 68.

INGRA'TEFULLY.* adv. [from ingrat.]

Ungratefully; without gratitude.

Sir Robert Carew, her near kinsman, and whose family and himself she (Queen Elizabeth) had raised from the degree of a mean gentleman to high honour in title and place, most ingrate- fully did catch at her last breath, to carry it to the rising sun then in Scotland.

Sir A. Weldon, Court of King James, p. 2.

INGRA'TEFULNESS.* n. s. [from ingrat.]

Unthankfulness.

INGRA'TELY.* adv. [from ingrate.] Un-gratefully.

Not may we woeher or forget, ingrately,

The heaven of silver that was sent but lately

From Ferdinand, &c.

Schwyter, Du Bart. 1621, p. 135.

TO INGRA'TIATE† v. a. [in and gratia,

Lat.]

1. To put in favour; to recommend to kindness. It has with before the person whose favour is sought, Dr. Johnson says; and accordingly the examples, which he gives, are only of ingratiate with. Hammond and Scott use it also with to.

They will be fit helms for such hatchets:—to humour them, and ingratiate themselves.

Bp. Richardson on the O. Test. (1655.) p. 503.

They endeavour, with all manner of address, to render their company acceptable and diverting; so when they have thus ingratiated themselves,

if you speak of any of our books or devices, they will with a slighting accent tell you, they are not worth their minding.

The Missionary, Art. Discovered, (1688.) p. 18.

The managers make, who would ingratiate themselves with their sovereign than promote his real service, accommodate his counsels to his inclinations. Spectator.

2. To recommend; to render easy; applied to things.

What difficulty would it not ingratiate to us?

Hammond, Works, iv. 564.

When once we come to feel the good effects of those duties in our natures, how fast our lusts do decline, our dispositions mend, and all our graces improve: In the use of them, the sense of this will mightily endear and ingratiate them to us. Scott, Christian Verb. i. 4.

INGRA'TIATING.* n. s. [from verb.]

Recommendation; the act of putting in favour.

Those have been far from receiving the rewards of such ingratiating with the people. King Charles.
Which had been a very great indolence and ingratiating to women of greatest quality.

Bp. Taylor, Arif. Handson. p. 176.

INGRA'TITUDE† n. s. [ingratitude, French;

and gratitude. It is not often used in the plural. Nor has Dr. Johnson given an example of it in that number.

Shakspere affords one.] Retribution of evil for good; unthankful-

ness.

Ingratitude! thou marble-hearted fiend,

More hideous, when thou show'st thee in a child,

Than the sea monster. Shakspere, A. Lear.

Time hath, my friend, a walk at his back,

Wherein he puts aims for oblivion,

A great-sid'd monster of ingratitude.

Shakspere, Tr. and Cress.

Ingratitude is abhorred both by God and man, and vengeance attends those that repay evil for good. L'Estrange.

Nor was it with ingratitude return'd

In equal fires the blissful couple burn'd;

One joy possess'd 'em both, and in one grief they mour'd. Dryden.

TO INGRA'VE.* v. a. [from grave.] To bury. See the fourth sense of TO ENGRAVE.

Thy corps, as in the custom old,

With thy forefathers doth not lie ingrave'd.

Campan, Rhyer. (1615.) sign. C. 5.

TO INGRA'VIDATE.* v. a. [gravitatus, Latin.] To imprecate; to make prolifick.

They may be so pregnant and ingravitated with lustful thoughts, that they may as it were die in travail, because they cannot be delivered.

Fuller, Holy State, p. 35.

TO INGRE'AT† v. a. [from great.] To make great.

It appeareth, that there is, in all things, a desire to dilate and to ingreat themselves.

Fotherley, Alchem. (1692.) p. 174.

As some are gentle and benign, so some others, to ingreat themselves, might strain more than the strong will bear.

Abp. Aldrich, Speech in Rushworth's Collect. v. 455.

INGRE'DIENT. n. s. [ingredient, French;

ingrediens, Latin.]

1. Component part of a body, consisting of different materials. It is commonly used of the simples of a medicine.

The element is made of divers ingredients, whereof the hardest to come by is the moss upon the skull of a dead man unburied. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

So deep the power of these ingredients pierc'd,

Even to the inmost seat of mental sight,

That Adam, now enforc'd to shut his eyes,

Sunk down, and all his spirits became extanc'd.

By this way of analysis we may proceed from compounds to ingredients, and from motions to the forces producing them; and in general, from effects to their causes, and from particular causes to more general ones, till the argument end in the more general.

I have often wonder'd, that learning is not thought a proper ingredient in the education of a woman of quality or fortune. Addison, Guardian.

Pure, knowledge, and experience, are excellent ingredients in a public character. Boswell.

Water is the chief ingredient in all the animal fluids and solids. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. It is used by Temple with into, properly, but not according to custom.

Spleen is a bad ingredient into any other distemper. Temple.

INGRESS. n. s. [ingressus, Latin.] Entrance; power of entrance; intromission.

All putrefactions come from the ambient body; either by ingress of the substance of the ambient body into the body putrefied; or else by excitation of the body putrefied by the body ambient.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

These air bladders, by a sudden subsidence, meet again by the ingress and egress of the air.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

INGRESSIO. n. s. [ingressio, French; ingressio, Latin.] The act of entering; entrance.

The fire would strain the pores of the glass too suddenly, and break it all in pieces to get ingressio.

Digby on Alchem.

INGUINAL. adj. [inguinal, French; inguen, Latin.] Belonging to the groin.

The plague seems to be a particular disease, characterized with eruptions in buboes, by the inflammation and suppuration of the axillary, inguinal, and other glands.

Arbutnot.

TO INGU'LF. v. a. [in and gulf. See TO ENGULF.]

1. To swallow up in a vast profundity.

Southward through Eden went a river large,
Nor chang'd his course, but through the sloughy bill

Past'd underneath ingulf'd.

Milton, P. L.

Him who discov'ry:
Me discloses, breaks union, and that day,
Cast out from God and blessed vision, falls
Into utter darkness deep ingulf'd.

Milton, P. L.

The river flows redundant;

Then rowling back, in his capacious lap

Ingulfs their whole militia, quick immerst.

Philo.

2. To cast into a gulf.

If we adjoin to the lords, whom they prevail or not, we ingulf ourselves into assured danger.

Hayward.

That we ingulf not ourselves too deeply in the businesses and pleasures of this life.

Dr. Hopkins, Exp. on the Lord's Pr. §c. p. 264.

TO INGU'RGITATE. v. a. [ingurgiter, Fr.; ingurgito, Latin.]

1. To swallow down.

Ingurgitating sometimes whole half glasses.

Cleveland Poems, §c. p. 112.

2. To plunge into; to engulf.

If a man do but see his appetite upon it, [pleasure], let him ingurgitate himself never so deep into it, yet shall he never be able to fill his desire with it.

Fotherby, Alchem. (1694), p. 306.

TO INGU'RGITATE. v. n. To drink largely; to swig.

Nothing pesters the body and mind sooner, than to be still fed, to eat and ingurgitate beyond all measure, as many do.

Burton, Anat. of Med. p. 235.

INGURGITATION. n. s. [from ingurgitare.] The act of immoderate swallowing.

Inconveniences always do happen by ingurgitation and excessive feedings.

Sir F. Ebor, Gov. fol. 191.

Too much abstinence turns vice, and too much ingurgitation is one of the seven, and at once destroys both nature and grace.

Dr. Hall, Of Contention, § 13.

INGU'NSTABLE. adj. [in and gusto, Latin.]

Not perceptible by the taste.

As for their taste, if the camelion's nutriment be air, neither can the tongue be an instrument thereof; for the body of the element is inguinstable, void of all sapidity, and without any action of the tongue, it, by the rosy artery, or wizen, conducted into the lungs.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

INHABILE. adj. [inhabile, French; inhabile, Latin.] Unskilful; unready; unfit; unequalled.

INHABIL'ITY. n. s. [inhabilité, French; "disability, insufficiency, weakness, &c." Cotgrave.] Unskilfulness.

Whatever evil blind ignorance, — inhability, unwieldiness, and confusion of thoughts beget, wisdom prevents.

Burton, Serm. i.

TO INHA'BIT. v. a. [habito, Latin.] To dwell in; to hold as a dweller.

Not all are partakers of that grace, whereby
Christ inhabiteth whom he saveth.

Hooker.

They shall build houses and inhabit therein.

Isaiah, lvi. 21.

She shall be *inhabit*ed of devils.

Barnes, Serm. i. 35.

TO INHA'BIT. v. n. To dwell; to live.

Learn what creatures there inhabit.

Milton, P. L.

They say, wild beasts inhabit here;

But grief and wrong secure my fear.

Walker.

INHABITABLE. adj. [from inhabit.]

1. Capable of affording habitation.

All which live

In the inhabitable world.

Donne, Poems, p. 263.

The fixed stars are all of them suns, with systems of inhabitable planets moving about them.

Lodge.

2. [Inhabitable, French.] Incapable of inhabitants; not habitable; uninhabitable.

Not in use, Dr. Johnson says, citing Shakespeare. Formerly this was the sole explanation of the word in our old lexicography. And so Ben Jonson and others used it. The earliest use of the preceding and present sense of the word
Dr. Johnson assigns to Locke; but Donne, half a century before him, so employed it.

The frozen ridges of the Alps,

Or any other ground inhabitable.

Shakspeare, Rich. II.

INHABITANCE. n. s. [from inhabit.] Residence of dwellers.

So the ruins yet resting in the wild moors, testify a former inhabitation.

Corbett, Serv. of Cornwall.

No promise of inhabitation; neither track of beast, nor foot of man. We have searched all this rocky desert.

Burton, and Pl. Sen. Voyages.

INHABITANT. n. s. [from inhabit.] Dweller;

one that lives or resides in a place.

In this place they report that they saw inhabitants, which were very fair and fat people.

Abbot.

If the fervour of the sun were the sole cause of blackness in any land of regions, it were also reasonable that inhabitants of the same latitude, subjected into the same vicinity of the sun, should also partake of the same hue.

Brown.

Lays his supposed love a third

For's given held upon a bird.

And stands am'd' to find his dear

A wild inhabitant of the air.

Walker.

What happier natures shrink at with affright,

The hard inhabitant contends is right.

Pope.

INHABITATION. n. s. [from inhabit.]

1. Abode; place of dwelling.

None call you it, or universal ground,

As if the whole inhabitation perish'd!

Milton, S. A.

2. The act of inhabiting, or planting with dwellings; state of being inhabited.

By knowing this place we shall the better judge of the beginning of nations, and of the world's inhabitation.

Baleg.

The inhabitation of the Holy Ghost snaketh a temple, as we are informed by the Apostle, "What, know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you?"

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 8.

3. Quantity of inhabitants.

We shall rather admire how the earth contained its inhabitation than doubt it.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

INHABITER. n. s. [from inhabit.] One that inhabits; a dweller.

We too to the inhabiters of the earth. Rev. viii. 13.
The same name is given unto the inhabiters, or midland inhabiters, of this island.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

They ought to understand, that there is not only some *inhabit*er in this divine house, but also some ruler.

Jerham.

INHABITRESS. n. s. [from inhabit.] A female inhabitant.

O inhabitant of the fortress, [in the margin,
inhabitress.]

Jerem. s. 17.

Those inhabiters of Saphir, [in the margin, inhabitress.]

Micah, i. 11.

The church here called the inhabitress of the gardens.

By. Richardson on the O. Test. (1655), p. 350.

TO INHA'NE. See TO ENHA'NE.

TO INHA'LE. v. a. [inhale, Latin.] To draw in with air; to inspire; opposed to exhale or expire.

Martin was walking forth to inhale the fresh breeze of the evening.

Arbutnot and Pope.

But from the breezy deep the best inhale

The fragrant murmurs of the western gale.

Pope, Ode on the

There sits the shepherd on the grassy turf,
inhaling the balmy breeze of the evening.

Thomson.

INHARMONICAL. adj. [in and harmoni-cal.] Discordant. A term in music.

INHARMONIOUS. adj. [in and harmonious.]

Unmusical; not sweet of sound.

Castells, though his lines be rough, and his numbers inharmounious, I could recommend for the softness and delicacy, but must decline for the looseness, of his thought.

Falcon.

The identity of sound may appear a little inharmonious, and shock the ear.

Brown.

TO INH'E'RE. v. n. [inhæreo, Latin.] To exist in something else.

For, nor in nothing, nor in things
Extreme, and scattering bright, can love inhære.

Donne, Poems, p. 17.

They do but inhære in their subject which supports them; their being is a dependence on a subject.

Digby on Medics.

INH'E'RENCE. n. s. [from inherent.] EX-

INH'E'RENCE. } instance in something else, so as to be inseparable from it; conjunction.

The gift of tongues, after its first infusion by the Spirit, might be in a man by habitual inhærence, as a standing principle or power residing in the soul, and enabling it, upon any occasion, to express itself in several languages.

South, Serm. iii. § 15.

The immensity and inhærence of this power in Jesus, is evident in this, that he was able to communicate it to whom he pleased.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 2.

It is I that am pleased with beholding his gayety, and the gay man in his greatest brevity is only pleased because I am pleased with the sight, so borrowing his little and imaginary complacency from the delight that I have, not from any inhærence of his own possession.

Dr. Taylor, Serm. xviii.

INH'E'RENT. adj. [inherent, Fr. inherens, Latin.]

1. Existing in something else; so as to be inseparable from it.

I will not do't.

Let I surcease to honour mine own truth;

And by my body's action teach my mind

A most inherent baseness.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

2. Naturally conjoined; innate; inborn.

I mean not the authority which is annexed to your office: I speak of that only which is inborn and inherent to your person. Dryden, Jun.

The power of drawing iron is one of the ideas of a load-stone; and a power to be so drawn is a part of the complex one of iron; which powers pass for inherent qualities. Locke.

Animal oil is various according to principles inherent in it. Aristoteli on Alimenta.

They will be sure to decide in favour of themselves, and talk much of their inherent right. Swift.

The idea of such modes can no more be subsistent than the idea of redness was just now found to be inherent in the blood, or that of distinctness in the brain. Bentley.

The obligations we are under of distinguishing ourselves as much by an inherent and habitual, as we are already distinguished by an external and relative holiness. Bentley.

INHERENTLY,* adv. [from inherent.] By inherence.

They may assert, that matter hath inherently and essentially such an internal energy. Bentley, Serm. vii.

TO INHERIT.† v. a. [enheriter, French.]

1. To receive or possess by inheritance. Treason is not inherited, my lord. Shakespeare.

Why all delights are vain; but that most vain, Which, with pain purchas'd, doth inherit pain. Shakespeare.

Prince Harry is valiant; for the cold blood he did naturally inherit of his father he hath, like him, steeled land, measured with excellent good store of fertile sterility. Shakespeare.

Blended are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth. St. Mat. v. 5.

The son can receive from his father good things; without enquire, that was voted in him for the good of others; and therefore the son cannot claim or inherit it, by a title, which is founded wholly on his own private good. Locke.

We must know how the first ruler, from whom any one claims, came by his authority, before we can say who has a right to succeed him in it, and inherit it from him. Locke.

Unwilling to sell an estate he had some prospect of inheriting, he formed delays. Addison.

2. To possess; to obtain possession of; in Shakespeare. Not used.

This, or else nothing, will inherit her. Shakespeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

He, that had wit, would think that I had none, To bury so much gold under a tree, And never after to inherit it. Titus Andronicus.

INHERITABLE,† adj. [from inherit.] Transmissible by inheritance; obtainable by succession.

A kind of inheritable estate accrued unto them. Carew.

By the ancient laws of the realm, they were not inheritable to him by descent. Heywood.

Was the power the same, and from the same original in Moses as it was in David? And was it inheritable in one and not in the other? Locke.

INHERITABLY,* adv. [from inheritable.] By inheritance. Sherwood.

INHERITANCE, n. s. [from inherit.] 1. Patrimony; hereditary possession.

When the son dies, let the inheritance. Descend unto the daughter. Shakespeare, Hen. v.

Is there yet any portion or inheritance for us in our father's house? Gen. xxi. 14.

Oh dear, unhappy babe! must I beguile thee Only a sad inheritance? woe? Cowley's, cruel gods! can't all my pains atone, Unless they reach my infant's guiltless head? Swift.

2. The reception of possession by hereditary right.

Men are not proprietors of what they have merely for themselves, their children have a title to part of it, which comes to be wholly theirs, when death has put an end to their parents' use of it; and this we call inheritance. Locke.

5. In Shakespeare, possession. You will rather show our general loves

How you can crown, than spend a fawn upon them, For the inheritance of their loves, and safeguard Of what that want might ruin. Shakespeare, Coriol.

INHERITOR, n. s. [from inherit.] An heir; one who receives any thing by succession.

You, like a litcher, out of whorish lous. Are pleas'd to breed out your inheritance. Shakespeare.

The very conveyance of his lands will hardly lie in this box; and must the inferior himself have no more? Shakespeare.

Marriage, without consent of parents they do not make void, but they must it in the inheritance; for the children of such marriages are not admitted to inherit above a third part of their parents' inheritance. Bacon, New Atlantis.

INHERITRESS, n. s. [from inherit.] An heirress; a woman that inherits.

He had given artificially some hopes to marry Anne, inheritress to the duchy of Bretagne. Bacon, Hen. VII.

INHERITRIX,† n. s. [from inherit.] An heirress. This is now more commonly used, though inheritress be a word more analogically English. Dr. Johnson.—

The word had formerly also a kind of form between both, viz. inheritrix: "Both queens of Scotland, regent and inheritrix in our days." Proceedings against Garnet and the late traitors, 1606, sign. E. s. 4. b.

No female Should be inheritrix in Salique land. Shakespeare, Hen. F.

The foul inheritrix of the degs of wrath. Beaumont, Pygmal. ix. 52.

TO INHIRE, v. a. [in and hired.] To enclose in a funeral monument.

See, where he lies, inhired in the arms Of the most bloody curser of his harms. Shakspeare.

INHIREN,† n. s. [inhirens, Latin.] Inherence; the state of existing in something else.

Neither was this [the gift of prophecy and foretelling future events], in the soul by constant inhesion and habitual abode; but, as we may not easily express it, only by sudden strictures, by transient immissions, and representations of the ideas of things future, to the imagination. In a word, it was in the mind not as an inhabitant, but as a guest. South, Serm. iii. 416.

And for a like reason, activity and perceptivity, by which powers alone we discover that there is a substance different from matter, and which is the necessary subject of their inhesion, must be in the mind. Butler on the Soul, l. 928.

INHIREN,† n. s. [inhirens, Latin.] A gaping after; a great desire.

An inhirens after obscure lusts. By. Hall, Hist. of the Marr. Clav. p. 94.

TO INHIBIT, v. a. [inhibeo, Lat. inhibere, French.]

1. To restrain; to hinder; to repress; to check.

Holding of the breath does help somewhat to cease the hicough; and vinegar put to the nostrils or gurgled, doth it also, for that it is astringent, and inhibeth the motion of the spirits. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The stars and planets being whirled about with great velocity, would suddenly, did nothing inhibit, be shattered in pieces. Ray on the Creation.

Their motions also are excited and inhibited, are moderated and managed by the objects without them. Bentley, Serm. ii.

2. To prohibit; to forbid. All men were inhibited by proclamation, at the dissolution, so much as to mention a parliament. Clarendon.

Burial may not be inhibited or denied to any one. Ayliffe.

INHIBITION,† n. s. [inhibition, Fr. inhibition, Lat.]

1. Restraint; hindrance. This litigation of senses proceeds from an inhibition of spirits, the way being stopped up by which they should come. Burton, Anat. of Med. p. 24.

2. Prohibition; embargo. He might be judged to have imposed an envious inhibition on it, because himself has not stuck enough to maintain the trade. Gen. of the Tongue.

3. [In law.] Inhibition is a writ to inhibit or forbid a judge from farther proceeding in the cause depending before him. Inhibition is most commonly a writ issuing out of a higher court Christian to a lower and inferior, upon an appeal; and prohibition out of the king's court to a court Christian, or to an inferior temporal court. Comel.

The decrees and injunctions of my lord cardinal of London. Bde, Yet a Course, &c. (1543), fol. 19. b.

No inhibition shall be granted out of any court belonging to the archbishops of Canterbury, at the instance of any party, unless it be subscribed by an advocate practising in the said court. Const. and Canon. Eccl. 96.

TO INHIVE,* v. a. [from hive.] To put into a hive. Colgrave, and Sherwood.

TO INHOLD, v. a. [in and hold.] To have inherent; to contain in itself.

It is disputed, whether this light first created be the same which the sun inholds and catcheth forth, or whether it had continuance any longer than till the sun's creation. Raleigh.

TO INHOOP,* v. a. [in and hoop.] To confine in an enclosure. His quills ever Beat mine inhook'd at odds. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

INHOOSPITABLE,† adj. [in and hospitable.] Affording no kindness nor entertainment to strangers.

All places else Inhospitable appear, and desolate; Nor knowing us, nor known. Milton, P. L.

(Since tons'd from shores to shores, from lands to lands, Inhospitable rocks, and barren sands. Dryden, Virg.

INHOOSPITABLY,† adv. [from inhospitable.] Unkindly.

Of guests, to make them slaves Inhospitably, and kill their infant males. Milton, P. L.

INHOOSPITABLENESS,† n. s. [in and hospitable.] Inhospitability.

Want of hospitality; want of courtesy to strangers. Their inhospitability is punishment enough to itself; they have lost the honour and happiness of being host to their God. Bp. Hall, Contempl. Birth of Christ.

These rude laws have had the dust of his feet shaken against them for their inhumanities.

Henry, Seren. p. 79. (1659).

INHUMAN.† adj. [inhumanus, Fr.; inhumanus, Lat.] There is now no distinction observed between inhuman and inhumane. Formerly it was inhumane, with the accent on the last syllable. See the citations from Marston and Goodman, under INHUMANLY. Barbarous; savage; cruel; uncompassionate.

A just war may be prosecuted after a very unjust manner; by perfidious breaches of our word, by inhuman cruelties, and by assassinations.

Atterbury.

The more these praises were enlarged, the more inhuman was the punishment, and the sufferer more innocent.

Princes and peers attend! while we impart To you the thoughts of no inhuman heart.

Pope, Odyssey.

INHUMANITY. n. s. [inhumanité, Fr.; from inhuman.] Cruelty; savageness; barbarity.

Love which lover hurts is inhumanity. Sidney. The rudeness of those who must make up their want of justice with inhumanity and impudence.

King Charles.

Each social feeling fell, And joyless inhumanity pervades, And petrifies the heart. Thomson, Spring.

INHUMANLY.† adv. [from inhuman.] Savagely; cruelly; barbarously.

No law, no Turk would use a Christian So inhumanly as this Puritan.

Marston, Sat. ii. (1598).

O what are these Death's ministers, not men; who thus deal death inhumanly to men; and multiply Ten thousand fold the sin of him who slew His brother! Milton, P. L.

We may assure ourselves, that whatsoever pretends to be a divine law, and can be made to appear to be inhumanly rigorous, or intolerably difficult to be observed, is either no law of his, or at the least is not rightly interpreted.

Goodman, Wint. Ec. Conf. P. iii. (ed. 1790.) p. 317. I, who have established the whole system of all true politeness and refinement in conversation, think most inhumanly treated by my countrymen.

Swift.

INHUMANATION. n. s. [inhumatio, Fr.; inhumatio, Lat. from inhumare.] A burying; sepulture.

The solitary prize that which is the proper possession of the dead, a good name, and hope to be famous after their inhumation.

Waterhouse, Apology for Learning, (1653.) p. 194. It [Robert's Silence] is probably not funeral; for some years ago its area, which is without tumulus, was examined to a considerable depth by digging, and no marks of inhumation appeared.

Watson, Hist. of Kidlington, p. 61.

To INHUMATE.† v. a. [inhumer, Fr.; To INHUME.† inhumo, Lat.] To bury; to inter.

We took notice of an old-conceited tomb, which inhumed a harmless shepherd.

Sp. T. Herberti, Tran. p. 196. Inhumed the natives in their native plain.

Pope, Odyssey.

To INJECT.† v. a. [injectus, Lat.] 1. To throw in; to dart in.

Good thoughts are injected into us by the Holy Spirit. Sp. Hall, Rem. p. 147. Angels inject thoughts into our minds, and know our cogitations. Glanville.

2. To throw up; to cast up.

Though bold in open field, they yet surround The town with walls, and mound inject on round.

Pope, Odyssey.

INJECTION.† n. s. [injection, Fr.; injectio, Lat.]

1. The act of casting in. Those good injections must be received, embraced, delighted in, and followed home in a constant and habitual practice.

Sp. Hall, Rem. p. 147.

If we be watchful presently to abhor and reject these injections of Satan, and to cast back into his face these his fiery darts which he shoots into our souls; they are not our sins, though they are our troubles. Sp. Houghton, Epist. on the Lord's Prayer, p. 129. This salt powdered was, by the repeated injection of well kindled charcoal, made to flash like melted nitre.

Dryde.

2. Any medicine made to be injected by a syringe, or any other instrument, into any part of the body. Quincy.

3. The act of filling the vessels with wax, or any other proper matter, to shew their shapes and ramifications, often done by anatomists. Quincy.

INIMAGINABLE.† adj. [inimaginable, Fr. Cotgrave.] Inconceivable.

In this sense two prime causes are inimaginable; and for all things to depend of one, and to be more independent beings than one, is a clear contradiction. Flower on the Creed, art. 1.

INIMICALLY.† adj. [inimicus, Lat.] Unfriendly; unkind; hurtful; hostile; adverse. A modern word; and one of the few inserted into Dr. Johnson's Dictionary after his death. I think he has somewhere used the word himself.

Associations in defence of the existing power of the sovereign, are not in their spirit, inimical to the constitution.

Brand, Ess. on Polit. Associations, (1796).

INIMITABILITY. n. s. [from inimitable.] Incapacity to be imitated.

Truths must have an eternal existence in some understanding; or rather they are the same with that understanding itself, considered as variously representative, according to the various modes of inimitability or participation. Norris.

INIMITABLE.† adj. [inimitabilis, Lat.; inimitable, Fr.] Above imitation; not to be copied. Dr. Johnson's earliest example is from Milton. Drayton, long before Milton, has employed it; and the passage evidently attracted the notice, as indeed it well deserves, of Dryden, who has used the remarkable expression of "imitate, inimitable," which it presents.

[He] sitting in the silent shade, When his fair flock to rest themselves were laid On his lyre tuned such harmonious lays, That the birds perch'd upon the tender spray, Mad at his music, strain themselves so much To imitate the inimitable touch, Breaking their hearts; that they have dropt to ground, And diol grief, in snailing the sound.

The portal shone, inimitable on earth. By model, or by shading pencil, drawn.

Milton, P. L.

What is most excellent is most inimitable, Denham.

And imitate the inimitable force. Dryden. Virgil copied the ancient sculptors, in that inimitable description of military fury in the temple of Jausus. Addison, on Anc. Metals.

INIMITABLE.† adv. [from inimitable.] In a manner not to be imitated; to a degree of excellence above imitation.

A man could not have been always blind who thus inimitably copies nature. Pope, Ess. on Homer.

Thus terribly adorn'd the figures shine, Pope. Inimitably wrought with skill divine. Chaucer such as thine, inimitably great. Brown.

To INJOIN.† v. a. [enjoindre, Fr.; injungo, Lat.]

1. To command; to enforce by authority. See TO ENJOIN.

Laws do not only teach what is good, but they injoin it; they have in them a certain constraining force. Hooker.

This garden tend, our pleasant task injoin'd. Milton, P. L.

2. In Shakspeare, to join. Not used. The Otonites Steering with due course towards the isle of Rhodes.

Have these injoin'd them with a fleet. Shakspeare.

INQUITOUS.† adj. [iniquus, Fr.; from iniquus.] Unjust; wicked.

INQUIT.† n. s. [iniquitas, Lat.; iniquit, Fr.]

1. Injustice; unrighteousness. There is a greater or less probability of an happy issue to a tedious war, according to the righteousness or iniquity of the cause for which it was commenced. Smolvidge.

2. Wickedness; crime. Want of the knowledge of God is the cause of all iniquity amongst men. Hooker.

Wearied with their iniquities, withdrew His presence from among them. Milton, P. L.

INIQUEOUS.† adj. [iniquus, Lat.] Unjust.

He is not strictly mistaken in the equality of sins, nor commutatively iniquus in the value of transgressions; but weigh them in the scales of heaven, and by the weights of righteousness reason. Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 19. Whatever is done through unequal affection is iniquus, wicked, and wrong. Shakspeare, Eng. concerning Virtue.

To INISLE.† v. a. [from isle.] To encircle; to surround. An old word, which Dyer revived.

Inisled his arms, he clips her for his own. Drayton, of the Isle of Orney and the River Rother, Pd. S. 18.

An easy coast, and pestilential ill Diffuse wide. Dyer.

INITIAL.† adj. [initial, Fr.; initialis, from initium, Lat.]

1. Placed at the beginning. In the editions, which had no more than the initial letters of names, he was made by Keys to hurt the inoffensive. Pope.

2. Incipient; not complete. Moderate labour of the body conduces to the preservation of health, and cures many initial diseases; but the toil of the mind destroys health, and generates maladies. Harvey.

The schools have used a middle term to express their affinity, and have called it the initial finis of God. Boga.

INITIALLY.† adv. [from initial.] In an incipient degree.

Our Lord did initially and in part exercise those functions upon earth. Barnes, vol. ii. S. 31.

To INITIATE.† v. a. [initior, Fr.; initio, Lat.]

1. To enter; to instruct in the rudiments of an art; to place in a new state; to put into a new society.

Providence would only initiate mankind into the useful knowledge of her treasures, leaving the rest to employ our industry.

More, Ansd. against Atheism.
To initiate his pupil in any part of learning, an ordinary skill in the governor is enough.

Locke on Education.
He was initiated into half a dozen clubs before he was one and twenty.
No sooner was a convert initiated, but, by an easy figure, he became a new man. Addison.

2. To begin upon.

Many secret designs only initiated then, and not executed till long after.

Ld. Clarendon, Life, iii. 551.

TO INITIATE. v. n. To do the first part; to perform the first rite.

The king himself initiated the pope's,
Scatters with quiv'ring hand the sacred flour,
And the stream sprinkles. Pope, Odyssey.

INITIATE† adj. [initie, Fr.; initiatus, Lat.]

1. Unpractised.

My strange and self-abuse
Is the initiate fear, that wants hard use :—
We are but young indeed. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

2. Newly admitted; fresh; like a novice.

To rise in science, as a novice, thus,
Initiate in the secrets of the skies! Young, Night Th. 6.

INITIATION† n. s. [initiatio, Lat. from initiate. Initiation was reckoned a new and uncouth word, in 1656, according to Heylin.] The reception, admission, or entrance of a new comer into any art or state.

The ground of initiating or entering men into Christian life, is more or less circumstantially completed in the form of baptism, the ceremony of this initiation instituted by Christ. Hammond.
Silence is the first thing that is taught us on our initiation into sacred mysteries.

INITIATORY.* adj. [from initiate.] Introductory.

He hath gotten to himself some insight in things ordinarily incident, and controverted, by experience, by reading some initiatory treatises in the law. Herbert, Country Parson, ch. 23.
It being the initiation rite of their religion.

INITIATORY.* n. s. [from initiate.] Introductory rite.

Baptism is a constant initiatory of the proselyte. L. Addison, State of the Jews, p. 67.

INITIATION.* n. s. [old French, initon; Lat. initium.] Beginning.

Here I note the initiation of my lord's friendship with Montjoy.
Newman, Fragm. Regal. Ld. Essex.

INJUNCTIVELY† n. s. [in and junctivity.] Unpleasantness.

Unpleasantness.

INJUNCTABLE. adj. [in and judico, Lat.] Not cognizable by a judge.

INJUNCTIAL. adj. [in and judicial.] Not according to form of law. Dict.

INJUNCTICIOUS. adj. [in and judicium.] Void of judgment; without judgements.

Used both of persons and things.
A philosopher would either think use in jest, or very injuncticous, if I took the earth for a body regular in itself, if compared with the rest of the universe. Burnet.

A sharp wit may find something in the wisest man, whereby to expose him to the contempt of injuncticous people. Tillotson.

INJUNCTIOUSLY. adv. [from injuncticous.] With ill judgement; not wisely.

Scaliger injuncticously condemns this description.

INJUNCTICIOUSNESS.* n. s. [from injuncticous.] Want of judgement.

In the sisterhood of fancy, Musick may justly challenge a birthright, and the Painting being but younger sisters to Poetry; a ternary of sisters, whether rich, or poor, that stoop not to inferior souls, whose dulness loses their delight in this second, and injuncticousness blinds their wonder or liking of the third.

Whitlock, Mann. of the Engl. p. 480.

INJUNCTION. n. s. [from injoin; injunctus, injuncto, Latin.]

1. Command; order; precept.
The institution of God's law is described as being established by solemn injunction. Hosker.

My duty cannot suffer
T' obey in all your daughter's hard commands;
Though the injunction be to bar my doors,
And let this tyrannous night take hold upon you. Shakespeare.

For, still they knew; and ought to have still remembered
The high injunction, not to taste that fruit,
Whenever tempted. Milton, P. L.

The ceremonies of the church are necessary as the injunctions of lawful authority, the practice of the primitive church, and the general rules of decency. South.

2. [In law.] Injunction is an interlocutory decree out of the chancery, sometimes to give possession unto the plaintiff for want of appearance in the defendants, sometimes to the king's ordinary court, and sometimes to the court-christian, to stay proceeding. Croft.

TO INJURE. v. a. [injuriar, Fr. injuria, Latin.]

1. To hurt unjustly; to mischief undeservedly; to wrong.

They injure by chance in a crowd, and without a design; then late always whom they have once injured. Temple.

Forgiveness to the injur'd does belong;
But they ne'er pardon who commit the wrong. Dryden.

2. To annoy; to affect with any inconvenience.

Least heat should injure us, his timely care
Hath unbought provided. Milton, P. L.

INJURER. n. s. [from injure.] One that hurts another unjustly; one who wrongs another.

All needs are well turn'd back upon their authors;
And 'gainst an injurer, the revenge is just. B. Jonson.

The upright judge will countenance right, and discountenance wrong, whoever be the injurer or the sufferer.

INJURIOUS. adj. [from injure; injuriar, Lat. injuriose, Fr.]

1. Unjust; invasive of another's rights.

Till the injurious Roman did extort
This tribute from us, we were free. Shaks. Cymb.
Injurious strength would rapine still excuse,
By off'ring terms the weaker must refuse. Dryden.

2. Guilty of wrong or injury.

Yet beauty, though injurious, hath strange power,
After offence returning, to regain Love once possess'd. Milton, S. A.

Mischievous; unjustly hurtful.

Our repentance is not real, because we have not done what we can to undo our faults, or at least to hinder the injurious consequences of it from proceeding. Tillotson.

4. Detractory; contumelious; reproachfully; wrongful.

A prison, indeed injurious, because a prison, but else well testifying affection, because in all respect as commodious as a prison can be. Sidney.

It is natural for a man, by directing his prayers to an image, to suppose the being he prays to represented by that image; which here injures, how contumelious must it be to the glorious nature of God? South.

If injurious appellations were of any advantage to a cause, what appellations would those deserve who endeavour to sow the seeds of sedition? Swift.

INJURIOUSLY. adv. [from injuriar.] Wrongfully; hurtfully with injustice, with contumely.

Nor ought he to neglect the vindication of his character, when it is injuriously attacked. Pope and Gay.

INJURIOUSNESS. n. s. [from injuriar.] Quality of being injurious.

Some miscarriages might escape, rather through sudden necessities of state, than any propensity either to injuriousness or oppression. King Charles.

INJURY. n. s. [injuria, Lat. injure, Fr.]

1. Hurt without justice.
The places were acquired by just title of victory, and therefore in keeping of them no injury was offered. Hogwood.

Riot ascends above their loftiest towers,

2. Mischief; detriment.

Many times we do injury to a cause, by dwelling upon trifling arguments. Watts, Logic.

3. Amoyance.

Great injuries mice and rats do in the fields. Mortimer.

4. Contumelious language; reproachful appellation. A French mode of speech.

Not now in use.
Custom of the respects fit to be continued between great kings, he felt to bitter invectives against the French king; and spoke all the injuries he could devise of Charles. Bacon.

INJUSTICE. n. s. [injusticie, Fr. injustitia, Lat.] Iniquity; wrong.

Cunning men can be guilty of a thousand injustices without being discovered, or at least without being punished. Swift.

INK. n. s. [encre, Fr. inchiostro, Italian.]

1. The black liquor with which men write.
Most boldly try ink; for while she looks upon you, your blackness will shine. Sidney.

O! she's fallen
Into a pit of ink, that the wide seas
Hath dross too few to wash her clean again. Shaks.

Like madmen they built stoves and ink. B. Jonson.

Intending to have try'd
The silver favour which you gave,
In ink the shining point I try'd.
And drench'd it in the white wave. Waller.

Vitriol is the active or chief ingredient in ink, and no other salt will strike the colour with galls. Brown.

I have found pens blacked almost all over when I had a while carried them about me in a silver ink case. Boyle.

The secretary poured the ink box all over the writings, and so defaced them. Hovell, Ess. For.
He finger what live clear of any stain by his finger upon his mouth, and keep his hand out of the ink pot. L'Ettranger.

TO INK. v. a. [from the noun.] To black or daub with ink: as, his face is all over inked.

INKHORN.† n. s. [ink and horn, Dr. Johnson: who also, in his definition of the word, says that it is a case commonly made of horn. But "words ending in erne, eron, are derived from the Saxon ern, erun, a secret place to put any thing in. Hence comes ink-ern, i. e. a little vessel into which we put ink, for which we corruptly write ink-horn, as bishop Gibson has very justly remarked." (Greenwood, Eng. Gr. 2d edit. 1722, p. 212.) A portable case for the instruments of writing.

Bid him bring his pen and inkhorn to the jail; we are now to examine those men. Shakespeare.

One man among them was clothed with linen, with a writer's inkhorn by his side. Lock ix. 2.

What is more frequent than to say a silver inkhorn? Greene.

INKHORN.* adj. A reproachful epithet of elder times, meaning affected, pedantic, or pompous. Bishop Hall adopted inkhornisms to denote expressions of such a character.

Such are your inkhorn terms.

Bale, Yet a Course, &c. (1543.) fol. 59. b.

I would wish that such usual words as we English be acquainted with might still remain in their form and sound, so far as the Hebrew will bear; inkhorn terms to be avoided.

By. Col. to Alty. Parker, Stowe's Parker, p. 208.

See that we will suffer such a price,— To be disgraced by an inkhorn mate.

We, and our wives, and children, all will fight. Shakespeare, Hen. VII. Pt. I.

INKINESS.* n. s. [from ink]. Blackness. Sherwood.

INKLE. n. s. A kind of narrow fillet; a tape.

INN.† n. s. [inn, in, Saxon, a chamber, and also in the present sense an inn; Goth. an abode, a sojourning place. "Inn enim veteribus hospitium publicum, caputnam, significabat." Keyser, Antiq. Septentrion. p. 350. Yet, originally, inn meant merely a house or habitation; and not a place of public entertainment; to which latter meaning our old lexicography has well affixed the description of "a house of common ingoing."] 1. A chamber; a lodging; a house; a dwelling.

Get us fast into this inn
A knedding trough or ellie e kennel.
Chaucer, Mill. Tale.
Phabus with his fiery waine,
Unto his inn began to draw space.

Spenser, F. Q.
As they [the palm-tree and phoenix] sympathize much, the phoenix will lightly take up his inn no where else. Parthenia Sacra, (1635.) p. 151.

2. A house of entertainment for travellers.
How all this is but a fair inn,
Of fatter guests which dwell within. Sidney.

Palmer, quoth he, death is an equal doom
To good and bad, the common isen of rest;
But, after death, the trial is to come,
When best shall be to them that lived best.

Spenser, F. Q.
Now day is spent,
Therefore with me you may take up your inn.
Spenser, F. Q.

The west, that glimmers with some streaks of day,
Now spurs the latest traveller space
To gain the timely inn. Shakespeare, Mucheb.
But e pilgrims to the appointed place we tread;
The world's an inn, and death the journey's end.

From Sol, inn'd in the Bull, do kindly stream.
F. Fletcher, Plac. Ecl. v. 15.

INNATE.† adj. [inné, Fr. innatus, INNATED.] Lat.]

1. Inborn; ingenerate; natural; not superadded; not adscititious. Innated is not proper, Dr. Johnson observes, citing a passage from Howell; who indeed repeatedly uses it, in his Letters and in his Instructions for Foreign Travel. It is used also by the author of Parthenia Sacra, p. 156. 1633. The word innat ing also, for ingenerating or producing, was once in use; and in a passage of such forcible description, as induces me to give it; though the word will hardly be adopted.

Studious contemplation sucks the juice
From nature's cheeks, which making curious search
For wisdom's secrets, the First Innating Cause
Leads them to scorn, as man doth busy eyes
When they will any men.

INNA'VIOABLE.† adj. [innavigable, French; Cotgrave: by whom also the English word is used, as it is by Cockeram and Bullock: innavigabilis, Lat.] Not to be passed by sailing.
If you so hard a toll will undertake,
As twice to pass th' innavigable lake. Dryden, En.

INNER.† adj. [from in. Saxon innop. Formerly the superlative innerest, from this word, for innest, was used. "Thilke circle that is innerest or most within." Chaucer, Boeth. iv. pros. 6.] Interior; not outward.

But th' ellen knight with wonder all the way
Did feed his eyes, and fill'd his inner thought.

Spenser, F. Q.

This attracts the soul,
Governs the inner man, the nobler part;
That other o'er the body only reigns.

Milton, P. R.
Many families are established in the West Indies, and some discovered in the inner parts of America. Addison, Spect.

The kidney is a conglomerated gland, which is to be understood only of the outer part; for the inner part, whereof the papillae are composed, is muscular. Grew.

Thus, seiz'd with sacred fear, the monarch pray'd;
Then to his inner court the guests convey'd.

Pyg.

INNERLY.† adv. [from inner.] More within. Not in use. Barret.

INNERMOST.† adj. [from inner.] It seems less proper than innest.

1. Innest; deepest within.
The words of a talebearer are as wounds, and they go down into the innermost parts of the belly. Prov. xxi. 8.

2. Remotest from the outward part.
The reflected beam of light would be so broad at the distance of six feet from the speculum, where the rings appeared, as to obscure one or two of the innermost rings. Newton.

INNO'LDER.† n. s. [inn and hold.]

1. An inhabitant. See the primary sense of inn.
I do possess the world's most regiment,
As, if ye please it into parts divide,
And every party's innholders to consent,
Shall to your eyes appear incontinent.

Spenser, F. Q.

2. A man who keeps an inn; an inn-keeper.
You shall acquire whether bakers and brewers keep their assise, and whether as well they as butchers, inn-holders, and victuallers, do sell that which is wholesome. Bacon, Charge, &c. p. 19.

Be first inoculated, not the bodies.

B. Jonson, New Inn.

Thy stock is too much out of date.
For tender plants to inoculate. Cleveland.

2. To infect with the small pox by inoculation. See the second sense of INOCULATION.

The child once burnt dreads the fire; he runs away from the surgeon by whom he was inoculated.

Reid.

INOCULATION, † n. s. [inoculatio, Lat. from inoculate.]

1. The act of inserting the eye of a bud into another stock.

Inoculation is practised upon all sorts of stonefruit, and upon oranges and jasmynes. Chase a smooth part of the stock;

then with your knife make a horizontal cut across the rind of the stock, and from the middle of that cut make a slit downwards, about two inches in length in the form of a T; but be careful not to cut too deep, lest you wound the stock;

then having cut off the leaf from the bud, leaving the foot-stalk remaining, make a cross cut about half an inch below the eye, and with your knife slit off the bud, with part of the wood to it.

This done, with your knife pull off that part of the wood which was taken with the bud, observing whether the eye of the bud be left to it or not; for all these buds which lose their eyes in stripping, are good for nothing: it then raising the bark of the stock, thrust the bud therein, placing it smooth between the rind and the wood of the stock; and so having exactly fitted the bud to the stock, tie them closely round, taking care not to bind round the eye of the bud.

Müller.

In the stem of Elaians they all met and came to be ingrafted all upon one stock, most of them by inoculation.

Hewitt.

2. The practice of transplanting the small-pox, by infusion of the matter from ripened pustules into the veins of the uninfected, in hopes of procuring a milder sort than what frequently comes by infection.

Quincy.

It is evident, by inoculation, that the smallest quantity of the matter, mixed with the blood, produceth the disease.

Arbuthnot.

INOCULATOR, n. s. [from inoculate.]

1. One that practises the inoculation of trees.

2. One who propagates the small-pox by inoculation.

Had John a Gaddenden been now living, he would have been at the head of the inoculators.

Friend, Hist. of Phytic.

TO INODIATE, v. a. [in and odius, Lat.] To make hateful. This word I believed to have been peculiar to Dr. South; but a learned friend assures me that bishop Andrew used it, though his reference to the passage in which it occurs has been mislaid. It is certainly a very expressive word.

He inflicts them [calumnies]—partly to give the world fresh demonstrations of his hatred of sin, and partly to inodiate and imbitter sin to the chastised sinner.

South, Serm. v. 224.

The ancient members of his communion, who have all along owned and contended for a strict conformity to her rules and sanctions, as the surest course to establish her, have been of late represented, or rather reproached, under the insinuating character of high churchmen.

South, Dedication in Archbishop Marsh.

INODORATE, adj. [in and odoratus, Lat.] Having no scent.

Whites are more inodorate than flowers of the same kind coloured.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

INODOROUS, adj. [inodorus, Lat.] Wanting scent; not affecting the nose.

The white of an egg is a viscous, unactive, inodorous, inodorous liquor.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

INOFFENSIVE, † adj. [in and offensive.]

1. Giving no scandal; giving no provocation.

A stranger, inoffensive, unprovoking. Fleetwood.

However inoffensive we may be in other parts of our conduct, if we are found wanting in this trial of our love, we shall be disowned by God as traitors.

Baxter.

2. Giving no uneasiness; causing no trouble.

Should infants have taken offence at any thing, mixing pleasant and agreeable appearances with it, must be used, till it be grown inoffensive to them.

Locke.

3. Harmless; hurtless; innocent.

The dervish, and other santonos or enthusiasts, being in the crowd, express their zeal by turning round so long together, and with such swiftness, as will hardly be credited, which by custom is made inoffensive.

Rev. T. Herbert, Tron. p. 526.

For drink the grape

See crushes, inoffensive must. Milton, P. L.

With what's or gall thou sett'st thyself to write,
Thy inoffensive suiters never bide. Dryden.

Hark, how the cannon, inoffensive now,
Gives signs of gratulation. Philips.

4. Unembarrassed; without stop or obstruction. A Latin mode of speech.

From hence a passage broad,
Smooth, easy, inoffensive, down to hells. Milton, P. L.

So have I seen a river gently glide,
In a smooth course, and inoffensive tide;

But with dams its current we restrain,
It bears down all, and foams along the plain. Addison, Crid.

INOFFENSIVELY.† adv. [from inoffensive.]
Without appearance of harm; without harm.

Though were she [Poetry] a more unworthy mistress,
I think she might be inoffensively served with the broken mimes of our twelve o'clock hours, which hourly serve the only claimed and found of me, for that short while of my attendance.

Sp. Hall, Postscript to his Satires.

He had many that lived inoffensively under his censor and government.

Sir T. Herbert, Tron. p. 363.
To live lovingly, quietly, inoffensively.

Milton, Tetrachordon.

He would not spare to give seasonable reproof,
and wholesome advice when he saw occasion.

I never knew any that would do it so freely, and that knew how to manage that freedom of speech
so inoffensively.

Sp. Lloyd, Sermon, p. 30.

The Israelites had hitherto lived inoffensively among them. Patrick on Gen. xliii. 21.

This vulgar tar—supposed to be an excellent balsam, containing the virtues of most other balsams, which it easily imparts to water, and by that means readily and inoffensively insinuates them into the habit of the body.

Sp. Berkeley, Siris, § 10.

INOFFENSIVELY.† n. s. [from inoffensive.]
Harmlessness; freedom from appearance of harm.

What is the ground of this their pretended in-offensiveness? Sp. Hall, Rom. p. 139.

INOFFENSIVELY.† adj. [from inoffensive.]
1. Not civil; not attentive to the accommodation of others. This is Dr. Johnson's definition of the word, without an example; against which Mr. Mason has protested, insisting that the word will not bear such an interpretation, but that it is a Latinism, as in the following passage from Ben Jonson, having the sense of "unfit for any office." But he has heedlessly blamed the great lexicographer; and the Latin inoffen- sivus is unkind, undutiful; and such is the meaning in the verses that follow.
The river is upbraided for being wanting in dutiful or civil attention.

Up, thou tame river, wake;

And from thy liquid limbs this slumber shake:
Thou dream'st thyself in inoffensive slake.

B. Jonson, From the King's Entertainment.

2. Applied by civilians to that will, in which they are omitted, or but slightly provided for, who ought chiefly to be considered. Bullokar.

INOPERATION.† n. s. [from operation.]
Production of effects; agency; influence.

Here is not a cold and feeble persuasion, but an effectual inspiration, yea, a powerful creation.

Sp. Hall, Hom. of the Moor. Clergy, p. 74.

A true temple of a quiet and peaceable estate of the soul upon good grounds can never be assisted without the inspiration of that Holy Spirit, from whom every good gift, and every perfect giving, proceedeth. Sp. Hall, of Contemnation, § 25.

INOPINATE. adj. [inopinatus, Lat.; inopiné,
Fr.] Not expected.

INOPORTUNE. adj. [inopportunus,
Lat.] Unseasonable; inconvenient.

INOPORTUNELY.† adv. [from inopportu-
nus.] Unseasonably; inconveniently.

That holy exercise may not be done inopor- tunately. Donne, Lett. to Sir H. G. Poem, p. 369.

Yet have taken me, said he, rather inopor-
tunately to-day.

Dialogues on the Amusements of Clergymen, p. 308.

INORDINACY.† n. s. [from inordinatē.] Irregularity; disorder. It is safer to use inordination.

Inordinacy and immorality of mind.

Sp. Taylor, Arif. Handson, p. 145.

O powerful God, of those of us who are yet unregenerate, bestow thy restraining grace, which may curb and stop our natural inordinacy!

Hammond, Works, iv. 683.

They become very sinful by the excess, which were not so in their nature: that inordinacy sets them in opposition to God's designation.

Gen. of the Tongue.

INORDINATE. adj. [in ordinatus,
Lat.] Irregular; disorderly; deviating from right.

These people were wisely brought to allegiance;
but being straight left unto their own inordinate life, they forgot what before they were taught.

Spencer on Ireland.

Thence raise

At least distemper'd, discontented thoughts;
Vain hopes, vain aims, inordinate desires,
Blown up with high conceits, ingendering pride.

Milton, P. L.

From inordinate love and vain fear comes all unequilibrium of spirit.

Sp. Taylor, Guide to Devotion.

INORDINATELY.† adv. [from inordinatē.]
Irregularly; not rightly.

Which contravened him forcibly
For to love a certain body
Above all other inordinately.

Shelton, Poems, p. 161.

Neither the study of philosophy, neither remembrance of his dear friend, could withdraw him from that unkind appetite, but that force he must love inordinately that lady whom his said friend had determined to marry.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 123. b.

As soon as a man desires any thing inordinately,
he is presently dissatisfied in himself. Sp. Taylor.

INORDINATENESS.† n. s. [from inordinatē.]
Want of regularity; intemperance of any kind.

Out of pusillanimity or inordinateness a man prostitutes himself to those unworthy conditions and actions of squalid pleasure, that misbecome a man, a Christian. Sp. Hall, Fall of Pride.

They are pursued with inordinateness.

Fielding, Rev. l. 6.

Those good things which we abuse to sin by the inordinateness of our minds.

Sp. Taylor, Arif. Handson, p. 36.

INORDINATELY.† n. s. [from inordinatē.]
Irregularity; deviation from right.

This is inordination of soul.

Sp. Taylor, Sermon, p. 185.

Schoolmen and casuists, having too much philanthropy to clear a lie from that intrinsic in-ordination and deviation from right reason, inherent in the nature of it, held that a lie was absolutely and universally sinful.

South.

INORGANICAL.† adj. [in organical.]
Void of organs or instrumental parts.

Whether it be organical or inorganical.

Burton, Anal. of Med. p. 96.

Many of these mushroom sects are like those inorganical creatures bred upon the banks of Nilus, which perished quickly, after they were bred, for want of fit organs.

Sp. Berkeley, Sciama Guarded, p. 354.

We come to the lowest and the most inorganical parts of matter.

Locke.

To INOSCULATE. v. n. [in and os-culum, Latin.] To unite by opposition or contact.

This fifth conjugation of nerves is branched by inosculation with nerves. Derham, Physico-Theol.

To INOSCULATE.† v. a. To insert; to join in or among.

It is an opinion, received by many, that the sap circulates in plants as the blood in animals; that it ascends through capillary arteries in the trunk, into which are insinuated other vessels of the bark answering the same use.

Sp. Berkeley, Siris, § 54.

INOSCULATION.† n. s. [from inosculatē.]
Union by conjunction of the extremities.

The almost infinite ramifications and inosculations of all the several sorts of vessels may easily be detected by glasses.

Key.

The grand junction is an inosculation of the grand trunk. Burke on a Regicide Prince.

INQUEST. n. s. [enquete, Fr.; inquisitio,
Lat.]

1. Judicial enquiry or examination.

When that confusion of face shall be under,
where that grand inquest begins; when an account of our opportunities, of our good, and a particular of our use or misuse of them, is given in?

Atterbury.

[In law.] The inquest of jurors, or by jury, is the most usual trial of all causes, both civil and criminal; for in civil causes, after proof is made on either side, so much as each part thinks good for himself, if the doubt be in the fact, it is referred to the discretion of twelve indifferent men, impanelled by the sheriff; and as they bring in their verdict so judgement passes: for the judge saith, the jury finds the fact thus; then is the law thus, and so we judge.

Cowel.

5. Enquiry; search; study.

This is the laborious and vast inquest that the soul must make after science.

South.

To INQUIRE.† v. a. [old Fr. inquieret.]
To disquiet; to trouble; to disturb.

Conscience confounded the reason, it croaketh
the will, and enquireth the soul.

Sp. Fisher, Ps. xi. 12.

INQUIET.† n. s. [from inquiet.]
Disturbance; annoyance. Obsolete.

How many senile personages, by outrage in rich, gaming, and excess of apparel, be encoursed to theft and robbery, and sometime to murder; to the inquisition of good men, and finally to their own destruction.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 106. b.

INQUIETUDE.† n. s. [inquietudo, Fr.;
inquietudo, inquietas, Lat.] Disturbed state; want of quiet; attack on the quiet.

Having had such experience of his fidelity and observance should he found himself engaged in honour to support him at home from any farther
inquietude.

Wotton.

Iron, that has stood long in a window, being these takes, and by a cork balanced in water,

Sp. R. 2

*here it may have a free mobility, will bewray a kind of iniquity and discontent till it attain the former position. Watson.

The youthful hero, with returning light,
How anxious from the iniquities of night. Pope, Odyssey.

TO INQUINATE. v. a. [inquino, Lat.]
To pollute; to corrupt.

An old opinion it was, that the feeding upon serpents, that venomous food so inquinates their oval conceptions, that they sometimes came forth in serpentine shapes. Brown.

INQUINATIO.† n. s. [inquinatio, Lat.; from inquinate.] Corruption; pollution.

Their causes and axioms are so full of imagination, and so infected with the old received theories, as they are more inquinations of experience, and connect it not. Bacon.

The middle action, which produceth such imperfect bodies, is fully called by some of the ancients inquinatio, or incoaction, which is a kind of putrefaction. Bacon.

An exemption from the stains and inquinations of youth. W. Montague, Des. Eve. P. i. Pref.

INQUIRABLE.† adj. (from inquire.) Of which inquiry or request may be made.

There be many more things inquirable by you. Bacon, Charge, &c. p. 19.

The second thing inquirable, is, who it was that brought him forth; and that was Jehoadah, the priest. Turner, Sermon. (1661.) p. 3.

TO INQUIRE. v. n. [enquirer, Fr.; inquirere, Lat.]

1. To ask questions; to make search; to exert curiosity on any occasion: with of before the person asked.

Herod — inquired of them diligently. St. Matt. ii. 7.

They began to inquire among themselves, which of them it was that should do this thing. St. Luke, xxii. 93.

He sent Isidore to king Darius, to inquire of his welfare. I Chron. xviii. 10.

It is a subject of a very noble inquiry, to inquire of the more subtle perceptions; for it is another key to open nature, as well as the former. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. It is used with into when something is already imperfectly known.

It may deserve our best skill to inquire into those rules, by which we may guide our judgement. South.

The step-dame poison for the son prepares;
The son inquires into his father's years. Dryden.

3. Sometimes with of.

Under their grateful shade Eneas sat;
His left young Pallas kept, fix'd to his side,
And oft of winds inquir'd, and of the tide. Dryden, Æn.

4. With after when something is lost or missing; in which case for is likewise used.

Inquire for one Saul of Tarsus. Acts, ix. 11.

They are more in danger to go out of the way, who are marching under a guide that will mislead them, than he that is likelier to be prevailed on to inquire after the right way. Locke.

5. With about, when fuller intelligence is desired.

To those who inquired about me, my lover would answer, that I was an old dependent upon his family. Swift.

6. To make examination.

Awful Rhadamanthus rules the state;
He hears and judges each committed crime,
Enquires into the manner, place, and time. Dryden, Æn.

TO INQUIRE. v. a.

1. To ask about; to seek out: as, he inquired the way.

2. To call; to name. Obsolete.

Cæsar had his portion from the rest,
The which he call'd Cæsarism, for his hire,
Now Cæsarism, which Kent we commonly inquire. Spenser, F. Q.

3. It is now more commonly written enquire.

INQUIRE.† adj. [inquirens, Lat.] Inquiring into; wishing to know.

Delia's eye,
As in a garden, roves, of hues alone Inquirers, curious, Sheraton, Ecce. P. 2.

INQUIRER. n. s. (from inquire.)

1. Searcher; examiner; one curious and inquisitive.

What satisfaction may be obtained from those violent disputers, and eager inquirers into what day of the month the world began? Brown, Fals. Err.

What's good does open to the inquirers stand,
And itself offers to the accepting hand. Dehaim.

Superficial inquirers may satisfy themselves that the parts of matter are united by ligaments. Glenville, Scipio.

This is a question only of inquirers, not disputers, who neither affirm nor deny, but examine. Locke.

Late inquirers by their glances find,
That every insect of each different kind,
In its own egg, cheri'd by the solar rays,
Organs involv'd and latent life displays. Blackmore.

2. One who interrogates; one who questions.

INQUIRY. n. s. (from inquire.)

1. Interrogation; search by question.

The men which were sent from Corellus had made inquiry for Simon's house, and stood before the gate. Acts, x. 17.

2. Examination; search.

This exactness is absolutely necessary in inquiries after philosophical knowledge, and in controversies about truth. Locke.

As to the inquiry about liberty, I think the question is not proper, whether the will be free, but whether a man be free? Locke.

I have been engaged in philosophical inquiries. Locke.

It is a real inquiry, concerning the nature of a bird, or a bat, to make their yet imperfect ideas of it more complete. Locke.

Judgement or opinion, in a remoter sense, may be called invention: as when a judge or a physician makes an exact inquiry into any cause. Grew, Com. Sacra.

INQUISITION.† n. s. [inquisition, Fr. inquisitio, Lat.]

1. Judicial inquiry.

When he maketh inquisition for blood, he remembereth them: he forgetteth not the cry of the humble. Ps. ix. 12.

When inquisition was made of the matter, it was found out. Eccl. ii. 29.

With rough severity, and strict inquisition, were punished the adherents and aids of the late rebels. Bacon, Hen. VIII.

Though it may be impossible to recollect every falling, yet you are so far to exercise an inquisition upon yourself, as, by observing lower particulars, you may the better discover what the corruption of your nature ways you to. Bp. Taylor.

By your good leave,
These men will be your judges: we must stand 17

The inquisition of their rally
On our condition. Southey.

2. Examination; discussion.

We were willing to make a pattern or precedent of an exact inquisition. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

It is the part of a discreet and wise person not to leave this inquisition only to the physician.

Faherty, Albion, p. 234.
An inquisition and collation of several means.
Smith on Old Age, p. 37.

3. [In law.] A manner of proceeding in matters criminal, by the office of the judge. Cowell.

4. The court established in some countries subject to the pope for the detection of heresy.

Now was we upon the subject of tortures, it is impossible to forget that depth of justice, the inquisition for Sancti it is by the conjunction of three qualities; indefatigable diligence, profound subtlety, and inhuman cruelty.

Trapp, Popery Stated, &c. P. II. § 12.

INQUISITORIAL.† adj. (from inquire.)

Busy in inquiry.

By these and other means, no less politic and inquisitorial, property has found out the art of making men miserable in spite of their senses. Sterne, Sermon, xxxvii.

INQUISITIVE. adj. [inquisitivus, Lat.]

Curious; busy in search; active to pry into any thing: with about, after, into, or of, and sometimes to.

My boy at eighteen years began to inquire after his brother. Shakspeare, Com. of Err.

This idleness, together with fear of imminent mischief, have been the cause that the Irish were ever the most inquisitive people after news of any nation in the world. Davies.

He is not inquisitive into the reasonableness of indifferent and innocent commands.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

It can be no duty to write his heart upon his forehead, and to give all the inquisitive and malicious world a survey of those thoughts, which is the prerogative of God only to know. South.

His old shaking eye,
Inquisitive of lights, still longs in vain
To find him in the number of the slain. Dryden, Juv.

Then what the Gallies arm will do,
Art anxiously inquisitive to know. Dryden.

A Dutch ambassador, entreating the king of Siam with the particulars of Holland, which he was inquisitive after, told him that the water would, in cold weather, be so hard that men walked upon it.

Locke.
The whole neighbourhood grew inquisitive after my name and character. Addison, Spect.

A wise man is not inquisitive about things impertinent. Brown.

They cannot bear with the impertinent questions of a young inquisitive and sprightly genius. Watts on the Mind.

INQUISITIVELY.† adv. (from inquisitive.)

With curiosity; with narrow scrutiny.

If at any time I seem to study you more inquisitively, it is for no other end but to know how to present you to God in my prayers, and what to ask of Him for you. Dennis, Lett. to Sir H. G. Parnell, p. 259.

INQUISITIVENESS.† n. s. (from inquisitive.)

Curiosity; diligence to pry into things hidden.

Though he thought inquisitiveness an unwelcome guest, he could not but ask who she was. Shakspeare.

Heights that scorn our prospect, and depths in which reason will never touch the bottom, yet surely the pleasure arising from thence is great and noble; for as much as the afford perpetual matter to the inquisitiveness of human reason, and so are large enough for it to take its full scope and range in. South, Serp.

Previdence, delivering great conclusions to us, designed to excite our curiosity and inquisitiveness after the methods by which things were brought to pass.

Curiosity in children nature has provided, to remove that ignorance they were born with; which, without this busy inquisitiveness, will make them dull. Locke.

INQUISITOR. n. s. [inquisitor, Latin; inquisiteur, French.]

1. One who examines judicially.

In these particulars I have played myself the inquisitor, and find nothing contrary to religion or manners, but rather medicinally. Beacon, Eist.
Minos, the strict inquisitor, appears,
And lends and crimes with his measures bears. Dryden.

2. One who is too curious and inquisitive. Inquisitor is taken. Fiddler, Rev. ii. 51.

3. An officer in the popish courts of inquisition.

The inquisitor in Spain charged all honest women and matrons, that had been solicited by their ghostly fathers unto adultery, to confess the same before them. Fiske against Allen, (1586), p. 255.

INQUISITORIAL. adj. [from inquisitor.]
With the severity of an inquisitor. See INQUISITORIOUS.

Liberal and inquisitorial abuse. Archd. Blackburne.

INQUISITORIOUS. adj. [from inquisitor.]
With the prying severity of an inquisitor. We now say inquisitorial.

Under whose inquisitorial and tyrannical duncery, no free and splendid wit can flourish. Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gen. B. 2.

To INRA'T. v. a. [in and *ra*il.] To inclose within rails.

In things indifferent, what the whole church doth think convenient for the whole, the same if any part do wilfully violate, it may be reformed and universal again, by that general authority whereunto each particular is subject. Hooker.

Where fan'd St. Giles's ancient limits spread,
An inra'd column rears its lofty head;
Here to seven streets seven diall count the day,
And from each other catch the circling ray. Gay.

INROAD. n. s. [in and road.] Incursion; sudden and desultory invasion.

Many hot inroads
They make in Italy. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.
From Scotland we have had in former times some alarms, and inroads into the northern parts of this kingdom. Beacon.

By proof we feel
Our power sufficient to disturb his heaven,
And with perpetual swords to alarm,
Though inaccessible his fatal throne. Milton, P. L.
The loss of Shrewsbury exposed all North Wales to the daily inroads of the enemy. Clarendon.

The country open lay without defence;
For poets frequent inroads there had made. Dryden.

INSAFETY. n. s. [in and safety.] Want of safety; hazard; insecurity.

Apprehending the insafety and danger of an intermarriage with the blood royal. Newman, Fragm. Regalia.

INSALUBRITY. n. s. [insalubritas, old Fr.] Unwholesomeness.

To make us more sure of the insalubrity of this place. Gregory, Pastimes, (1655), p. 1.
Scarcely shows the cause of the insalubrity of a passage between two mountains in Armenia. Hutton, Hist. E. p. iii. liii.

INSAURABLE. adj. [insaurable, old French; insaurabilis, Latin.] Incurable; irremediable. Cockeram.

INSAURABLE. adj. [insanus, Latin.] 1. Mad.

As most men perceive the faults of others without being aware of their own, so insane people easily detect the nonsense of other madmen, without being able to discover, or even to be made sensible of, the incorrect associations of their own ideas. Hutton on Madness and Melancholy, ch. vii.

2. Making mad.

Were such things here as we do speak about?
Or have we eaten of the insane root,
That takes the reason prisoner? Shakspeare, Macbeth.

INSAURITY. n. s. [from insane.] Want of sound mind; madness.

There is a partial insanity, and a total insanity. Hale.

Speak what you know of his sanity or insanity of mind. Conradson Vernon, in the State Trials, (under 1741.)

All power of fancy over reason is a degree of insanity. Johnson, Rasselas, ch. 43.
Collins, who, while he studied to live, felt no evil but poverty, no sooner lived to study, than his life was assailed by more dreadful calamities, disease, and insanity. Johnson, Life of Collins.

INSAURITY. adj. [in and sapor.] See SAPOR. Tasteless; wanting flavour.

However ingrate or insapoury it seems at first, it becomes grate and delicious enough by custom. See T. Herbert, Truce, p. 311.

INSAURABLE. adj. [insatiabilis, Latin; insatiable, French.] Greedy beyond measure; greedily so as not to be satisfied.

The sight is of all the other senses the most comprehensive and insatiable. South, Ser. x. 364.

INSAURABLENESS. n. s. [from insatiable.] Greediness not to be appeased.

Both pleasures and profits, if way be given to them, have too much power to debauch the mind, and to work it to a kind of insatiableness. See T. Herbert, Truce, p. 311.

Some men's hydrophic insatiableness had learned to thirst the more, by how much more they drank. King Charles.

INSAURABLY. adv. [from insatiable.] With greediness not to be appeased.

They were extremely ambitious, and insatiably curious, and therefore no impression, no argument or miracle, could reach them. South.

INSAURABLE. adj. [insatiatus, Latin.] Greedy so as not to be satisfied.

My mother went with child
Of that insatiate Edward. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Vain war with heaven. Milton, P. L.

Too oft his pride,
And hellish discord, and insatiate thirst
Of other rights, our quiet dispos'd. Philips.

INSAURABLY. adv. [from insatiate.] So greedily as not to be satisfied.

He (Mahomet) was so insatiately libidinous, that he is not ashamed to countenance his incontinency by a law. See T. Herbert, Truce, p. 321.

INSAURABLY. n. s. [in and satiety.] Insatiableness; an elegant word.

A confirmation of this insatiety, and consequently insatiableness by a cause thereof: "When goods increase, they are increased that eat them." Granger on Eccles. (1621), p. 123.

INSAURABLY. n. s. [in and satisfaction.] Want; unsatisfied state. A word not in use.

To INSAURABLE. v. a. [inscribo, Latin; inscribe, French.]

1. To write on any thing. It is generally applied to something written on a monument, or on the outside of something. It is therefore more frequently used with or than in.

In all you visit to Rome, or else
To foreign princes, ego & vos me
Was still inscribed. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Conatural principles are in themselves highly reasonable, and deducible by a strong process of ratiocination to be most true; and consequently the high exercise of ratiocination might evince their truth, though there were no such originally inscribed in the mind. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

We weeping loves! the stream with myrles hide,
And with your golden dates, now useless grown,
Inscribed a verse on this relenting stone. Pope.

2. To mark any thing with writing; as, I inscribed the stone with my name.

3. To assign to a patron without a formal dedication.

One ode, which pleased me in the reading, I have attempted to translate in Pindaric verse: 'tis that which is inscribed to the present earl of Rochester. Dryden.

4. To draw a figure within another.

In the circle inscribe a square.
Notes to Creech's Manilius.

INSCRIBER. n. s. [from To inscribe.] One who inscribes.

I should then hope to be taught from such learning and knowledge what all those elementary characters, and final diagrams, mean to express, which inscriber has provided by, as though making no part of the inscriber's invention. Journal on Autop, p. 48.

INSCRIPTION. n. s. [inscription, Fr. inscription, Lat.]

1. Something written or engraved.

This inscription of praise in time to come,
Those long inscriptions crowded on the tomb. Dryden.

2. Title.

Justerius by the same title lost our expectation, whereby we resped no advantage, it answering scarce at all the promise of the inscription. Brown, Vulg. Err.

3. [In law.] An obligation made in writing, whereby the accuser binds himself to undergo the same punishment, if he shall not prove the crime which he objects to the party accused, in his accusatory libel, as the defendant himself ought to suffer, if the same be proved. Ayliffe, Parergon.

4. Consignment of a book to a patron without a formal dedication.

INSCRIPTIVE.* adj. [inscriptus, Lat.] Bearing inscription.

Inscriptive nonsense in a fancied abbey.

INSCRUTABILITY.* n. s. [from inscrutabile.] Incapability of being discovered, or traced out.

His theological conceptions were always, I confess, to me, who yet affect some insight into the human character, one of the inscrutabilities of mystery.

Wakfield, Mem. p. 130.

INSCRUTABLE.* adj. [inscrutabilis, Lat.; inscrutable, Fr.] Unsearchable; not to be traced out by inquiry or study.

A jet unseen, inscrutable, invisible,

As a weather-cock on a steeple. Shakespeare.

This king had a large heart, inscrutable for good, and was wholly bent to make his kingdom and people happy.

Bacon.

O how inscrutable / his equity
Twins with his power. Sundays.

Henceforth they have recourse as unto the oracle of fate, the great determination of virginity, conception, fertility, and the inscrutable infirmities of the whole body.

Brouss.

We should contemplate reverently the works of nature and grace, the inscrutable ways of Providence, and all the wonderful methods of God's dealing with men.

Astbury.

INSCRUTABLY.* adv. [from inscrutable.] So as not to be traced out.

TO INSCRUP.* v. a. [insculp, Lat.] To engrave; to cut. Shakespeare uses it in the sense of to carve in relief, Mr. Douce observes; and might have caught the word from the casket story in the Gesta Romanorum, where it is rightly used.

The third vessel was made of lead, and thereupon was insculp this poetry. Friend, of Gen. Rom.

A coin that bears the figure of an angel
Stamped in gold; but that's insculp'd upon.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

INSCRIPTION.* n. s. [inscriptus, Lat.] Inscription. Not in use.

INSECTILE.* adj. [from insect.] Having the nature of insects.

Insectile, animals, for want of blood, run all out into legs. Bacon.

INSECTILE.* n. s. An insect.

Entire insects of any greatness, and in any posture, [may] be inclosed therein.

Watson to Sir E. Bacon, (1653.) Rem. p. 465.
The ant, and silk-worm, and many such *insectile*s.

Smith on Old Age, p. 264.

INSECTOLOGER.* n. s. [insect and loger.] One who studies or describes insects.

A word, I believe, unauthorised.

The insect itself is, according to modern insectologists, of the ichneumonoid kind.

Bertram, Physico-Theol.

INSECURE.* adj. [in and secure.]

1. Not secure; not confident of safety.

He is liable to a great many inconveniences every moment of his life, and is continually insecure not only of the good things of this life, but even of life itself.

Tillotson.

2. Not safe.

Am I going to build on precarious and insecure foundations?

Hurd.

INSECURELY.* adv. [from insecure.] Without certainty.

When I say secured, I mean it in the sense, in which the word should always be understood at courts, that it is insecurely.

Ld. Chesterfield.

INSECURITY.* n. s. [in and security.]

1. Uncertainty; want of confidence.

It may easily be perceived with what insecurity of truth we ascribe effects, depending upon the natural period of time, unto arbitrary calculations, and such as vary at pleasure.

Brown.

2. Want of safety; danger; hazard.

The unreasonableness and presumption, the danger and desperate mortality of those that have not so much as a thought, all their lives long, to advance so far as stricture and contrition, sorrow, and resolution of amendment.

Hammond.

INSECUTION.* n. s. [insecutio, Fr. insecutio, Lat.] Pursuit. Not in use.

Not the king's own horse got more before the wheel
Of his rich chariot, that might still the insecution feel.

With the extreme hairs of his tail.

Chapman, Riad.

Ye be reprobes; ye obdurate, insenate creatures.

Hammond.

So fond are mortal men,
As their own ruin on themselves 'invites,

Insenate left, or to sense reprobate.

And with blindness internal struck. Milton, S. A.

TO INSENSE.* v. a. [in and sense.] To instruct; to inform. To lay open a business to any one, is to insense him. Wibraham, Cheshire Gloss. To infuse sense into the mind of a person; to make to understand. Craven Dial. and Grose.

INSENSIBILITY.* n. s. [insensibilité, French; from insensible.]

1. Inability to perceive.

Insensibility of slow motions may be thus accounted for: motion cannot be perceived without perception of the parts of space which it left, and those which it next occupies.

Gleiville.

2. Stupidity; dulness of mental perception.

3. Torpor; dullness of corporeal sense.

INSENABLE.* adj. [insensible, Fr.]

1. Imperceptible; not discoverable by the senses.

What is that word honour? air; a trim reckoning. Who hath it? Is that which a Wedgwood Doth he feel it? no. Doth he hear it? no. Is it insensible then? yes, to the dead; but will it not live with the living? no. Why? detraction will not suffer it.

Shakespeare.

Two small and almost insensible particles were found upon Cleopatra's arm. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The dense and bright light of the circle will obscure the rare and weak light of these dark colours round about it, and render them almost insensible.

Newton, Opt.

2. Slowly gradual, so as that no progress is perceived.

They fall away,

And languish with insensible decay. Dryden.

3. Void of feeling either mental or corporeal.

tient inert substance. Reid.

INSEPARABLE LITY.* n. s. [from insepar-INSEPARABLENESS.* able. The quality of being such as cannot be severed or divided.

Jonas stood upon a point of law of the insepa-rability of the prerogative from the person of the king. Burnet, Hist. of his own Time, an. 1681.

The parts of pure space are immovable, which follows from their inseparability, motion being nothing but change of distance between any two things; but this cannot be between parts that are inseparable. Locke.

INSEPARABLE adj. [inseparable, Fr.; inseparabilis, Lat.] Not to be disjoined;
united so as not to be parted.

Ancient times figure both the incorporation and inseparable conjunction of counsel with kings, and the wise and politic use of counsel by kings. Bacon.

Thou, my shade,
Inseparable, must with me along;
For death from sin no power can separate. Milton, P. L.

Care and toil came into the world with sin, and remain ever since inseparable to it. South.
No body feels pain, that he wishes not to be cured of, with a desire equal to that pain, and is separable from it. Locke.

The parts of pure space are inseparable one from the other, so that the continuity cannot be separated, neither really nor mentally. Locke.

Together out they fly,
Inseparable now the truth and lie;
And this or that unmix'd no mortal e'er shall find. Pope.

INSEPARABLY. adv. [from inseparable.]
With indissoluble union.

Drawing of metals is, when the baser metal is so incorporated with the more rich as it cannot be separated; as if silver should be inseparably incorporated with gold. Bacon.

Him thou shalt enjoy,
Inseparably thine. Milton, P. L.
Readiness of mind seems inseparably en-laced to human nature. Temple.

Atheists must confess, that before that assigned period matter had existed eternally, inseparably en-dued with this principle of attraction; and yet had never attracted nor convened before, during that infinitesimal duration. Bentley.

INSEPARATE.* adj. [in and separate.]
INSEPARATED.* Not separate; united.

A debility of the limbs, and spots upon the skin,
to this distemper being inseparable symptoms; it is evident the word must be derived from thence.

his hand, and no more ado. Shaksp. Wit. Tale.
Here are the outside of the one, the inside of the other, and there's the moiety I promised ye. U. Roderigo.

As for the inside of their nose, none but themselves were concerned in it. Addison, Guardian.

To INSH'IDATE.* v. a. [insidiar, Latin].
To lie in ambush for.

One brother insidiates the life of another; the husband hath killed his wife; the wife slain her husband. Hogwood's Hist. of Angels, (1685) p. 94.

A huntsman with his bow and arrow did use to insidiate the wild beasts of the wilderness, and shoot them from the coverts and thickets. Ibid. p. 96.

Death — insidiates all things. Epi. on Waver the Antiquary.

INSID'IDATE.† n. s. [Lat.] One who lies in wait.

Kings are most exposed to dangers — having usually many envious ill-willers, many dissatisfied ministers, many both open enemies, and close insidiators. Burrows, Sermon. 10.

INSID'IDIOUS. adj. [insidiar, French;
insidiarius, Latin.] Sly; circumventive;
diligent to entrap; treacherous.

Since men mark all our steps, and watch our haltings, let a sense of their insidious vigilance excite us to behave ourselves, that they may find a conviction of the mighty power of Christianity regarding the passions. Atterbury.

They wing their course,
And dart on distant coasts, or some sharp rock,
Or shal insidiar, breaks not their career. Thomson.

INSID'IDIOUSLY. adv. [from insidiar.] In a sly and treacherous manner; with malicious artifice.

The castle of Cadmus was taken by Phœbeas the Lacedæmonian, insidiariously and in violation of league. Bacon.

Simoon and Levi spoke not only falsely but insidiariously, say hypocritically, abusing their prophets and their religion, for the effecting their cruel designs. Gov. of the Tongue.

INSID'IDOUSNESS. n. s. [from insidiar.]
State or quality of being insidious.

He hath told of the serpent, none of its lurking insidiarities. Burrows, Works, I. 46.

INSIGHT. n. s. [insicht, Dutch. This word had formerly the accent on the last syllable.] Introspection; deep view;
knowledge of the interior parts;
thorough skill in any thing.

Hardy shepherd, such as thy merits, such may be her insight justly to grant thee reward. Sidney.

Straghtway sent with careful diligence
To fetch a leech, the leech had great insight
In that disease of mighty conscience.

And well could cure the same; his name was Patience. Spenser, F. Q.

Now will be the right season of forming them to be able writers, when they shall be thus fraught with an universal insight into things.

Milton on Education.

The use of a little insight in those parts of knowledge, which are not a man's proper business, is to accustom our minds to all sorts of ideas. Locke.

A garden gives us a great insight into the contrivance and wisdom of Providence, and suggests innumerable subjects of meditation. Spenser.

Due consideration, and a deeper insight into things, would soon have made them sensible of their error. Woodward.

INSIGNIA.* n. s. pl. [Latin.] The Spanish have long used insignias in the same sense. Distinguishing marks of office or honour.

People not very well grounded in the principles of public morality find a set of maxims in office ready made for them, which they assume as naturally, and inevitably, as any of the maxims or instruments of the situation.

Burke, On a Late State of the Nation, (1769). They are also decorated with the blue ribbon of the French Order of the Holy Ghost, and the insignia of the Burgundian Golden Fleece.

Sutcliffe, Trav. through Spain, L. 39.

INSIGNIFICANCE. n. s. [insignificance, INSIGNIFICANCY. French; from insignificant.]

1. Want of meaning; unmeaning terms.

To give an account of all the insignificances and verbal nothings of this philosophy, would be to transcribe it. Glanville.

2. Unimportance.

As I was ruminating on that I had been, I could not forbear reflecting on the insignificance of human art, when set in comparison with the designs of Providence. Addison, Guardian.

My annals are in mouldy millets wrought, With easy insignificance of thought. Garth.

INSIGNIFICANT. adj. [in and significant.]

1. Wanting meaning; void of signification. Till you can weight and gravity explain, Those words are insignificant and vain. Blackmore.

2. Unimportant; wanting weight; ineffectual. This sense, though supported by authority, is not very proper.

That I might not be vapoured down by insignificant testimonies, I presumed to use the great name of your society to annihilate all such arguments. Colman, Scops.

Colman robs the publick of all that benefit that it may justly claim from the worth and virtue of particular persons, by rendering their virtue utterly insignificant. South.

All the arguments to a good life will be very insignificant to a man that hath a mind to be wicked, when remission of sins may be had upon cheap terms. Tillotson.

Nothing can be more contemptible and insignificant than the scum of a people, insinuated against a king. Arbutnot.

In a hemorrhage from the lungs, no remedy so proper as bleeding, often repeated: stypticks are often insignificant. Arbutnot.

INSIGNIFICANTLY. adv. [from insignificant.]

1. Without meaning. Birds are taught to use articulate words, yet they understand not their import, but use them insignificantly, as the organ or pipe renders the tune, which it understands not. Hall.

2. Without importance or effect.

INSIGNIFICATIVE.* adj. [in and significant.] Not betokening by an external sign.

The ordinary sort of the unmeaning eyes are not indeed utterly insignificative: for they show their owners to be persons without any habitual vices or virtues. Philosophy, Lett. up. Physiognomy, (1751), p. 230.

Dryden's line, insinuid strongly through the insinuidity of Tate's. The exaltedness of some minds, or rather as I shrewdly suspect their insinuidity and want of feeling or observation, may make them insensible to these light things. Grey, Lett. to West.

INSINUIDLY.* adv. [from insinuid.]

1. Without taste. 2. Dully; without spirit. One great reason why many children abandon themselves wholly to ally sports, and trifle away all their time insinuidly, is because they have found their curiosity balked. Lodge.

If he talk insinuidly, and impertinently, we have no esteem or reverence for such a person. Goodman, Wind. Rev. Conf. P. I.

There are very many matches in our country, wherein the parties live so insinuidly, or so vacuously, that I am afraid to venture from their example. Goodman, Rev. Conf. P. 68.

INSINUENCE. n. s. [insinuation, Latin.] Folly; want of understanding.

TO INSINUATE. v. n. [insinuer, Fr. insinuo, Lat.]

1. To stand or rest upon. The combs being double, the cells on each side the partition are so ordered, that the angles on one side insinuate upon the centres of the bottom of the cells on the other side. Ray.

2. Not to recede from terms or assertions; to persist in; to persevere.

Upon such large terms, and so absolute,
As our conditions shall insist upon.
Our peace shall stand firm as rocky mountains.

Shakespeare.
All other things do constantly obey the law imposed on them, insist in the course defined to them.

3. To dwell upon in discourse.

Which were no other act of hostility but that which we have hitherto insisted on, the intercepting of her supplies were irreparably injurious to her.

Decay of Chr. Piety.
INSISTENT. adj. [insistens, Lat.] Resting upon any thing.

The breadth of the substruction [must] be at least double to the insistent wall.

Watson on Architecture.
INSISTENCY. n. s. [in and sisto, Latin.] Exemption from thirst.

What is more admirable than the fitness of every creature, for the use he makes of him? The docility of an elephant, and the insistency of a camel for travelling in deserts.

Gray.
INSISTION. n. s. [insistio, Latin.] The insertion or infragment of one branch into another.

Without the use of these we could have nothing of culture or civility: no tillage, grafting, or insition.

Ray.
INSISTURE. n. s. [from insist.] This word seems in Shakespeare to signify constancy or regularity, but is now not used.

The heavens themselves, the planets, and the centre,
Observe degree, priority, and place,

Institute, course, proportion, season, form,
Office and custom, in all line of order. Shakespeare.

TO INSNA'RE. v. a. [in and sna're.]
1. To entrap; to catch in a trap, gin, or snare; to inveigle.

Why strew'st thou sugar on that bottled spider,
Whose deadly web ensnareth thee about? Shaks.
By long experience Dury may no doubt
Insnare a gudgeon, or perhaps a trout;
Though Dryden once exclaim'd in partial spite;
He fish!—because the man attempts to write.

Fenton.
2. To entangle in difficulties or perplexities.

That which in a great part, is the weightiest cause belonging to this present controversy, hath insnared the judgements both of sundry good and of some well-learned men, is the manifest truth of certain general principles, whereupon the ordinances that serve for usual practice in the church of God are grounded.

That the hypocrite reigns not, lest the people be insnared. Job, 22:17, 30.

3. To ensnare is more frequent.
INSNARE. n. s. [from insnare.] One that ensnares.

Colgrave, and Sherwood.
INSOBRIETY. n. s. [in and sobriety.] Drunkenness; want of sobriety.

He whose conscience upbraids him with all profaneness towards God, and insobriety towards himself, yet if he can but answer, that he is just to his neighbour, he thinks he has quit scores.

Decay of Chr. Piety, p. 121.
INSOCIABLE. adj. [insociable, French; insociabilis, Latin.]

1. Averse from conversation.

If this austere insociable
Change not your offer made in heat of blood.

Shakespeare.

2. Incapable of connexion or union.

The lowest ledge or row [must] be merely of stone,—closely laid, without mortar, which is a general caution for all parts in building that are contiguous to board or timber, because lime and wood are insuciable.

Watson on Architecture.
TO INSOLATE. v. a. [insolato, Lat.] To dry in the sun; to expose to the action of the sun.

INSOLATION.† n. s. [insolation, Fr. from insolate.]

1. Exposition to the sun.

We use these towers for insolation, refrigeration, conservation, and for the view of divers meteors.

Baron.
If it have not a sufficient insolation it looketh pale, and attains not its laudable colour: if it be sunned too long, it suffereth a torrefaction.

Brown, Vulg. Err.
2. [In medicine.] The influence of a scorching sun on the brain.

One case of consequential madness is an effect of insolation, or what the French call coup de soleil. An instance of which I lately met with in a sailor, who became raving mad in a moment, while the sun-beams darted perpendicularly on his head.

Butte on Madness.

INSOLENCE.† n. s. [insolence, French; INSOLENCY.] insolentia, Lat.] Pride exerted in contemptuous and overbearing treatment of others; petulant contempt.

They could not restrain the insolency of O'Neal, who, finding none now to withstand him, made himself lord of those few people that remained.

Spenser on Ireland.
Such a nature,
Tickled with good success, disdaineth the shadow
Which he treads on at noon; but I do wonder
His insolence can brook to be commanded

Under Continous. Shakespeare.
The troubles of ambition, and the insolencies of traitors, and the violences of rebels.

My Taylor, Scrm. (1653), p. 19.
Flown with insolence and wine. Milton, P. L.

Public judgements are the banks and shores upon which God breaks the insolency of sinners, and shows their proud waves.

Watson.
The steady tyrant man,
Who with the thoughtless insolence of power,
For sport alone, pursues the cruel chase. Thomson.

The fear of any violence, either against her own person or against her son, might deter Herod from using any endeavours to remove one of such insolence and power.

Brown.
TO INSOLENCE. v. a. [from the noun.] To insult; to treat with contempt. A very bad word.

The bishops, who were first faulty, insulted and assaulted.

King Charles.
INSOLENT.† adj. [insolent, Fr. insolens, Latin.]

1. Unaccustomed. This is the primary sense of the word, unnoticed by Dr. Johnson and our other lexicographers.

If one chance to derive noise from the Latine, which is insolent to their ears,—they forthwith make a jest of it.

Pettis, Interest (Guesard's Civil Conversation, [1866].)
2. Contemptuous of others; haughty; overbearing.

We have not pillaged those rich provinces which we rescued: victory itself had made us insolent masters.

Atterbury.
INSOLENTLY.† adv. [insolenter, Latin.] With contempt of others; haughtily; rudely.

She,—by a king and conqueror made so great,
Into her own self-praise must insolently break.

Dryden, Polioth, S. 2.

Not unlearnedly mad, or insolently wedded unto their own wills. Montague, App. to Cæs. p. 8.

What I must disprove,
He insolently talk'd to me of love. Dryden.

Not faction, when it shook thy regal seat,
Not sepates, insolently loud,
Those echoes of a thoughtless crowd,
Could warp thy soul to their unjust decree.

Trappin.
Briant, naturally of an haughty temper, treated him very insolently, more like a criminal than a prisoner of war.

Addison.
INSOLITUDY.† n. s. [in and solidity.] Want of solidity; weakness.

A demonstration of the insolidity of this exception against Mr. Mele.

Morr, Myst. of God, (1660), p. 301.
INSOLVABLE.† adj. [insolvable, Fr. in and solvable.]

1. Not to be solved; not to be cleared; inextricable; such as admits of no solution, or explication.

To guard with bands
Insoluble these gifts. Pope, Odyss.

INSOLUBLE.† adj. [insoluble, Fr. insolubilis, Latin.]

1. Not to be cleared; not to be resolved.

Admit this, and what shall the Scripture be but a snare and a torment to weak consciences, filling them with infinite scrupulosities, doubts insoluble, and extreme despair.

Hosier.
2. Not to be dissolved or separated.

Sundry many men grow in any part of a human body; for where any thing insoluble sticks in any part of the body, it gathers a crust about it.

Arbuthnot on Diet.
INSOLVENCY.† n. s. [from insolvent.] Inability to pay debts. An act of insolventcy is a law by which imprisoned debtors are released without payment.

Even the dear delight
Of sculpture, paint, intaglios, beads, and coins,
Thy boundless rapaciousness! I shall connect
With filth and beggary, nor disdain to link
With black insolency. Sherrington, Economy, P. II.

INSOLVENT.† adj. [in and solvo, Latin.] Unable to pay.

By publick declaration he proclaimed himself insolvent of those vast sums he had taken upon credit.

Hawell.
A farmer accused his guards for robbing him of oxen, and the emperor shot the offenders; but demanding reparation of the accused for so many brave fellows, and finding him insolvent, compounded the matter by taking his life.

Addison.
An insolvent is a man that cannot pay his debts.

Watts.
Insolvent tenet of incurable's space. Smart.

INSOMUCH.† conj. [in so much.]

1. So that; to such a degree that.

It hath even been the use of the conqueror to despise the language of the conquered, and in force him to learn his: so did the Romans always use, insomuch that there is no nation but is sprinkled with their language.

Spenser.
To make ground fertile, whet erect; insomuch as the countries about Ætna have amended made them, for the mischief the eruptions do.

Simoniades was an excellent poet, insomuch that he made his fortune by it.

Lucan, Nat. Hist.
L'Étrange.

They made the ground urison about their seat, insinuated that the slave did not lie flat upon it, but took a free passage underneath. Addison, Guardian.

2. This word is growing obsolete.

TO INSPECT.† v. a. [inspectio, inspectum, Latin.] To look into by way of examination.

Return, ye days, when endless pleasure
 I found in reading, or in leisure!
 When calm around the common room
 I puff'd my daily pipe's perfume;
 Rode for a stomach; and inspected
 At annual botlings, corks selected!

Watson, Progr. of Discontent.

INSPECT.* n. s. [from the verb.] Nice or close examination. Not in use.

Not so the man of philosophic eye
 And inspect sage; the waving brightness he Curious surveys. Thomson, Autumn.

INSPECTION. n. s. [inspectio, Fr. inspectio, Latin.]

1. Prying examination; narrow and close survey.

With narrow search, and with inspection deep,
 Consider every creature. Milton, P. L.

Our religion is a religion that dares to be understood; that offers itself to the search of the inquisitive; to the inspection of the severest and the most awakened reason; for, being secure of her substantial truth and purity, she knows that for her to be seen and looked into, is to be embraced and admired, as there needs no greater argument for men to love the light than to see it. South.

2. Superintendence; presiding care. In the first sense it should have into before the object, and in the second sense may admit over; but authors confound them. We may safely conceal our good deeds, when they run no hazard of being diverted to improper ends, for want of our own inspection. Atterbury.

We should apply ourselves to study the perfections of God, and to procure lively and vigorous impressions of his perpetual presence with us, and inspection over us. Atterbury.

The divine inspection into the affairs of the world, doth necessarily follow from the nature and being of God; and he that denies this, doth implicitly deny his existence. Bentley.

INSPECTOR. n. s. [Latin.]

1. A prying examiner.
 With their new light our bold inspectors press,
 Like Clums, to show their father's nakedness. Denham.

2. A superintendent.

Young men may travel under a wise inspector or tutor to different parts, that they may bring home useful knowledge. Watts.

INSPEISED.* part. adj. [inspeier, Fr. insperatus, Lat.] Sprinkled or cast upon.

Colgrave, and Sherwood.

INSPESSION.† n. s. [inspersio, Latin.]

A sprinkling upon.
 We stain the heart with so many blot and vicious inspersions. Bp. Taylor, Sermon (1631), p. 95.

Some light inspersions of truth to make them appetitious, passable, and toothsome.
Brief Description of Fanatics (1660), p. 17.
INSPERXIMUS.* n. s. [Latin.] The first word of ancient charters confirming a grant already made by a former king or benefactor, and of letters patent; an exemplification: It implies, We have inspected it.

This word is specified, by the names of "strata" and "magna via," in the inspergimus charter of Henry the Third to Tarrant abbey in Dorsetshire. Watson, Hist. of Kidlington, p. 66.

TO INSPIRE.† v. a. [in and sphere.] To place in an orb or sphere.

I will inspire her
 In regions high and starry Dryden on his Mistress.

Not rubies of the rock such red inspire'd.
Sedley, Lament. ch. 4.

Where those immortal shapes
 Of bright aerial spirits live inspire'd,
 In regions mild of calm and serene air. Milton, Comm.

INSPIRABLE. adj. [from inspire.] That may be drawn in with the breath; which may be infused.

To those inspirable hurts, we may enumerate those they sustain from their expiration of fuliginous steams. Horrey.

INSPIRATION. n. s. [from inspire.]

1. The act of drawing in the breath.

In any inflammation of the diaphragm, the symptoms are a violent fever, and a most exquisite pain increased upon inspiration, by which it is distinguished from a pleurisy, in which the greatest pain is in expiration. Arbuthnot.

2. The act of breathing into any thing.

3. Infusion of ideas into the mind by a superior power.

I never spoke with her in all my life.
 —How can she then call us by our names,
 Unless it be by inspiration? Shaksp. Com. of Err.
 Your father was ever virtuous, and holy men at their death have good inspirations. Shaksp. Merch. of Ven.

We to his high inspiration owe,
 That what was done before the flood we know. Denham.

What the tragedian wrote, the late success
 Doth even inspiration, and not guess. Johnson.
 Inspiration is when an overpowering impression of any proposition is made upon the mind by God himself, that gives a convincing and indubitable evidence of the truth and divinity of it: so were the prophets and the apostles inspired. Watts.

TO INSPIRE.† v. n. [inspiro, Latin; in-spirer, French.]

1. To draw in the breath; opposed to expire.

If the inspiring and expiring organ of any animal be stop'd, it suddenly yields to nature, and dies. Walton.

2. To blow, as a gentle wind does.

Her yellow locks, crisped like golden wyre,
 About her shoulders were loosely shair'd,
 And when the winds enmett them did inspire,
 They wav'd like a penon wyle dispair'd. Spenser, F. Q. II. iii. 30.

TO INSPIRE. v. a.

1. To breathe into.

Ye zine, descend and sing,
 The breathing instruments inspire. Pope.

2. To infuse by breathing.

He knew not his Maker, and he that inspired
 Into him an active soul, and breathed in a living spirit. Hud. xv. 11.

3. To infuse into the mind; to impress upon the fancy.

I have been troubled in my sleep this night;
 But dawning day now comfort hath inspir'd. Shakspere.

To the heart inspir'd
 Vernal delight. Milton, P. L.

4. To animate by supernatural infusion.

Nor the inspire'd
 Erast, thy poet's mind inspire,
 And fill his soul with thy celestial fire. Dryden, En.

The letters are often read to the young religious, to inspire them with sentiments of virtue. Add.

5. To draw in with the breath.

By means of sulphurous coal smokes the lungs are stifled and oppressed, whereby they are forced to inspire and expire the air with difficulty, in comparison of the facility of inspiring and expiring the air in the country. Harvey.

His balisb breath (inspiring as he glides;
 Now like a chain around her neck he rides. Dryden.

INSPIRE.* n. s. [from inspire.] One that inspires.

To the infinite God, the omnipotent creator and preserver of the world, the most gracious redeemer, sanctifier, and inspirer of mankind, be all honour. Derham.

TO INSPIRE.† v. a. [in and spirare.] To animate; to actuate; to fill with life and vigour; to enliven; to invigorate; to encourage.

It has pleased God to inspire and actuate all his evangelical methods by a concurrence of supernatural strength, which makes it not only eligible but possible; easy and pleasant to do whatever he commands us. Deray of Chr. Prty.

A discreet use of becoming ceremonies renders the service of the church solemn and affecting, inspires the sluggish, and inflames even the desert worshipper. Atterbury.

The courage of Agamemnon is inspired by love of empire and ambition. Pope, Pref. to the Iliad.

Let joy or ease, let affliction content,
 And the gay conscience of a life well spent,
 Calm every thought, inspire every grace,
 Glow in thy heart, and smile upon thy face. Pope.

TO INSPIRATE. v. a. [in and spiratus, Lat.] To thicken; to make thick.

Sugar doth inspirate the spirits of the wine, and maketh them not so easy to resolve into vapour. Jussieu.

This oil, rather inspirated by evaporation, turns into bahn. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

INSPIRATE.* adj. [from the verb.] Thick.

The gum or inspissate juice of a plant. Greenhalgh, Art of Embalm. p. 255.

INSPISSATION. n. s. [from inspissate.] The act of making any liquid thick.

The effect is wrought by the inspissation of the air. Bacon.

Recent urine will crystallise by inspissation, and afford a salt neither acid nor alkaline. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

INSTABILITY. n. s. [instabilitas, Lat.; instabilis, Fr.] From instabilis, Lat.] Inconstancy; fickleness; mutability of opinion or conduct.

Instability of temper ought to be checked, when it disposes men to wander from one scheme of government to another; such a fickleness cannot but be fatal to our country. Addison, Freethought.

INSTABLE.† adj. [instable, old French; instabilis, Lat.] Inconstant; changing.

See UNSTABLE.

Instability of temper ought to be checked, when it disposes men to wander from one scheme of government to another; such a fickleness cannot but be fatal to our country. Addison, Freethought.

INSTABLE.† adj. [instable, old French; instabilis, Lat.] Inconstant; changing.

See UNSTABLE.

In this instable and uncertain age, you have with that steadiness of mind and clearness of judgement stuck to the truth and purity of the protestant religion, as discerning the vast difference between it and popery. Moor, Epit. of Sec. Ch. Ded. to Ld. Roberts (1669).

INSTABLENESS.* n. s. [from instable.] Fickleness; mutability.

There cannot be two more pregnant instances of the lubricity and instableness of mankind, than the decay of these two ancient nations. Hewitt, Lett. ii. 57.

The very faculty of reason (as we find it so true by late experience) is subject to the same instableness. Hewitt, Lett. iv. 13.

TO INSTALL. v. a. [installar, Fr.; in and stall.] To advance to any rank or office, by placing in the seat or stall proper to that condition.

She reigns a goddess now among the saints,
That wisdom was the saint of shepherds light,
And is installed now in heaven's light. Spenser.
Cranmer is return'd with welcome,
Instal'd archbishop of Canterbury. Shakespeare.
The king chose him master of the horse, after this he was installed of the most noble order. Watson.

INSTALLATION. n. s. [installation, Fr.;
from install.] The act of giving visible possession of a rank or office, by placing in the proper seat.

Upon the election the bishop gives a mandate for his installation. Ayliffe, Parergon.

INSTALLMENT. † n. s. [from install.]

For the installment of this noble duke
It is not easy
To make lord William Hastings of our mind
For the installment of this noble duke
In the seat royal? Shakespeare, Rich. III.
Would I could ride
These fine invincible fiddlers to play to me
At my installment. Bonum, and Fl. Prophetaus.
The time of his installment into his priesthood.
Hammend, Works, iv. 396.

2. The seat in which one is installed.
Search Windsor-castle, e'er
The several chairs of order look you scour;
Each fair installment, cost and several crest
With loyal blazon evermore be blest! Shelley.

INSTANCE. n. s. [instance, Fr.]

1. Importunity; urgency; solicitation.
Christian men should much better frame their selves to those heavenly precedents, which our Lord and Saviour with so great instance gave us concerning peace and unity, if we did concur to have the ancient counsils renewed. Hooker.
2. Motive; influence; pressing argument.
Not now in use.

She dwells so securely upon her honour, that folly dares not present itself. Now, could I come to her with any direction in my hand, my desires had instance and argument to commend themselves. Shakespeare, M. Wives of Windsor.
The instance that second marriage moves,
Are base respects of theft, but none of love. Shakespeare.

3. Prosecution or process of a suit.
The instance of a cause is said to be that judicial process which is made from the contestation of a suit, even to the time of pronouncing sentence in the cause, or till the end of three years.
Ayliffe, Parergon.

4. Example; document.
Yet doth this accident
So far exceed all instance, all discourse,
That I am ready to distrust mine eyes. Shelley.
In furnaces of copper and brass, where vitriol is often cast in, there riseth suddenly a fire, which sometimes moveth on the walls of the furnace;
sometimes in the fire below; and dieth presently as soon as it is out of the furnace; which is a noble instance, and worthy to be weighed. Bacon.
We find in history instances of persons, who, after their prisons had been hung open, have chosen rather to languish in their dungeons, than stake their miserable lives and fortunes upon the success of a revolution.

The greatest mints are sometimes made the most remarkable instances of suffering. Atterbury.
Suppose the earth should be removed nearer to the sun, and resolve for instance in the orbit of Mercury, the whole ocean would boil with heat.
Bentley.

The use of instances is to illustrate and explain a difficulty; and this end is best answered by such instances as are familiar and common.

Baker on Learning.

5. State of any thing.

These seen as if, in the time of Edward the First, they were drawn up into the form of a law in the first instance. Hale.

6. Occasion; act.

The performances required on our part, are no other than what natural reason has enjoin'd to recommend, even in the most severe and difficult instances of duty. Rogers.

A soul surpris'd in each hard instance try'd
Above all pain, all anger, and all pride. Pope.
If Eusebia had lived as free from sin as it is possible for human nature, it is because she is always watching and guarding against all instances of pride. Law, Serious Call.

TO INSTANCE. v. n. [from the noun.] To give or offer an example.

As to false citations, that the world may see how little he is to be trusted, I shall instance in two of those which he makes the loudest clamour.
Tillotson.

In tragedy and satire, this age and the last have excell'd the ancients; and I would instance in Shakespeare of the former, in Dorset of the latter age. Dryden, Jen.

INSTANCED. part. adj. [from instance.]
Given in proof, or as an example.

That worthy divine did not heedfully observe

Rejoicing in hope; patient in tribulation; continuing instant in prayer. Rom. xii. 12.

2. Immediate; without any time intervening; present.
Your useful counsel to our business,
Which crave the instant use. Shakespeare, L. Lear.
The instant stroke of death denudeth to-day,

Nor native country thou, nor friend shalt we;
Nor war hast thou to wage, nor year to come;
Impending death is thine, and instant doom. Prior.
3. Quick; making no delay.
Instant without disturb they took alarm.
Milton, P. L.

Grief'd that a visitant so long should pass
Uomer'd, unhonour'd, at a monarch's gate;
Instant he flew with hospitable haste,
And the new friend with courteous air embrac'd. Pope.
INSTANT. n. s. [instant, Fr.]

1. Instant is such a part of duration wherein we perceive no succession.

Locke.
There is scarce an instant between their flourishing and their not being.

Her nimble body yet in time must move,
And not in instants through all places stir;
But she is swift and far, beneath, above,
In point of time, which thought cannot divide. Davies.

At any instant of time the moving atom is but in one single point of the line; therefore all but that one point is either future or past, and no other parts are co-existent or contemporary with it.
Bentley, Serm.

2. A particular time.
I can at any unseasonable instant of the night,
appoint her to look out at her lady's chamber

As several winds arise,
Just so their natures alter instantly. Mary, Virg.
TO INSTANT. v. a. [in and state.]

1. To place in a certain rank or condition.
This kind of conquest does only instat the victor in these rights, which the conquered prince had. Hale.

Had this glittering monster been born to thy poverty, he could not have been so bad: nor, perhaps, had thy birth instated thee in the same grandeurs, would it thou have been better. South.

The first of them being eminently holy and good to God, should deserve a blessing to posterity on that account, and prevail at last to have them also accepted as holy, and instated in the favour of God.
Atterbury.

2. To invest. Obsolete.
For his possessions,
Although by confiscation they are ours,
We do instat and widow you withal. Shelley.

TO INSTAURATE. v. a. [instaur, Lat.; instaur, Fr.] To reform; to repair; to supply with improvement.

thongs. Archaolus on Cons.
To INSTIGATE.† v. a. [instigo, Lat. instiguer,
Fr. from the Greek εἰς, or εἰς, to prick, to goad.] To urge to ill;
to provoke or incite to a crime.

If a servant instigates a stranger to kill his master, this being murder in the stranger as principal, of course the servant is accessory only to the crime of murder, though he would have been guilty, as principal, of petty treason. Blackstone.

INSTIGATION. n. s. [instigation, Fr. from instigare.] Incitement to a crime; encouragement; impulse to ill.

Why, what need we
Commune with you of this? But rather follow
Our fearful instigation. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

It was partly by the instigation of some factious malecontents that bare principal strokes amongst them. Bacon.

Shall any man that wilfully procures the cutting of whole armies to pieces, set up for an innocent? As if the lives that were taken away by his instigation were not to be charged upon his account. L'Estrange.

We have an abridgement of all the baseness and villainy that both the corruption of nature and the instigation of the devil could bring the sons of men to. South.

INSTIGATOR. n. s. [instigateur, Fr. from instigare.] Inciter to ill.

Milton, P. L.

2. Insinuate any thing imperceptibly into the mind; to infuse.

Such assemblies be had indeed for religion's sake, harmful nevertheless they may easily prove, as well in regard of their fitness to serve the turn of heretics, and such as privily will swoon adventure to instill their poison into men's minds.
Hooker.

He had a further design to instill and insinuate good instruction, by contributing to men's happiness in this present life. Calany.

Those heathens did in a particular manner instill the principle into their children of loving their country, which is far otherwise now-a-days.
Swift.

INSTINCT.† adj. [instinct, Fr. instinctus,
Latin.] Moved; animated.

Forth rush'd with whirlwind sound
The chariot of paternal deity,
Flashing thick flames, wheel within wheel un-drawn,
Itself instinct with spirit, but convey'd;
By four clerubic shapes. Milton, P. L.

Coffin-house wits, instinct by me, can correct an author's style, and display his minutest errors, without understanding a syllable of his manner or his language! Swift, Battle of the Books.

INSTINCT. n. s. [instinct, Fr. instinctus,
Lat.] This word had its accent formerly on the last syllable. Desire or aversion acting in the mind without the intervention of reason or deliberation;
the power determining the will of brutes.

In him they fear your highness' death,
And have instinct of love and loyalty.
Makes due this forward in his banishment.

Thou knowest I am as valiant as Hercules;
but beware instinct; the lion will not touch the true prince: instinct is a great matter. I was a coward on instinct; I shall think the better of myself and thee, during my life; I for a valiant lion, and thee for a true prince. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

But providence or instinct of nature seems,
Or reason though disturb'd, and scarce consulted,
To have guided me aright. Milton, S. A.

Nature first painted out my Portius to me,
And easily taught me by her secret force
To love thy person, ere I knew thy merit;
Till what was instinct grew up into friendship.
Addison.

The philosopher avers,
That reason guides our deed, and instinct thine thine.
Instinct and reason how shall we divide? Prior.
Reason serves where instinct comes a volunteer. Pope.

To INSTINCT.† v. a. [instinctus, Lat.] To impress as an animating power. This, neither musical nor proper, was perhaps introduced by Bentley, Dr. Johnson says; but it was in use long before Bentley's time.

God would never have instinct the appetite of pleasure, and the faculties of enjoying it, so strongly in man, if He had not meant that in deceasy he should make use of them.

Filtham, Rca. of the Use of Pleasure.

What native unextinguishable beauty must be improved and instinct through the whole, which the defilement of so many parts by bad printer and a worse editor could not hinder from shining forth. Bentley, Prof. to Milton.

INSTINCTION. n. s. [instinctus, Lat.] Instinct. This word preceded instinct.
Obsolete.

This natural instinct of creatures.

4. The agent. It is used of persons as well as things, but of persons very often in an ill sense.
If, surely, you my father do suspect,
An instrument of this your calling back,
Lay not your blame on me. Shakespeare, Othello.

5. That by means whereof something is done.
The gods would not have delivered a soul into the body which hath arms and legs, only instruments of doing; but that it were intended the mind should enjoy the body. Seneca.
All voluntary self-denials and austerities which Christianity commends become necessary, not simply for themselves, but as instruments towards a higher end. Decay of Chr. Party.

Reputation is the smallest sacrifice those can make us, who have been the instruments of our ruin. Swift.

There is one thing to be considered concerning reason, whether syllogism be the proper instrument of it, and the usefulness way of exercising this faculty. Locke.

6. One who acts only to serve the purposes of another.

We scarcely know what was done in his own chamber, but as it pleased her instruments to frame themselves. Sidney.

All the instruments which aided to expose the child, were even then lost when it was found. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

In benefits as well as injuries, it is the principal that we are to consider, not the instrument; that which a man does by another, is in truth his own act. L'Estrange.

The bold are but th' instruments of the wise. They undertake the dangers they advise. Dryden.

INSTRUMENTAL, adj. [instrumental, Fr.; instrumentum, Lat.]

1. Conducive as means to some end; organic.

All second and instrumental causes, without that operative faculty which God gave them, would become altogether silent, virtuous, and dead. Bede, Hist.

Priest, which is instrumental to every thing, hath a particular promise in this thing. Hp. Taylor, Rule of Living Help.

It is not an essential part of religion, but rather an auxiliary and instrumental duty. Smalridge.

I discern some excellent final causes of conjunction of body and soul, but the instrumental I know not, nor what inevitable bands and fetters unite them together. Bacon.

2. Acting to some end; contributing to some purpose; helpful: used of persons and things.

The presbyterian merit is of little weight, when they allege themselves instrumental towards the restoration. Swift.

3. Consisting not of voices but instruments; produced by instruments, not vocal.

They which, under pretence of the law ceremonial abrogated, require the abrogation of instrumental music, approving nevertheless the use of vocal melody to remain, must show some reason, wherefore the one should be thought a legal ceremony and not the other. Hosier.

On hands, While they keep watch, or nightly rounding walk, With heavenly touch of instrumental sounds In full harmonious number join'd, their songs Divide the night, and lift our thoughts to heaven. Milton, P. L.

Sweet voices, mix'd with instrumental sounds, Accord the vaulted roof, the vaulted roof rebounds. Dryden.

INSTRUMENTALITY, n. s. [from instrumental.] Subordinate agency; agency of any thing as means to an end.

Those natural and involuntary actions are not done by deliberation and formal command, yet they are done by the virtue, energy, and influx of the soul, and the instrumentality of the spirits. Hale, Orig. of Manind.

INSTRUMENTALLY, adv. [from instrumental.]

1. In the nature of an instrument; as means to an end.

Men's well-being here in this life is but instrumentally good, as being the means for him to be well in the next life. Dugby.

Habitual preparation for the sacrament consists in a standing, permanent habit, or principle of holiness, wrought chiefly by God's spirit, and instrumentally by his word, in the heart or soul of a man. South.

2. With instruments of music.

The earlier fathers of the church—condemned musical devotion when instrumentally accompanied. Mason on Church Music, p. 27.

INSTRUMENTALNESS, n. s. [from instrumental.] Usefulness as means to an end.

The instrumentality of riches to works of charity, has rendered it very political, in every Christian commonwealth, by laws to settle and secure property. Hammond.

To INSTYLE, v. a. [in and style.] To denominate; to call.

Gladsness shall clothe the earth; we will instyle The face of things an universal smile. Croskank, Poem, p. 101.

INSUAVITY, n. s. [insuavitas, Lat.] Unpleasantness.

All fears, griefs, suspicions, discontents, importunities, insuavities, are swallowed up and drowned in this Euripus, this Irish sea. Burton, Anat. of Mel, p. 215.

INSUBJECTION, n. s. [in and subjection.] State of disobedience to government.

INSUBORDINATION, n. s. [in and subordination.] State of disorder.

INSUBSTANTIAL, adj. [in and substantial.] Not real; unsubstantial.

Like the baseless fabric of this vision, The cloud-capt towers, the gorgeous palaces, The solemn temples, the great globe itself, Yea, all which it inherits, shall dissolve; And, like this insubstantial pageant faded, Leave not a rack behind. Shakespeare, Tempest.

INSUCCATION, n. s. [insuccatus, Lat.] Soaking. Not in use.

As concerning the medicating and insuccation of seeds, I am no great favourer of it. Evelyn, B. i. ch. t. § 5.

INSUFFERABLE, adj. [in and sufferable.]

1. Intolerable; insupportable; intense beyond endurance.

The one is oppressed with constant heat, the other with insufferable cold. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Eyes that confound him born for king away, So fierce, they flash'd insufferable day. Dryden.

Though great light be insufferable to our eyes, yet the highest degree of darkness does not at all disease them; because that causing no disorderly motion, leaves that curious organ unharmed. Locke.

2. Detestable; contemptible; disgusting beyond endurance.

A multitude of scribbles, who daily pester the world with their insufferable stuff, should be discouraged from writing any more. Dryden.

INSUFFERABLY, adv. [from insufferable.] To a degree beyond endurance.

These heavenly slaps Will dazzle now this earthly with their blaze, Insufferably bright. Milton, P. L.

There is no person remarkably ungrateful, who was not also insufferably proud. South.

INSUFFICIENCY, n. s. [insufficiency, Fr.; insufficiency, in and sufficient.] Inadequateness to any end or purpose; want of requisite value or power: used of things and persons.

The minister's aptness or insufficiency, otherwise than by reading to instruct the flock, stands in this place as a stranger, with whom our form of common prayer hath nothing to do. Hosier.

The insufficiency of the light of nature is, by the light of scripture, so fully supplied, that further light than this hath added, there does not need unto that end. Hosier.

We will give you sleepy drinks, that your senses, unintelligent of our insufficiency, may, though they cannot praise us, as little accuse us. W. B. D.

Till experience had discovered their defect and insufficiency, I did certainly conclude them to be infallible. Wittins.

Consider the plea made use of to this purpose, and show the insufficiency and weakness of them. Atterbury.

INSUFFICIENT, adj. [insufficient, Fr.; in and sufficient.] Inadequate to any need, use, or purpose; wanting abilities; incapable; unfit.

The bishop to whom they shall be presented, may justly reject them as incapable and insufficient. Spencer on Ireland.

We are weak, dependent creatures, insufficient to our own happiness, full of wants which of ourselves we cannot relieve, exposed to a numerous train of evils which we know not how to divert. Rogers.

Fading kills by the bad state, not by the insufficient quantity of fluids. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

INSUFFICIENTLY, adv. [from insufficient.] With want of proper ability; not skillfully.

INSUFFLATION, n. s. [in and sufflo, Lat.] The act of breathing upon.

Insufflation, that is, blowing upon. Fulv., Retract., sc. (1580), p. 168.

Imposition of hands is a custom of persons in blessing their children, but taken up by the apostles instead of that divine institution which is christ used. Hammond on Fundamentals.

St. Basil, expressly comparing the divine insufflation upon Adam with that of Christ (St. John, xi. 22), upon the Apostles, tells us that 'twas the same Son of God by whom God gave the insufflation, then infused together with the soul, but now into the soul.

Hp. Vulg. Works, lib. ii. 1125.

INSUITABLE, adj. [in and suitable.] Not suitable.

Many other rites of the Jewish worship seemed to him insuitable to the Divine nature. Burnet, Life of Ld. Rochester, p. 75.

INSULAR, adj. [insularis, Fr.; insularis, Lat.]

1. Belonging to an island. Insularity only is exemplified by Dr. Johnson; but insular was in use as soon, or perhaps sooner, than insularity. Cotgrave translates the French word into insular.

Druids, being surrounded with the sea, is hardly to be invaded, having many other insular advantages. Hovell.

Such is the system of insular subordination, which, having little variety, cannot afford much delight in the view. Johnson, Journ. West. Islands.

INSULAR, n. s. [insularis, n. s. Lat.] An islander.

It is much to be lamented, that our insulars, who act and think so much for themselves, should yet, from grossness of air and diet, grow stupid or dot sooner than other people, who, by virtue of elastic air, wandering, and light food, preserved their faculties to extreme old age. Hp. Berkeley, Sermon, § 109.

To INSULATE, v. a. [from insula, Lat.] To make an island.

The Eden here forms two branches, and insulates the ground. Pennant, Tour.

INSULATED.† adj. [insula, Lat.] Not contiguous on any side; not connected. An administration, composed of insulated individuals. Burke on the Pres. Discontents, (1770). Prudence would dictate this in the case of separate insulated men. Burke on the Fr. Revol.

INSULTE.† adj. [insultus, old Fr.; insultus, Lat.] Dull; insipid; heavy; stupid.

An insult and grill affection.

Milton, Apol. for Smectymnus.
Rabbinical scholasticism, not well attending — gave us this insult rule out of their Talnuds.

Ibid.

INSULTUITY. * n. s. [insultuatus, Lat.; from insult.] Stupidity. Cockeram.

INSULTU. * n. s. [insultus, Lat.; insult, French.]

1. The act of leaping upon any thing. In this sense it has the accent on the last syllable; the sense is rare, Dr. Johnson says, citing Dryden.

The bull's insult at four she may sustain,
But after ten from nuptial rices refrain.

Dryden, Virg.

Terrible balls of flame bursting forth near the foundations with frequent insults, and burning divers times the workmen, rendered the place inaccessible.

Watts, Gen. Prof. to his P. on the N. Test. p. xxviii.

2. Act or speech of insolence or contempt.

The ruthless sneer that insult adds to grief.

Somerv.

Take the sentence seriously, because insults are an insult on the unfortunate.

Brown on the Odyssey.

TO INSULT. v. a. [insulter, Fr.; insultu, Latin.]

1. To treat with insolence or contempt. It is used sometimes with over, sometimes without a preposition.

The poet makes his hero, after he was gluted by the death of Hector, and the honour he did his friend by insulting over his murderer, to be moved by the tears of king Priam.

Pope.

2. To trample upon; to triumph over.

It pleas'd the king his master very lately
To strike at the up on his misconstruction;
When he conjunct, and flatter'd his displeasure,
Tript me behind; being down, insulted, rail'd,
And put upon him such a deal of man,
That worb'd him.

Keats, L. Lear.

So 'scapes the insulting fire his narrow jail,
And makes small outlets into open air.

Dryden.

Ev'n when they sing at ease in full content,
Insulting o'er the toil they underwent,
Yet still they find a future task remain,
To turn the soil.

Dryden, Virg.

TO INSULT. * v. n. To behave with insolent triumph.

There shall the spectator see some insulting with joy, others fretting with melancholy.

B. Jonson, Discourses.

Too many insult in this just punishment, who have deserved none. Sp. Med. Occas. Med. § 92.

INSULTATION. * n. s. [old Fr. insultation; from insult.] Insulting or injurious treatment.

Continual care checks the spirit; continual labour checks the body, and continual insultation both.

Foltham, Res. i. 18.

Hard and scant diet, iron, insultations, scars, and extension of ill usage of all kinds.

Hall, Rem. p. 128.

The perfidiousness of friends, the fraud of flatterers, and the impudent insultations of the basest of the people.

Sp. Prædictus, Euclid. p. 165.

INSULTER.† n. s. [from insult.] One who treats another with insolent triumph.

Paying what ransom the insulter will.

A despised martyr insulting over his insulters, wearing his tormentors.

Whitlock, Mann. of the Eng. p. 553.

Ev'n man, the merciles insulter man,
Man, who rejoices in our set's weakness,
Shall pity thee.

Rome, Jane Shore.

INSULTING. * n. s. [from insult.] An act or speech of contempt or insolence.

Graveless reproaches, and scornful insultings over him in his afflictions.

Barrow, Works. i. 294.

INSULTINGLY. adv. [from insulting.] With contemptuous triumph.

Insultingly, he made your love his boast,
Gave me my life, and told me what it cost.

Dryden.

TO INSUME. * v. a. [insumo, Lat.] To take in.

In drawing the roots, be as insuming as possible of the fibres, which are as it were the enlivening veins, which insume and convey the nourishment to the whole tree.

Evelyn's Earth.

INSUPERABILITY. n. s. [from insuperable.]

The quality of being invincible.

INSUPERABLE.† adj. [insuperable, old Fr. insuperabilis, Lat.] Invincible; insurmountable; not to be conquered; not to be overcome.

This appears to be an insuperable objection, because of the evidence that sense seems to give it.

Digby on Politics.

Much might be done, would we but endeavour; nothing is insuperable to pains and patience.

Ray on the Creation.

And middle natures how they long to join,
But never pass th' insuperable line.

Pope.

INSUPERABLENESS. n. s. [from insuperable.]

Invincibility; impossibility to be surmounted.

INSUPERABLY. adv. [from insuperable.] Invincibly; insurmountably.

Between the grain and the vein of a diamond there is this difference, that the former furthers the latter, being so insuperably hard, hinders the splitting of it.

Grew, Mus.

INSUPPORTABLE.† adj. [insupportable, Fr. in and supportable.] Intolerable; insufferable; not to be endured.

A disgrace put upon a man in company is insupportable; it is heightened according to the greatness of persons that bear.

South.

The boser the enemies are, the more insupportable is the insolence.

L'Estrange.

The thought of being nothing after death is a burden insupportable to a virtuous man; we naturally aim at happiness, and cannot bear to have it confined to our present being.

Dryden.

To those that dwell under or near the equator, this spring would be a most pestilential and insupportable summer; and as for those countries that are nearer the poles, a perpetual spring will not do their business.

Brinkley.

INSUPPORTABLENESS. n. s. [from insupportable.] Insufferableness; the state of being beyond endurance.

Then tell she is so painful a declaration of the insupportableness of her desires, that Dorus's ears procur'd his eyes with tears to give testimony how much they suffered for her suffering.

Sidney.

INSUPPORTABLY. adv. [from insupportable.] Beyond endurance.

But sayest he who stood aloof,
When insupportably his foot advanced,
In scorn of their proud arms and warlike tools,
Spurn'd them to death by troops.

Milton, S. A.

The first day's audience sufficiently convinced me, that the poem was insupportably too long.

Dryden.

INSUPPRESSIBLE. * adj. [in and suppressible.] Not to be concealed or suppressed.

Such an example have we in Addison; which, though liberto suppressed, yet, when once known, is insuppressible; a nature too rare, too striking to be forgotten. Young, Cinq. on Orig. Composition.

INSUPPRESSIVE. * adj. [in and suppressive.]

Not to be kept under; not to be suppressed.

Do not stain

The even virtue of our enterprise,
Nor the insuppressive mettle of our spirits.

Shakespeare, Jul. Cas.

An insuppressive spring will raise him up. In spite of fortune's load. Young, Night Th. 7.

INSURABLE.† adj. [from To insure.] Capable of being insured, that is, of being exempted from hazard, or entitled to certain advantages, by paying a certain sum; as, the goods are insurable; the life of the person is insurable.

INSURANCE. * n. s. [from insure.] Exemption from hazard, obtained by payment of a certain sum; a method of providing for a sum which might be lost on the death of a person, or of securing to the heir a certain sum at the person's decease. See INSURANCE.

INSURANCER. * n. s. One who promises a kind of security. See INSURANCE.

The far fam'd sculptor, and the laurel'd bard,
Those insurancers of domestic flame,
Supply their little feeble aids in vain.

Blair, The Grave.

TO INSURE. * See TO ENSURE.

INSURER. * See ENSURER.

INSURGENT. * n. s. [insurgens, Lat.] One who rises in open rebellion against the established government of his country.

(On the part of his imperial majesty, the insurgents were not treated with lenity.)

Guthrie, Netherlands.

INSURMOUNTABLE.† adj. [insurmountable, Fr. in and surmountable.] Insuperable; unconquerable.

This difficulty is insurmountable, still I can make simplicity and variety the same.

Locke.

Hope thinks nothing difficult; despair tells us, that difficulty is insurmountable.

Watts.

INSURMOUNTABLY.† adv. [from insurmountable.] Invincibly; unconquerably.

INSURRECTION.† n. s. [insurrectio, Lat. from insurgo, to rise against.

The old French language has insurrection, not in this sense, but in that of lifting up, elevation.] A seditious rising; a rebellious commotion.

Between the acting of a dreadful thing.

And the first motion, all the interim is like a phantasma, or a hideous dream:

The genius and the mortal instruments are then in council; and the state of man, like to a little kingdom, suffers then

The nature of an insurrection.

Shakespeare, Jul. Cas.

This city of old time hath made insurrections against kings, and that rebellion and sedition have been made therein.

Earn.

There shall be a great insurrection upon them that fear the Lord.

Isa. xvi. 70.

Insurrections of blue people are commonly more furious in their beginnings.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

The trade of Rome had like to have suffered another great stroke by an insurrection in Egypt.

INSURRECTIONARY.* adj. [from insurrection.] Suitable to an insurrection.

Churches, play-houses, coffee-houses, all alike are destined to be mingled, and equalised, and blended into one common rubbish; and well sifted, and lividated, to crystallise into true democratic explosive insurrectionary mire.

Barker, lett. to a Noble Lord.

INSUSCEPTIBLE.* adj. [in and susceptible.] Not susceptible; not capable.

I find in the howls of your last much harsh and stiff matter from Scotland, and I believe insusceptible of any further concession, unless it be with much time, "quod concipit omnia."

Watson, lett. edit. (1638.) Rem. p. 274.

INSURURATION.* n. s. [insurur, Lat.] The act of whispering into something.

The other party insururates their Roman principles by whispers and private insururations.

INTACTIBLE.* adj. [in and tactum, Lat.] Not perceptible to the touch.

Dict.

INTAGLIATED.* adj. [intagliato, Ital. from intaglio.] Engraved; stamped on.

In the arable grounds towards Barton, lying on a bed of stone, has been found a species of antelope, or stary-stone, very beautiful, deeply intagliated or engraved like a seal, and striated from the prominent protagonal edges above, to a centre in the bottom.

Watson, Hist. of Kidlington, p. 25.

INTAGLIO. n. s. [Italian.] Any thing that has figures engraved on it so as to rise above the ground.

We meet with the figures which Jurena describes on antique intaglio and medals.

Addison on Italy.

INTAKE.* See ENTAIL.

INTAKE.* n. s. An inclosure, taken in from a common or waste. Craven Dialect, and Wilbraham's Cheshire Glossary.

INTANGIBLE.* adj. [in and tangible.] Not to be touched.

Being extremely solid, as well as invisible, [a feigned portable castle,] a man should be still in danger of knocking his head against every wall and pillar, unless it were also intangible, as some of the Peripatetics affirm!

To INTANGIBLE, Duce, of a New World, P. ii. p. 148.

To INTANGIBLE. See TO ENTANGLE, and its derivatives.

INTASTABLE.* adj. [in and taste.] Not raising any sensations in the organs of taste. A word not elegant, nor used.

Something which is invisible, intastable, and intangible, as existing only in the fancy, may produce a pleasure superior to that of sense. Gen.

INTEGER. n. s. [Latin.] The whole of any thing.

As not only signified a piece of money, but any integer; from whence is derived the word ace, or unit.

INTEGRAL.* adj. [integral, French; integer, Lat.]

1. Whole: applied to a thing considered as comprising all its constituent parts.

A local motion keepeth bodies integral, and their parts together.

Bacon, Nov. Hist.

2. Uninjured; complete; not defective.

No wonder if one remain speechless, though of integral principles, who, from an infant, should be bred up amongst noises, and have no teaching.

Holder.

3. Not fractional; not broken into fractions.

INTEGRAL. n. s. The whole made up of parts.

Physicians, by the help of anatomical dissections, have searched into those various members of the veins, arteries, nerves, and integrals of the human body.

Hale.

Consider the infinite complications and combinations of several concurrences to the constitution and operation of almost every integral in nature.

Hale.

A mathematical whole is better called integral, when the several parts, which make up the whole, are distinct, and each may subsist apart.

Watts.

INTEGRALITY.* n. s. [integralité, French; from integral.] Wholeness; completeness.

Colgrave, and Sherwood.

Such as in their integrality support nature.

Whitaker, Blood of the Grape.

Wholly; completely.

They are integrally, or in their parts, helpful or hurtful.

Whitaker, Blood of the Grape.

INTEGRANT.* adj. [integrans, Lat.]

Contributing to make up a whole.

Not compounded like bodies of integrant parts.

L. Addison, State of the Jews, (1675.) p. 18.

A true natural aristocracy is not a separate interest in the state, or separable from it. It is an essential integrant part of any large people rightly constituted.

TO INTEGRATE.* v. a. [integrare, integratus, Lat.] To form one whole; to contain all the parts of.

Two distinct substances, the soul and the body, go to compound and integrate the man.

South, Serm. vol. 14.

All the several branches of it are required to integrate or make up the Gospel spirit.

Hammond, Works, iv. 591.

All the particular doctrines which integrate Christianity.

Chillingworth, Rel. Prof. ch. 2. § 159.

INTEGRATION.* n. s. [integratio, Latin.]

The act of making whole; the act of restoring.

Cockeram.

INTEGRITY. n. s. [intégrité, Fr.; integratus, from integrare, Lat.]

1. Honesty; uncorrupt mind; purity of manners; uncorruptedness.

Macbeth, this noble passion.

Child of integrity, bath from my soul
Wip'd the black scruples, reconcil'd my thoughts
To thy good truth and honour.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Whoever has examined both parties cannot go far towards the extremes of either, without violence to his integrity or understanding.

Swift.

This libertine, instead of attempting to corrupt our integrity, will conceal and disguise his own vices.

Bragg.

2. Purity; genuine unadulterated state.

Language continued long in its purity and integrity.

Hale.

3. Intireness; unbroken whole.

Take away this transformation, and there is no chasm, nor can it affect the integrity of the action.

Hale.

INTEGUMENT.* n. s. [integumentum, integro, Lat.] Any thing that covers or envelopes another.

I make no question but all kinds of wits and capacities may be found under all tinctures and integuments.

Watson on Education, Rem. p. 79.

He could no more live without his integument than without his skin: it is not indeed so properly his coat, as what the anatomists call one of the integuments of the body.

Addison.

INTELLECT.* n. s. [intellectus, Fr.; intellectus, Lat.] The most pure part of the soul, and (as Aristotle sayeth) divine, impassible, and incorruptible, is named in Latin intellectus; whereunto I can find no proper English but understanding. For intelligence, which cometh of intelligentia, is the perceiving of that which is first conceived by understanding, called intellectus.—Wherefore I will use this word understanding for intellectus, untill some other more proper English word may be found and brought in custom.

Sir Tho. Elyot, Gov. edit. 1580. fol. 201.] The intelligent mind; the power of understanding.

All heart they live, all head, all eye, all ear,

All intellect, all sense.

Milton, P. L.

All those arts, rarities, and inventions, which vulgar minds gaze at, and the ingenious pursue, are but the reliques of an intellect defaced with sin and time.

Smith.

INTELLECTION. n. s. [intellection, Fr. from intellectus, Lat.] The act of understanding.

Simple apprehension denotes the soul's naked intellection of an object, without either composition or deduction.

Glanville, Scopis.

They will say 'tis not the bulk or substance of the animal spirit, but the mind and will, which produces intellection and sense.

Bentley, Serm.

INTELLECTIVE.* adj. [intellectivus, Fr. from intellectus.]

1. Having power to understand.

Because the intellective soul is not of necessity serving to any other faculty or power, therefore is she as lady, mistress, and queen, over all the other powers, faculties, or virtues of the soul.

Plat., First of Civil Life, (1683.) p. 96.

To the section of bodies, we find man, of all sensible creatures, to have the fullest brain to his proportion, and that it was so provided by the Supreme Wisdom for the lodging of the intellective faculties.

Watson on Education, Rem. p. 81.

If a man as intellective be created, then either he means the whole man, or only that by which he is intellective.

Glanville.

2. To be perceived by the intellect, not the senses.

Instead of beginning with arts most easy, (and those be such as are most obvious to the sense,) they present their young unwarlike scholars with the most intellective abstractions of logic and metaphysics.

Milton on Education.

INTELLECTUAL.* adj. [intellectualis, French; intellectualis, low Latin.]

1. Relating to the understanding; belonging to the mind; transacted by the understanding.

Religion teaches us to present to God our bodies as well as our souls; if the body serves the soul in actions natural and civil, and intellectual, it must not be used in the only offices of religion.

Rp. Taylor.

2. Mental; comprising the faculty of understanding; belonging to the mind.

Logic is to teach us the right use of our reason, or intellectual powers.

Watts.

3. Ideal; perceived by the intellect, not the senses.

In a dark vision's intellectual scene,
Beneath a bow for sorrow made,
The melancholy Cowley lay.

Cowley.

A train of phantoms, with low order rose,
And, join'd, this intellectual scene compose.

Page.

4. Having the power of understanding.

Anaxagoras and Plato term the Maker of the world an intellectual worker.

Hobbes.

Who would lose,
Though full of pain, this intellect being,
These thoughts that wander through eternity,
To perish rather, swallow'd up and lost,
In the wide womb of uncreated night,
Devoid of sense and motion? Milton, P. L.

5. Proposed as the object not of the senses but intellect: as, Cudworth names his book the intellectual system of the universe.

INTELLECTUAL. n. s. Intellect; understanding; mental powers or faculties. This is little in use.

Her husband—
Whose higher intellect more I shun. Milton, P. L.

The fancies of most, like the index of a clock, are moved but by the inward springs of the corporeal machine; which, even on the most sublimed intellect, is dangerously influential.

Glennville, Scoria.

I have not consulted the repute of my intellect in bringing their weaknesses into such discerning presences. Glennville.

INTELLECTUALIST. n. s. [from intellectual]. One who over-rates the human understanding.

Upon these intellectualists, which are notwithstanding commonly taken for the most sublime and divine philosophers, Heraclitus gave a just censure. Bacon, Adv. of Learning, B. I.

INTELLECTUALITY. n. s. [from intellectual]. The state of intellectual power.

Senses signifies little in this place, he being no better than a compositely able, i. e. he made a certain plastic or spermatic nature, devoid of all animality or conscious intellectuality, to be of the highest principle in the universe.

INTELLIGENCE. † n. s. [intelligence, INTELLIGENCY. † French; intelligence, Latin. "Intelligence, which cometh of intelligencia, is the perceiving of that which is first conceived by understanding, called intellectus. Also intelligence is now used for an elegant word, where there [are] mutual treaties or appointments, either by letters or messages, special concerning warres, or like other great affairs, between princes or noble men." Sir T. Elyot, Gov. ed. 1580, fol. 201.]

1. Commerce of information; notice; mutual communication; account of things distant or secret.

INTEMPERANCE. n. s. [intemperance, Fr. intemperancy, intemperantia, Lat.]

1. Want of temperance; want of moderation; commonly excess in meat or drink.

*Boundless intemperance
In nature is a tyranny.* Shakespeare, Macb.

Another law of Lycurgus induced to intemperance and all kind of incontinency. Hobbes.

Some, as thou saw'st, by violent stroke shall die;

By fire, flood, famine, by intemperance move
In meats and drinks, which on the earth shall bring

Diseases dire; of which a monstrous crew
Before thee shall appear; that thou may'st know
What misery the intemperance of Ew Shall bring on men. Milton, P. L.

The Lacedæmonians trained up their children to hate drunkenness and intemperance, by bringing a drunken man into their company. Watts.

2. Excessive addition to any appetite or affection.

INTEMPERATE. adj. [intemperant, Fr. intemperatus, Latin.]

1. Immoderate in appetite; excessive in meat or drink; drunken; gluttonous.

More women should die than men, if the number of burials answered in proportion to that of sicknesses; but men, being more intemperate than women, die as much by reason of their vices, as women do by the infirmity of their sex. Gravel.
Notwithstanding all their talk of reason and philosophy, and those unanswerable doubts, which, over their cups or their coffee, they pretend to have against Christianity; perjure but the covetous man not to defile his money, the intemperate man to abandon his revels, and I dare undertake that all their giant-like objections shall vanish. South.

2. Passionate; ungovernable; without rule.

You are more intemperate in your blood
Than those pompous'd animals, Shakespeare,
That rage in savage sensuality.
Use not thy mouth to intemperate swearing;
for therein is the word of sin. Leviticus, xiii. 13.

3. Excessive; exceeding the just or convenient mean; as, an intemperate climate; we have intemperate weather.

TO INTEMPERATE. v. a. [from the adjective.] To disorder; to put any thing out of its just or convenient state.

The fifth age is virile, and the media between young and old age; yet doth it not so participate of either, as to affect or intemperate it; as it beginneth at thirty-five, so it extendeth to forty-nine. Walsley, Disc. of the Groups, p. 52.

INTEMPERATELY. adv. [from intemperate.]

1. With breach of the laws of temperance.
How grossly do many of us contemn the plain precepts of the Gospel, by living intemperately or unjustly. Tillotson.

2. Immoderately; excessively.

1. Want of moderation.

2. Unseasonableness of weather.

INTEMPERATE. n. s. [intemperate, Fr. from intemperate.] Excess of some quality. Colgrave, and Sherwood.

INTEMPESTIVE. adj. [intempestif, French; intempestivus, Latin.] Unreasonable; untimely; not suitable to time or occasion. This word was formerly much in use; it is now perhaps obsolete.

Many diseases accompany, as incubus, apoplexy, frequent wakings, and terrible dreams; intempestive laughing, weeping, sighing.

Burton, Anat. of Med. p. 180.
Being aged and diseased—he married a widow of London. A chief favourite at that time, hearing of this intempestive marriage, took advantage thereof, [and] caused it to be told to the queen. Harrington, Br. View of the Ch. p. 114.

Intempestive baseness gets nothing.

Hales, Ren. p. 143.

INTEMPESTIVELY. adv. [from intempestive.]

Unsuitable to time or occasion.

They [inducement pastors] still aggravate sin, blunder out God's judgments without respect, intempestively rail at and pronounce them damned, in all auditories, for giving so much to sports and honest recreations, making every small fault, and thing indifferent, an irreparable offence.

Burton, Anat. of Med. p. 698.

INTEMPESTIVITY. n. s. [from intempestive.]

Unsuitableness to time or occasion.

Our moral books tell us of a vice, which they call tempestive intemperancy; an indiscretion, by which unwise and unexperienced men see not what befits times, persons, occasions.

Hale, Sermon, at Eton, p. 4.

Courtesies, not acknowledged, are suspected that they were either guilty of intempestive and unseasonableness, or else of want of worth and glory.

Gayton on D. Quix. p. 157.

INTEMPERATE. adj. [in and tenable.] Indefensible; as, an intemperate opinion; an intemperate fortress. See also INTE-

NIBLE.

His lordship's [Bolingbroke's] proposition may be expressed in plainer terms, "That the more the world has advanced in real knowledge, the more it has discovered of the incompleteness of the Gospel." To expose the futility of his maxim, I shall first of all show, that it was not ignorance which gave the Gospel its early credit; which is a presumption, at least, that knowledge hath not since hurt it. — From [the] presumptions I proceed to a direct proof, that as the infant growth of the Gospel was not retarded by that flourishing state of knowledge which saw it in its birth, so the revived knowledge of the same later age did greatly support the established principles of Revelation, by illustrating its principal truths. Since the more careful cultivation of natural and moral science; Philosophy, History, and Antiquity, have all contributed to spread a new light over the evidences of it. Warburton, Sermon, xiii.

TO INTEMPER. v. a. [intendo, Latin.]

1. To stretch out. Obsolete.

The same advancing high above his head,
With sharp intempering so rude him smote,
That to the earth him drove, as stricken dead. Spenser, F. Q.

2. To enforce; to make intense; to attract.

What seems to be the ground of the assertion, is the magnified quality of this star, connected in cause or intent the heat of this season, we find that wiser antiquity was out of this opinion.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

By this the lungs are intempered or retained.

This intempering is essential to matter, because it neither can be intempered or remitted in the same body; but is always proportional to the quantity of matter.

Clyene.
Magnesium may be intempered and remitted, and is found only in the magnet and in iron.

Newton, Opt.

3. To regard; to attend; to take care of.

Having no children, she did with singular care and tenderness intend the education of Philip. Bacon, Hist. F. II.

The king prayed them to have patience till a little smoke, that was raised in his country, was over; alighting, as his manner was, that openly, which nevertheless he intended seriously. Bacon, Hist. F. II.

4. To pay regard or attention to. This sense is now little used.

They could not intend to the recovery of that country of the north. Sydney.

Neither was there any who might share in the government, while the king intended his pleasure. Bacon, Hist. F. II.

The earl was a very acute and sound speaker, when he would intend it. id. id.

Go therefore, mighty powers! intend at home, While here shall be our home, what best may ease The present misery. Milton, P. L.

Their beauty they, and our loves suspend;
Nought can our wishes, save thy health, intend. Waller.

5. To mean; to design.

The opinion the lad of his wisdom was such as made him esteem greater of his words; but that the words themselves sounded so, as also could not imagine what they intended. Sidney.

The body would not have delivered a soul into the gods, which held arms as legs, as instruments of doing, but that it was intended the mind should employ them. Sidney.

Thou art sworn
As deeply to effect what we intend,
As closely to conceal what we impart. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

According to this model Horace writ his odes and epodes; for his satires and epistles, being intended wholly for instruction, required another style. Dryden.

INTEPENDANT. n. s. [French.] An officer of the highest class, who oversees any particular allotment of the publick business.

Nearchus, who commanded Alexander's fleet, and Onesicritus, his intendant general of marines, have both left relations of the Indies. Ambrosius.

INTENDER. n. s. [from intend.] One who has intention to do a thing.

Sherwood.

They that do me good and know not of it, are causes of our benefit, though I do not owe them my thanks; and I will rather bless them as instruments, than condemn them as not intenders.

Fetham, Rev. i. 32.

TO INTENDER. See TO INTENDER.

INTENDIMENT. n. s. [intendement, Fr. intendimentum, Italian.]

1. Attention; patient hearing; accurate examination. This word is only to be found in Spenser.

Be thought heretofore dismay'd,
Till well you wote, by grave intendiment,
What woman, and wherefore, doth me upbraid. Spenser, F. Q. l. xii. 31.

2. Understanding; skill.

For she of herth had great intendiment. Spenser, F. Q. iii. v. 32.

3. Consideration; thought.

He that is of reason's skill bereft,
And wants the staff of wisdom him to stay,
Is like a ship in midst of tempest left,
Whom when helm or rudder he doth sway,
Full speed and down'dale is that ship's erect;
So is the man that wants intendiment. Spenser, Tears of the Muses.

INTENDMENT. n. s. [entendement, Fr.] Intention; design.

Out of my love to you, I came hither to acquaint you withal; that either you might say him from his intendment, or break up with disgrace well as shall run into. Shakespeare.

All that worship for fear, profit, or some other by-end, fall more or less within the intendment of this emblem. I. Extrange.

TO INTER-NERATE. † n. s. [in and tener, Lat.] To nuke tender; to soften.

Inter-nate that heart, that sets so light The transient love that ever yet was seen. Daniel, Sonnet 10. (1394.)

This acknowledgement of your singular love I was never once fit to pay you than at the present, being inter-nated in all my inward feelings and affections by new sickness. Wotton, Rem. 354.

So have I seen the little pearls of a stream swell through the bottom of a bank, and inter-nate the stubborn pavement, till it had made it fit for the impression of a child's foot. Bp. Taylor, Sermon (1651.) p. 304.

Autumn vigour gives,

Equal, inter-nating, milky grain. Philips.

INTER-NERATION. † n. s. [from inter-nate.] The act of softening or making tender.

TO INTERE, v. a. [interer, French.] 1. To cover under; to bury.

Within their chiefest temple I'll erect
A tomb, wherein his corpse shall be inter'd. Shakespeare.

The evil that men do lives after them;
The good is oft interred with their bones. Shakespeare.
His body shall be royally inter'd.
And the last funeral pomp adorns his hearse. Dryden.

The ashes, in an old record of the convent, are said to have been interred between the very wall and the altar where they were taken up. Addison on Italy.

2. To cover with earth.

The best way is to inter them as you furrow pass. Martineau.

INTERACT, n. s. [Lat. inter, between, and act.] A dramatic phrase, meaning the time, between the acts of the drama, during which the representation is suspended, and which is now usually filled up by the music of the orchestra. See INTERMEAN.

It is only the interacts of other amusements. Ed. Chatterfield.

INTERAMIAN, adj. [inter and amnis, a river, Latin.] Situated among rivers.

The passing of a river could not be reckoned an extraordinary occurrence, especially when the person spoken of lived in an interamian country; and, in a part of it, which was close bounded by two streams, the Tigris and the Euphrates. Bryant, Anal. Ess. Mythol. iii. 420.

INTERBASTION, n. s. [interbaster, Fr. to quit between. Cotgrave. See the third sense also of TO BASTE.] Patchwork. Not in use.

A metaphor, taken from interbasting, patching or piecing, sewing or clapping close together. Smith on Old Ages (1696), p. 184.

INTERCALAR, † adj. [intercalaire, Fr. INTERCALARY.] [intercalaris, Lat.] Inserted out of the common order to preserve the equation of time, as the twenty-ninth of February in a leap year is an intercalary day.

Towards the latter end of February, is the bisextile or intercalary day. Haller on Time.
The intercalary days, according to the method of the Egyptians, were never accounted any part of the month or year, but only an appendix to them. Whiston on the Chron. Pr. ch. 5. § 36.

TO INTERCALATE, † v. a. [intercaler, Fr. intercalo, Latin.] To insert an extraordinary day.

The day is intercalated. Johnson, in F. Biometrical.

INTERCALATION, n. s. [intercalation, Fr. intercalatio, Lat.] Insertion of days out of the ordinary reckoning.

In sixty-three years there may be lost almost eighteen days, omitting the intercalation of one day every fourth year, allowed for this quadruple, or six superannuations. Brown.

TO INTERCEDE, v. n. [interceder, Fr. intercedo, Latin.]

1. To pass between.

He supposed that a vast period interceded between that origination and the age wherein he lived. Hale, Orig. of Mandarins.

Those superfluous reflect the greatest quantity of light, which have the greatest refracting power, and which intercede mediums that differ most in their refractive densities. Newton.

2. To mediate; to act between two parties with a view of reconciling differences. It has with if only one part be named, and between if both be named.

Thou the glad Son
Presenting, thou to intercede began. Mills, P. L.
Nor was our blessed Saviour only our propitiation to die for us, and procure our atonement, but he is still our advocate, continually interceding with his father in behalf of all true penitents. Caldemy.

I may restore myself into the good grace of my fair critics, and your lordship may intercede with them on my promise of amendment. Dryden.
Origin denies that any prayer is to be made to them, although it be only to intercede with God for us, but only the Son of God. Stillingfleet.

INTERCEDER, n. s. [from intercede.] One that intercedes; a mediator.

INTERCEDING, n. s. [from intercede.] Intercession.

Besides these offerings, and intercedings, there was something more required of the priest; and that is, blessing. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 2.

TO INTERCEPT, v. a. [interceptor, Fr. interceptus, Lat.]

1. To stop and seize in the way.

The better course should be by planting of garriisons about him, which, whenever he shall look forth, or be drawn out, shall be always ready to intercept his going or coming. Smyth on Ireland.

Who intercepts me in my expedition?
— O, the that might have intercepted thee,
By strangling thee. Shakespeare, Rich. III.
I then in London, keeper of the king,
Must'rd' his soldiers, gather'd flocks of friends,
Murder'd towards St. Albans to intercept the queen. Shakespeare.

Your intercepted packets
You will see the paper. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.
If we hope for things which are at too great a distance from us, it is possible that we may be intercepted by death in our progress towards them. Addison, Spect.

2. To obstruct; to cut off; to stop from being communicated; to stop in the progress. It is used of the thing or person passing.

Though they cannot answer my distress,
Yet in some sort they're better than the tribunes;
For that they will not intercept my tale. Shakespeare.

Behind the hole I fastened to the postboard,
With pitch, the blade of a sharp knife, to intercept some part of the light which passed through the hole. Newton, Opticks.

3. It is used of the act of passing. Since death's near, and runs with its too force,
We must meet first, and intercept his course. Dryden.

4. It is used of that to which the passage is directed.

On barbed steeds they rode in proud array,
Thick as the college of the bees in May,
When swarming o'er the dusky fields they fly,
New to the flow'rs, and intercept the sky. Dryden.

Which voyaging from Troy the victors bore,
While storms vindictive intercept the shore. Pope.

INTERCEPTER, n. s. [from intercept.] One who stands in the way; an opponent.

That defence thou hast, betake thee to it:
Of what nature the wrongs are thou hast done him, I
I know not; but thy interceptor, full of daylight, bloody as the hunter, attacks thee at the orchard end. Shakespeare, Twelfth Night.

INTERCEPTION, n. s. [interception, French; interceptio, Latin, from intercept.] Stoppage in course; hindrance; obstruction.

The pillars, standing at a competent distance from the outmost wall, will, by interception of the night, somewhat in appearance diminish the breadth. Wotton on Architecture.

The word in Matthew doth not only signify suspension, but also suffocation, strangulation, or intercession of breath. Brown.

INTERCESSION. n. s. [intercession, Fr.; intercessio, Lat.] Mediation; interposition; agency between two parties; agency in the cause of another, generally in his favour, sometimes against him.

Loving, and therefore constant, he used still the intercession of diligence and faith, ever hoping because he would not put himself into that hell to be hopeless. Stillingfleet.

Cao you, when you push'd out of your gates the very defender of them, think to front his revenges with the paled intercession of such a decay'd dotard as you seem to be. Shelley.
He maketh intercession to God against Israel. Rom. xi. 2.

He bare the sin of many, and made intercession for the transgressors. Isa. liii. 12.

Pray not thus for this people, neither make intercession to me; for I will not hear thee. Jer. vii. 16.

To pray to the saints to obtain things by their merits and intercessions, is allowed and contended for by the Roman church. Stillingfleet.
Your intercession now is needless grown;
Retire, and let me speak with her alone. Dryden, Aurengzebe.

To INTERCESSIONATE, * v. a. [from intercession.] To entreat. Not in use. Cockerm.

They never ceased extensively to intercessionate God for his recovery. Nash, Terror of the Night, (1594.)

INTERCESSORY, * adj. [from intercessor, Lat.] Interceding.

The Lord's Prayer has an intercessory petition for our enemies. Early on Modern Fancism, (1790.) p. 39.

INTERCESSOR. n. s. [from intercessor, Fr.; intercessor, Lat.] Mediator; agent between two parties to procure reconciliation.

Behold the heavens! thither thine eyesight bend;
Thy looks, sighs, tears, for intercessors send. Fairfax.

On man's behalf,
Patron or intercessor, none appear'd. Milton, P. L.

When we shall hear our eternal doom from our intercessor, it will convince us, that a denial of Christ is more than transitory error. South.

To INTERCH'IN, v. a. [inter and chain.]
To chain; to link together.

Two bonoms interchain'd with an oath;
So then two bonoms, and a single thread. Shaksp.

To INTERCHANGE, v. a. [inter and change.]

1. To put each in the place of the other; to give and take mutually; to exchange. They had left but one piece of one ship, whereon they kept themselves in all truth, having interchanged their cures, while either cared for other, each comforting and counselling how to labour for the better, and to abide the worse. Stedley.

I shall interchange
My wained state for Henry's regal crown. Shaks.

2. To succeed alternately. His faithful friend and brother Euruchus came so mightily to his succour, that, with some interchanging changes of fortune, they legat of a just war, the best child peace. Stedley.

INTERCH'ANGE. n. s. [from the verb.]
1. Commerce; permutation of commodities.

Those have an interchange or trade with Elena. Hood.

2. Alternate succession. With what delights could I have walk'd the round,

If I could joy to sight, sweet interchange
Of hill, and valley, rivers, woods, and plains! Milton, P. L.

The original measures of time, by help of the lights in the firmament, are perceptible to us by the interchanges of light and darkness, and succession of seasons. Hobbes.

Remorse and interchanges would often happen in the first ages after the flood. Burnet, Theory.

3. Mutual donation and reception. Let Diomedes bear him,
And bring us Cressid higher. Good Diomedes,
Furnish us fairly for this encounter, though not personal, have been royally attended with interchange of gifts. Shakspere.

After so vast an obligation, owned by so free an acknowledgement, could any thing be expected but a continual interchange of kindnesses? South.

INTERCHANGEABLE. adj. [from interchange.]

1. Given and taken mutually. So many tinctious, interchangeable warrants, and counterwarrants, running through the lands and resting in the power of so many several persons, is sufficient to argue and convince all manner of falsehood. Bacon, Off. of Alms.

2. Following each other in alternate succession.

Just under the line they may seem to have two winters and two summers; but there also they have four interchangeable seasons, which is enough whereby to measure. Hobbes.

All along the history of the Old Testament we find the interchangeable providences of God, towards the people of Israel, always suited to their manners. Tillotson.

INTERCHANGEABLENESS. * n. s. [from interchangeable.]

1. Exchange. Nothing but its interchangeableness with cash can restore the credit of paper. Huskinson on Currency, p. 144.

2. Alternate succession. Continued with as much courage as interchangeable success. Fidler, Holy War, p. 128.

INTERCHANGEABLY. adv. [from interchangeable.] Alternately; in a manner whereby each gives and receives. In those two things the east and west churches did interchangeably both confront the Jews and converse with them. Hobbes.

This in myself I boldly will defend,
And interchangeably hurl down my gage
Upon this overweening traitor's foot. Shakspere, Rich. II.

These articles were signed by our prelatarians, and those of Holland; but not by the French, although it ought to have been done interchangeably; and the ministers here prevailed on the queen to execute a ratification of articles, which only one part had signed. Swift.

INTERCHANGEMENT. n. s. [inter and change.] Exchange; mutual transference.

A contract of eternal bond of love. Confess'd by mutual joinder of your hands, Attended by the holy close of lips, Strengthen'd by interchanging of your veils. Shakspere.

INTERCIPIENT. n. s. [intercipiens, Latin.] An intercepting power; something that causes a stoppage.

They commensal expellents, but not with much stringency, unless as interceptors upon the parts above, lest the matter should thereby be impacted in the part. Wierman.

INTERCIPTION. * n. s. [intercizio, Latin.] Interruption.

By cessation of oracles we may understand their intercession, not abscission, or consummation desolation. Brown.

Some sudden interceptions of the light of the sun. Spenser on Prod. p. 255.

In a larger and better sense, after those interceptions, the thirne of David was continued. Poem on the Croed, Art. 6.

To INTERCLUDE, * v. n. [intercludo, Lat.] To shut from a place or course by something intervening; to intercept.

The voice is sometimes intercluded by a hoarseness, or viscous phlegm cleaving to the aspera arteria. Hobbes.

Laying siege against their cities, intercepting their ways and passages, and cutting off from them all commerce with other places or nations. Pococke on Hues, p. 53.

INTERCLUSION. * n. s. [interclusus, Lat.] Obstruction; interception. Cockerm.

INTERCOLUMNATION. * n. s. [inter and columna, Lat.] The space between the pillars.

The distance of intercolumination may be near four of his own diameter, because the materials commonly laid over this pillar were rather of wood than stone. Watson.

The new pillars are nearly equal in bulk to the old ones; and the intercolumination remains much the same. Lowth, Life of Wycliffe, § 6.

To INTERCOMME, * v. n. [inter and come.] To interpose; to interfere.

They must give me leave to state with what affection and resolution, notwithstanding the pope's intercommencing to make himself a party in the quarrel, the bishops did adhere to their own sovereignty. Proceedings against Garnet, (1606.) Rr. b.

To INTERCOMMUNION. * v. n. [inter and communio.]

1. To feed at the same table.

Wine is to be forbore in communion, for that the spirits of the wine do prey upon the rosic juice of the body, and intercommunion with the spirits of the body, and so rob them of their nourishment. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. To use commons promiscuously.

Beasts of several signing parties do promiscuously intercommunion together, "per cause de vicinage." Blount, Anc. Ten. p. 145.

Common because of vicinage, or neighbourhood, is where the inhabitants of two townships, which lie contiguous to each other, have usually intercommunion with one another. Blackstone.

INTERCOMMUNITY. * n. s. [inter and communio.]

1. A mutual communication or community.

Probably it is from this era, that we are to date that remarkable intercommunity and exchange of each other's compositions, which we discover to have taken place at some early period between the French and English ministers.

Bp. Percy, Ess. on the Anc. Eng. Minstrels, § 4.
It admits of no tolerance, no intercommunity of various sentiments, not the least difference of opinion. Lowth to Warburton, p. 13.

2. A mutual freedom or exercise of religion.

Admitting each other's pretensions, there must needs be amongst them perfect harmony and intercommunion; there being no room for any other disputes but whose god was most powerful. Such was the root and foundation of this sociability of religion in the ancient world, so much envied by our modern Infidels; the effect of their absurdities, as they were religious; and of their imperfections, as they were societies.

Warburton, All. of Civ. and Soc. (1st ed.), p. 139.
INTERCOSTAL, adj. [intercostal, Fr. inter and costa, Lat.] Placed between the ribs.

The diaphragm seems the principal instrument of ordinary respiration, although it remains respiring the intercostal muscles may concur.

Boyle.
 By the assistance of the inward intercostal muscles, in deep respirations, we take large gulps of air.

INTERCOURSE, n. s. [entre-cours, Fr.]

1. Commerce; exchange.

This sweet intercourse
 Of looks, and smiles; for smiles from reason flow,
 To brute deny'd, and are of love the food.

Milton, P. L.
 2. Communication: followed by with.
 The choice of the place requires many circumstances, as the situation near the sea, for the commodiousness of an intercourse with England.

Bacon.
 What an honour is it that God should admit us into such a participation of himself? That he should give us minds capable of such an intercourse with the Supreme Mind? Atterbury.

INTERCURRO, v. n. [intercurro, Lat.]
 To intervene; to come in the mean time; to happen.

So that there intervene no sin in the acting thereof.

Sheldon, 2. Quin. ix. 9.
 When the notice of parties intervenes, I do believe, although I am a simple man and a stoner, that there is no kind of enchantment. Id. iv. 10.

INTERCURRENCE, n. s. [from intercurrere, Lat.]

1. Passage between.

Consider what fluidity sulphure is capable of, without the intercurrent of a liquor. Boyle.

2. Intervention; occurrence.

To be sagacious in such intercurrents is not superstition, but wary and pious discretion; and to condemn such hints were to be deaf to the speaking hand of God. Brown, Chr. Min. i. 29.

INTERCURRENT, adj. [intercurrents, Lat.]

1. Running between.
 If into a phial, filled with good spirit of nitre, you cast a piece of iron, the liquor, whose parts moved placidly before, meeting with particles in the iron, altering the motion of its parts, and perhaps that of some very subtle intercurrent matter, these active parts presently begin to penetrate, and scatter abroad particles of the iron. Boyle.

2. Occurring; intervening.

Making fair representations of intercurrent passages between them. Brown, Works, i. 295.

Those household cares, and other intercurrent troubles which his condition then brought with it.

Fell, Life of Hammond, § 1.
INTERCUTANEOUS, adj. [from Latin intercutaneous.] Within the skin.

Evelyn, ii. 3. § 15.
INTERDEAL, n. s. [inter and deal.] Traffic; intercourse. Obsolete.

The Gaulish speech is the very British, which is yet retained of the Welsh and Britons of France; though the alteration of the trading and interdeal with other nations has greatly altered the dialect. Spenser on Ireland.

INTERDICT, v. a. [interdire, interdict, Fr. interdicere, Lat.]

1. To forbid; to prohibit.

He—longed not after the interdicted fruit, as Adam did.
Shakespeare, Fort. of the Faith, (1565), fol. 160.

Alone I pass'd, through ways
 That brought me on a sudden to the tree
 Of interdicted knowledge. Milton, P. L.

By magic fence'd, by spells encompass'd round,
 No mortal touch'd this interdicted ground. Tickell.

2. To prohibit from the enjoyment of communion with the church.

An archbishop may not only excommunicate and interdict his suffragans, but his vicar-general may do the same. Asylife.

INTERDICT, n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Prohibition; prohibiting decree.

Amongst his other fundamental laws, he did ordain the interdicts and prohibitions touching entrance of strangers.
Bacon.
 These are not fruits forbidden, no interdict
 Defends the touching of these viands pure;
 Their taste no knowledge works at least of evil.

Milton, P. L.
 Had he liv'd to see her happy change,
 He would have cancell'd that harsh interdict,
 And join'd our hands himself.

Dryden, Don Sebastian
 2. A papal prohibition to the clergy to celebrate the holy offices.

Nani carried himself meritoriously against the pope, in the time of the interdict, which held up his credit among the patriots. Wotton.

INTERDICTION, n. s. [interdiction, French, interdictio, Lat. from interdict.]

1. Prohibition; forbidding decree.

Sternly he pronounce'd
 The rigid interdiction, which resounds
 'Till dreadful in mine ear. Milton, P. L.

2. Curses: from the papal interdiction. An improper use of the word.

The true issue of thy throne,
 By his own interdiction stands accus'd.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

INTERDICTIVE, adj. [from interdict.]
 Having power to prohibit.

A timely separation from the flock by that interdictive sentence;—lest his conversation, prohibited, or unbarred, might breathe a pestilential murrain into the other sheep.

Milton, Annals, Rem. Defence.
INTERDICTORY, adj. [from interdict.] Belonging to an interdiction. Annworth.

INTERESS, n. s. [Italian, interessare.] Interest; concern; right or title to. Not now in use.

But wote thou this, thou heavenly Tisane,
 That's not the worth of any living wight
 May challenge sought in heaven's interest.

Spenser, F. G. vii. li. 53.
 I thought, says his majesty, [K. Charles I.] I might happily have satisfied all this.

Id. Hajly's Masq. p. 141.
TO INTERESS, v. a. [interessare, French.]

To concern; to affect; to give share in; to connect with.

The mystical communion of all faithful men is such as maketh every one to be interested in those precious blessings, which any one of them receiveth at God's hand. Hosker.

Now, our joy,
 Although the last, not least; to whose young love
 The vines of France, and milk of Burgundy, Strive to be interest'd. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

To love our native country, and to study its benefit and its glory, to be interested in its concerns, is natural to all men. Dryden, JEn. Deic.

TO INTEREST, v. a. [interest, Latin, it concerns.] To concern; to affect; to exert; to give share in.

Scipio, renouncing the Spanish bride, gained a great nation to interest themselves for Rome against Carthage. Dryden.

This was a goddess who used to interest herself in marriages. Addison on Medals.

TO INTEREST, v. n. To affect; to move; to touch with passion; to gain the affections; as, this is an interesting story.

INTEREST, n. s. [interest, Lat.; interd, Fr.]

1. Concern; advantage; good.

O give us a serious comprehension of that one great interest of others, as well as ourselves.

Hommond.
 Divisions hinder the common interest and public good. Temple.

There is no man but God hath put some things into his possession, to be used for the common good and interest. Calamy.

2. Influence over others.

They who had hitherto preserved them, had now lost their interest.

Exert, great God, thy interest in the sky;
 Gain each kind power, each guardian deity,
 That, conquer'd by the publick voice,
 They bear the dismal mischief far away. Prior.

3. Share; part in any thing; participation; as, this is a matter in which we have interest.

Endeavour to adjust the degrees of influence, that each cause might have in producing the effect, and the proper agency and interest of each therein. Watts.

4. Regard to private profit.

Wherever interest or power thinks fit to interfere, it little imports what principles the opposite parties think fit to charge upon each other. Swift.
 When interest calls off all her sneaking train. Pope.

5. Money paid for use; usury.

Did he take interest? — No, not take interest; not, as you would say, Directly, interest. Shakespeare.

It is a sad life, we lead, my dear, to be so teased; paying interest of old debts, and still contracting new ones. Arbuthnot.

6. Any surplus of advantage.

With all speed
 You shall have your desires with interest. Shakespeare.

INTERESTED, adj. [from interest.] Having regard to private profit.

All successors did not discourage that ambitious and interested people. Arbuthnot on Coma.

TO INTERFERE, v. n. [inter and ferre, Lat. to strike. Our old lexicography defines it simply, "to knock the legs together." Cockran. Hence the phrase "an interfering horse." Sherwood. Dr. Johnson notices this sense of the word in a citation from the Farrier's dictionary.

Of its application to general use his examples are from Swift and Smalridge. It had been employed at least half a century before they wrote, but with an interpretation accompanying it, as if the use of it was then new. "It is a wonder to see how they interfere [interfere] and strike one on another, in the point of worshipping of images." Dr. Westfield's Sermons, 4to. 1646. p. 62.]

1. To interpose; to intermeddle.

So cautious were our ancestors in conversation, as never to interfere with party disputes in the state. Swift.

2. To clash; to oppose each other.

If each acts by an independent power, their commands may interfere. Snodgrass, Sermon.

And yet your boards forbid me to interpret
That you are so. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Plenioth told them his dream; but there was none that could interpret them unto him.

An excellent spirit, knowledge, and understanding, interpreting of dreams, and shewing of hard sentences, and dissolving of doubts, were found in the same Daniel. Gen. xli. 8. Dan. v. 12.

Hear his signs, thou mute!
Unskilful with what words to pray, let me
Interpret for him. Milton, P. L.

INTERPRETABLE. † adj. [from interpret.]
Capable of being expounded or deciphered.

No man's face is actionable; these singularities are interpretable from more innocent causes.

It accommodates the sense, and renders that place interpretable.

Knatchbull, Annot. N. Test. Tr. p. 271.

INTERPRETATION. n. s. [from interpret, Fr.; interpretatio, Latin; from interpret.]

1. The act of interpreting; explanation.

This is a poor epitome of your's.

Which, by its interpretation of full time,

May show like all yourself. Shakespeare, Coriol.

Look how we can, or sad or merry,

Interpretation will misquote our looks. Shakespeare.

2. The sense given by an interpreter; exposition.

If it be obscure or uncertain what they meant, clearly, I hope, constrains no man, which standeth doubtful of their minds, to lean to the hardest and worst interpretation that their words can carry. Hooker.

The primitive Christians knew how the Jews, who preceded our Saviour, interpreted these predictions, and the marks by which the Messiah would be discovered; and how the Jewish doctors, who succeeded him, deviated from the interpretations of their forefathers. Addison.

3. The power of explaining.

We beseech thee to prosper this great sign, and to give us the interpretation and use of it in mercy. Bacon.

INTERPRETATIVE. † adj. [from interpret.]

1. Collected by interpretation.

Though the creed apostolically were sufficient, yet when the church hath erected that additional bulwark against heretics, the rejecting their additions may justly be deemed an interpretative siding with heresies. Hammond.

2. Containing explanation; expositive.

Comparing the other phrases that he uses equivalent to this, and interpretative of meaning. Burton on the Creed.

INTERPRETATIVELY. adv. [from interpretative.] As may be collected by interpretation.

INTERPRETER. n. s. [from interpret, Fr.; interpreter, Lat.]

1. An explainer; an expositor; an expounder.

What we oft do best,
By sick interpreters, or weak ones is,
Not ours, or not allowed; what words, as oft,
Hiding a grosser quality, is cry'd up
For our best act. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

In the beginning the earth was without form and void; a fluid, dark, confused mass, and so it is understood by interpreters, both Hebrew and Christian. Burnet.

We think most men's actions to be the interpreters of their thoughts. Locke.

2. A translator.

Nor word for word be careful to transfer,
With the same faith as an interpreter. Shelburne.

How shall any man, who hath a genius for history, undertake such a work with spirit, when he considers that in an age or two he shall hardly be understood without an interpreter. Swift.

INTERPUNCTION. † n. s. [from interpunctio, Fr.; interpungo, Lat.] Pointing between words or sentences.

The whole course of our life is full of interpunctions, or commas; death is but the period or full point. Dr. Jackson, Works, iii. 499.

INTERREGNUM. n. s. [Latin.] The time in which a throne is vacant between the death of a prince and accession of another.

To whom comes a vacancy;
Thousand weary passions then possess'd
The interregnum of my breast?
Bless me from such an anxiety!

Conley, Rollad of the Chronicle.

He would show the queen my memorial with the first opportunity, in order to have it done in this interregnum or suspension of time. Swift.

INTERREGN. † n. s. [from interregne, Fr.; interregnum, Latin.] Vacancy of the throne.

The king knew there could not be any interregne or suspension of time. Bacon, Hen. VII.

INTERROGATION. n. s. [from interrogare, Fr.; interrogatio, Lat.]

1. The act of questioning.

2. A question put; an inquiry.

How demurely soever such men may pretend to sanctity, that interrogation of God presses hard upon them. Shall I count them pure with the wicked balances, and with the bag of deceitful weights? Gen. of the Tongue.

This variety is obtained by interrogations to things inanimate; by beautiful digressions, but those short.

3. A note that marks a question; thus: as, Does Job serve God for nothing?

INTERROGATIVE. adj. [interrogatif, Fr.; interrogativus, Lat.] Denoting a question; expressed in a questionary form of words.

St. Peter hath said, that the baptism, which saveth us, is not (as legal purifications were) a cleansing of the flesh from outward impurities, but an interrogative trial of a good conscience towards God. Hooker, Ecci. Pol. v. § 63.

INTERROGATIVE. n. s. A pronoun used in asking questions: as, who? what? which? whether?

INTERROGATIVELY. adv. [from interrogative.] In form of a question.

Read it interrogatively, and it is as strong for Soto and the Dominicans, as if it be read assertively, for Caluarine and the Jesuits.

Bp. Beldi, Lett. p. 403.
INTERROGATOR. † n. s. [from interrogate.] An asker of questions.

‘Stipulatio’ was a conception of words whereby he, that was asked, did answer, that he would say or do the thing which he was asked; and took its name from the interrogator, as the worthier person. Knatchbull, Annot. N. Test. Tr. p. 311.

INTERROGATORY. n. s. [interrogatoire, French.] A question; an inquiry.

He with no more civility began in caputious manner to put interrogatories unto him. Sidney.

Not time, nor place,
Will serve long interrogatories. Shakespeare, Cymb.
What earthly name to interrogatories
Can task the free breath of a sacred king? Shakespeare.

The examination was summed up with one question. Whether he was prepared for death? The boy was frightened out of his wits by the last dreadful interrogatory. Addison.

INTERROGATORY. adj. Containing a question; expressing a question; as, an interrogatory sentence.

TO INTERRUPT. v. a. [interrompre, French; interruptus, Latin.]

1. To hinder the process of any thing by breaking in upon it.

Rage duth rend
Like interrupted water, and o’erbear
What they are used to bear. Shakespeare, Coriol.
He might securely enough have engaged his body of horse against their whole inconsiderable army; there being neither too much to interrupt his charge. Clarendon.

This motion of the heavenly bodies seems partly interrupted, as that of the first moveable interpolated and interrupted. Hale.

2. To hinder one from proceeding by interruption.

Answer not before thou hast heard the cause; neither interrupt men in the midst of their talk. Eccles. xi. 8.

3. To divide; to separate; to rescind from continuity.

INTERRUPT. adj. [from the verb; interrupte, old French.]

1. Containing a chasm.
See thou what rage
Transports our adversary, whom so bounds, —
Not yet the main abyss. Milton, P. L.

2. Broken; irregular.
Menacing, ghastly looks; broken pace; interrupt, precipitate, half turns. Barton, Anst. of Med. p. 612.

INTERRUPTEDLY. adv. [from interrupted.] Not in continuity; not without stoppages.

The incident light that meets with a grosser liquor, will have its beams either refracted or imbibed, or else reflected more or less interruptedly than they would be, if the body had been uniform. Huyghens on Colours.

INTERRUPTER. † n. s. [from interrupt.] One who interrupts.

Proud Saturnine, interrupter of the good
That noble-minded Titus means to thee!

The great disturbers of those passions, and interrupters of the courses of those lusts, which had so bewitched their hearts. South, Serms. iv. 325.

TO INTERSECT. † v. a. [intersecare, Lat.] Our word was pronounced uncouth and unusual, in 1656, by Heylin.] To cut; to divide each other mutually.

Perfect and viviparous quadrupeds so stand in their position of promeness, that the opposite joints of neighbour legs consist in the same plane; and a line descending from their navel intersects at right angles the axis of the earth.

Excited by a vigorous locomotion, the needle will somewhat depress its animated extreme, and intersect the horizontal circumference. Brown, Vulc. Err.

TO INTERSECT. v. n. To meet and cross each other.

The sagittal suture usually begins at that point where those lines intersect. Werners, Surgery.

INTERSECTION. n. s. [intersectio, Latin; from intersecare.] Point where lines cross each other.

They did spout over interchangeably from side to side in forms of arches, without any intersection or meeting aloft, because the pipes were not opposite. Watson, Architecture.

The first star of Aries, in the time of Meton the Athenian, was placed in the very intersection, which is now elongated, and moved eastward twenty-eight degrees. Brown.

Ships would move in one and the same surface, and consequently must needs encounter, when they either advance towards one another in direct lines, or meet in the intersection of cross ones. Beattie.

TO INTERSECT. v. a. [intersecere, Lat.] To put in between other things.

If I may intersect a short speculation, the depth of the net is determined in Flay to be fifteen furlongs. Brevicorn.

INTERSECTIUM. n. s. [from intersecare.] An insertion, or thing inserted between any thing.

These two intersections were clear explanations of the apostle’s old form, God the father, ruler of all, which contained an acknowledgment of the unity. Hemmund.

INTERSPACE. n. s. [inter et space.] Interventive space.

This was his practice, to gather up more at the interspaces of leisure, than others do at their study.

Hick’s Life of Ap. Williams. (1695.) p. 97.

TO INTERPERSE. v. a. [interpersare, Lat.] To scatter here and there amongst other things.

The possibility of a body’s moving into a void space beyond the utmost bounds of body, as well as into a void space interpersed amongst bodies, will always remain clear. Locke.

It is the editor’s intention to insert what the author’s judgement had rejected; and care is taken to interperse these additions, so that scarce any book can be bought without purchasing something unworthy of the author. Buff.

INTERPERSIUM. n. s. [from interpersare.] The act of scattering here and there.

For want of the interpersation of now and then an elegiac or a lyric ode. Watts on the Mind.

INTERPELLAR. adj. [inter et stella, Lat.] Intervening between the stars.

The interstellar sky hath so much affinity with the star, that there is a rotation of that as well as of the star. Bacon.

INTERSTITICE. n. s. [interstitium, Lat. interstitium, French.]

1. Space between one thing and another.
The sun shining through a large prism upon a comb placed immediately behind the prism, his light, which passed through the interstices of the teeth, fell upon a white paper: the breadth of the teeth were equal to their interstices, and seven teeth together with their interstices took up an inch. Newton.

The force of the fluid will separate the smallest particles which compose the fibres, so as to leave narrow interstices in those places where they cohered before. Arbutnot.

2. Time between one act and another.
I will point out the interstices of time which ought to be between one citation and another. Ayliffe, Perjury.

INTERSTICATIVE. adj. [intersticus, Lat.] Distinguishing.

Whether the notes of parenthesis be used; and what care is taken of the intersticative points; Wallis, Lett. to Dr. Smith, Aubrey’s Anecd. i. 78.

Their needs,
The one of the other, may be said to water
Their intertangled roots of love.

Brown, and Fl. Two Nob. Emman.
INTERTEXTURE. † n. s. [intertexto, Latin.] Diversification of things mingled or woven one among another.

There is a variety of interference of theological and philosophical nature. Merr. Cong. Coll. (1658.) p. 104.

There is an interference of prosperity and adversity in the fortunes of virtuous men, [which] tends more to their improvement, than a more regular and constant providence would do. Goodman, West. Ec. Conf. P. ii.

TO INTERWEAVE. v. a. [inter and twine, TO INTERWINE, or twist.] To unite by twisting one in another.

There [is] our secret thoughts unseen,
Like nets we weave and interweave,
Wherein we catch each other's mind.

Crowe, Poems, p. 59.

Under some concourse of shades,
Whose branching arms thick interweave might shield,
From dews and damps of night his shelter'd head.

Milton, P. R.

A wall of hewn stone, wrought on the outside
With various knots of serpents interweave.

Townsend, Cong. of Mason, ill. 13.

INTERVAL. n. s. [intervalle, Fr. interval-lum, Latin.]

1. Space between places; interstice; vacuity; space unoccupied; void place; vacancy; vacant space.

With any obstacle, let all the light be now stopped which passes through any one interval of the teeth, so that the range of colours which comes from thence may be taken away, and you will see the light of the rest of the ranges to be expanded into the place of the range taken away, and there to be coloured. Newton, Optics.

2. Time passing between two assignable points.

The century and half following was a very busy period, the intervals between every war being so short. Swift.

3. Remission of a delirium or distemper. Though he had a long illness, considering the great heat which it rag'd, yet his intervals of sense being few and short, left but little room for the offices of devotion. Atterbury.

INTERVEINED. part. adj. [inter and veined.] Intersected as with veins.

From his side two rivers flow'd,
The one winding, the other straight, and left between,
Fair champaign, with low rivers intervene'd.

Milton, P. R.

TO INTERVEINE. v. n. [interveire, Lat. interveire, Fr.]

INTERVIEW. n. s. [entrevue, French.] Mutual sight; sight of each other. It is commonly used for a formal, appointed, or important meeting or conference.

The day will come when the passions of former enmity being allayed, we shall with ten times redoubled tokens of reconciled love show ourselves each towards other the same, which Joseph and the brethren of Joseph were at the time of their interview in Egypt. Hodder.

His fears were such, that the interview betwixt England and France might through their animosity, breed him some prejudice. Shelton, Hen. VIII.

Such happy interview and fair event
Of love and youth not lost, songs, garlands, flowers,
And charming symphonies attend'd the heart
Of Adam. Milton, P. L.

TO INTERVOLVE. v. a. [intervolve, Latin.] To involve one within another.

Mystical dance! which yonder starry sphere
Of planets, and of fix'd, is all her wheels
Reasoning nature; mass intricate,
Eccentric, intervene'd, yet regular,
Then meet, when most irregular they seem.

Milton, P. L.

TO INTERWEAVE. v. a. [interweave, Fr. interweave, part. pass. interweoven, interweave, or interweaved.] [inter and weave.] To mix one with another in a regular texture; to intermingle.

Come on, come on; and, where you go,
So intervene the curious knot,
As we're the observer scarce may know
Which lines are Pleasure's, and which not.

B. Jonson, Masque.

Prayer — is of a soft and sociable nature, and it can incorporate and sink into our business like water into ashes, and serve to increase the bulk of them: it can mix and interweave itself with all our cares, without any hindrance unto them; nay, it is a great strength and improvement unto them. Hales, Rem. p. 141.

I sat me down to watch upon a bank
With ivy encompas'd, and interweave
With flaunting honeysuckle. Milton, Comus.

At last,
Words intervene with sighs found out their way. Milton, P. L.

Then laid him down
Under the hospitable covert hough
Of trees thick interweave. Milton, P. R.

None
Can say here nature starts and art begins;
But mixt like the elements, and born like twins.
So intervene'd, so like, so much the same;
None this mere nature, that mere art can name.

Dedham.

The proud theatres disclose the scene,
Which intervenes Britons seem to raise,
And show the triumph which their shame displays. Dryden.

He so intervenes truth with probable fiction,
That he ports a pleasing fallacy upon us. Dryden.

It appeared a vast ocean planted with islands,
That were covered with fruits and flowers, and interweave with a thousand little shining sea that ran among them. Adison.

Orchard and flower-garden lie so mixt and interweave with one another, as to look like a natural wilderness. Spectator.

The Supreme Infinite could not make intelligent creatures, without implanting in their natures a most ardent desire, interveniens in the substance of their spiritual natures, of being re-united with himself. Chrysostom, Phil. Principles.

I do not altogether disapprove the interveniens texts of Scripture under the style of your sermon. Swift.

INTERWEAVING. n. s. [from the verb.]
Intertexture.

What interweavings or interworkings can knit the minister and the magistrate in their several functions? Milton, Of Ref. in Eng. B. V.

TO INTERWISH. v. a. [inter and wish.]
To wish mutually to each other.

The venom of all stepdames, gamsters' gall,
What tyrants and what subjects interwish, —
Fall on that man! Doune, Poems, p. 54.

INTERWORKING. n. s. [inter and work.]
Act of working together. Not in use.

But see Milton's employment of it under interweaving.

He lived not far from Westminster-abbey, within hearing of the choir, which perhaps did not a little contribute to his insuperable intensity.
Political Death of Tom W. Hig. Exp. P. 1. (1710.) p. 3.
INTRINSICENT.* adj. [in and transient.]
That passeth not away.

An unchangeable, an intrinseque, indefeasible priesthood. Killingbeck, Sermon. p. 93.

INTRINSITIVE.† adj. [intransitive,
Lat.] In grammar, a verb intrinseque is that which signifies an action, not conceived as having an effect upon any object; as, curo, I run.

Clarke's Latin Grammar.
The occasion of such difference is from a question of grammar, whether the verb be in signification transitive or transitive.

Pococke on Horat. p. 47.
INTRINSITIVELY.* adv. [from intrin- sitive.] According to the nature of an intransitive verb.

Yet again it (the verb) is manifestly, in the same form, used intrinseque.

The difference between verbs absolutely neuter,
and intrinseque active, is not always clear.
Luttrell, Eng. Gram.

INTRINSIVABLE.* adj. [in and transmuted.] Unchangeable to any other substance.

Some of the most experienced chemists do affirm quicksilver to be intrinseque, and therefore call it liquor eternus. Ray on the Creation.

TO INTRIP.* See TO ENTRIP.

TO INTRICATE.† v. a. [in and treasure.]
To lay up as in a treasury.

There is a history in all men's lives,
Figuring the nature of the times decreed;
The which observ'd, a man may prophesy,
With a near aim, of the main chance of things
As yet not come to life, which in their seeds
And weak beginnings he intricate.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.
So he [the jeweller] intricate privies' cabinets,
As thy wealth will their visited libraries.

Chapman on B. Jonson's Sejanus.

of entreaty.

Humble prayers and intreatful tears.
Spenser, F. Q. v. 3. 6.

TO INTRENCH.† v. n. [in and trencher, Fr.] To invade; to encroach; to cut off part of what belongs to another:
with on.

"Little I desire my sceptre should intrench on God's sovereignty, which is the only king of men's consciences." King Charles.

That crawling insect, who from mud begun,
Warm'd by my beams, and crept into man's life,
Durst he, who does but for my pleasure live,
Intrench on love, my great prerogative?

Dryden, Aurengzebe.
We are not to intrench upon truth in any conversion, but least of all with children. Locke.

TO INTRENCH.† v. a.
1. To break with hollows.

It was this very sword intrenched it.

Sat on his faded cheek. Milton, P. L.

2. To fortify with a trench; as, the allies were intrenched in their camp.

The English, in the suburbs close intrench'd.
Shakespeare, Hen. VI. P. 1.

INTRINCHANT.* adj. [This word, which is,
I believe, found only in Shakespeare, is thus explained: The intrinchant air means the air which suddenly encroaches and closes upon the space left by any body which had passed through it. Hammer. I believe Shakespeare intended rather to express the idea of indivisibility or invulnerableness, and derived intrinchant, from its privative, and trencher, to cut; intrinchant is indeed properly not cutting, rather than not to be cut; but this is not the only instance in which Shakespeare confounds words of active and passive signification.] Not to be divided; not to be wounded; indivisible.

As easy may't thou the intrinchant air
With thy keen sword impress, as make me bleed.
Shakespeare, Macbeth.

INTRINCHMENT. n. s. [from intrin-
ch.] Fortification with a trench.

INTREPID.* adj. [intrepid, French, intrepid, Lat.] Fearless; daring; bold;
brave.

Argyle
Calm and intrepid in the very throat
Of sulphurous war, on Teniers dreadful field.
Thomson.

INTREPIDITY. n. s. [intrepidité, French.]
Fearlessness; courage; boldness.

I could not sufficiently wonder at the in-trépidity of these dissolute mortals, who durst venture to walk upon my body, without trembling.
Suiff, Gulliver, Trav.

INTREPIDLY.* adv. [from intrepid.] Fearlessly; boldly; daringly.

He takes the globe for the scene; he launches forward intrepidly, like one to whom no place is new. Page.

tangling; ensnaring.

They shall remain captive, and entangled in the amorous intricable net. Sheldon, D. Quaint. lib. 7.

INTRICACY. n. s. [from intricate.] State of being entangled; perplexity; involution; complication of facts or notions.

The part of Ulysses in Homer's Odyssey is much admired by Aristotle, as perplexing that fable with very agreeable plots and intricacies, by the many adventures in his voyage, and the subtlety of his behaviour. Adams.

INTRICATE.† adj. [entrate, old Fr. interven; intricatus, Lat.] Entangled;
perplexed; involved; complicated; obscure.

Much of that we are to speak may seem to a number perhaps tedious, perhaps obscure, dark, and intricate.

His title was fit to convey the most intricate business to the understanding with the utmost clearness. Adams.

TO INTRICATE.† v. a. [from the adjective.]
To perplex; to darken. Not proper, not in use, Dr. Johnson says, citing only Camden. Few words have been more in use, or can boast better authority.

Alterations of surnames have so intricate, or rather obscured, the truth of our pedigrees, that it will be no little hard labour to deduce them.
Camden.

However the matter may be intricate by passing through many, perhaps unknown, hands.

Ap. Holl. Causes of Grease. D. 1. C. 6.
Manifest, intricate and distracted divisions amongst men touching Free Will.

Montaigne, App. to Cons. p. 76.
Thus shall your mystery reduce me both to the freedom of my thoughts, and of my life; otherwise so intricate that I know not how to unfold it.

Sir H. Wotton in the King, (1628), Rem. p. 564.

The more I strive to unwind
Myself from this memento, I the more
Thou art an intricate.

Heywood & Browne's Com. of Lancashire Witches.
That will be to intricate the business.

L. C. Just. Pemberton, Trial of Ld. Grey, (1682.)

INTRICATELY.* adv. [from intricate.]
With involution of one in another; with perplexity.

It is too intricately involved for me so much as to guess at any particular. Watson, Rem. p. 457.

The mortal steel past by, leaving his breast
Untouch'd, and in his coat of skins did rest,
Inside, to which, I know not how, 'twas wore
So intricately, that Millilo strove
In vain to pull it out.

That variety of factions, into which we are so intricately engaged, gave occasion to this discourse.
Suiff.

INTRICATENESS. n. s. [from intricate.]
Perplexity; involution; obscurity.

He found such intricateness, that he could see no way to lead him out of the maze. Sidney.

INTRICATE.* n. s. [in intricate, Fr.]
An entanglement; snare; labyrinth;
maze; involution. Not in use. Colgrave.

INTRIGUE.† n. s. [intrigue, Fr. Dr.
Johnson.—Serenius and Lye both decline it from the Goth. triggo, an agreement, a compact. Icelandic, trigd;
Ital. trigua; low Lat. trigua; Germ.
trenga; old English, treague. Others think that it comes from the Latin intricare, to perplex; whence the old French substantive intrigue, which afterwards became intrigue. "On dit intrigue, et non pas intrigue." Richlet, Dict. Franç. 1685. Serenius, however, says, that the original good meaning of the northern word passed into an evil one. Yet we certainly use intrigue in the sense of to intricate, though it has hitherto been unnoticed. See the verb active TO INTRIGUE. The word is of no great age in our language; and appeared first perhaps in the form of intrigoe. "He knew so well the intrigues of those times." Bp. Gauden, Anti Baul-Berith, 1661, p. 278.

1. A plot; a private transaction in which many parties are engaged: usually an affair of love.

These are the grand intrigues of men,
Those his huge thoughts, and those his vast desires.
Flamman.

A young fellow long made love, with artifice and intrigue, to a rich widow.

Adams, Guardian.
The hero of a comedy is represented victorious
in all his intrigues.

Now love is dwindled to intrigue,
And marriage grown a money league. Suiff.

2. Intrigacy; complication. Little in use.

Though this vicinity of ourselves to ourselves cannot give us the full prospect of all the intrigues of our nature, yet we have much more advantage to know ourselves, than to know other things without us.

Hale, Orig. of Manhood.

3. The complication or perplexity of a fable or poem; artful involution of feigned transaction.

As causes are the beginning of the action, the opposite designs against that of the hero are the middle of it, and form that difficulty or intrigue which makes up the greatest part of the poem.

Page.

To INTRIGUE† v. n. [intriguer, Fr. from the noun.] To form plots; to carry on private designs, commonly of love.

The intriguing and determined genius of Cromwell was forced to bow down to it.

Brend, Ess. on Political Associations, p. 127.

To INTRIGUE† v. a. [intrico, Lat. from the noun.] To perplex; to render intricate.

Great discourses were apt to intrigue affairs, dispute the prince's resolutions, and stir up the people. L. Addison, B. Berkeley, Pref. (1671.) How dull it [sin] perplex and intrigue the whole course of his lives, and entangle ye in a labyrinth of knavish tricks and collusions.

Scott, Christian Life, l. 4.

INTRIGUER† n. s. [intriguer, Fr. from intrigue.] One who busies himself in private transactions; one who forms plots; one who pursues women.

I desire that intriguers will not make a pump of my sin, and convey their thoughts to one another.

Addison.

That club of intriguers who assemble at the Feuillans, and whose cabinet meets at Madame Sall's, and makes and directs all the ministers, is the real executive government of France.

Burke, Thoughts on French Affairs, (1791.)

INTRIGUINGLY adv. [from intrigue.] With intrigue; with secret plotting.

INTRINSECAL† adj. [intrinsecus, Lat. intrinseque, Fr. This word is now generally written intrinsic, contrary to etymology.]

1. Internal; solid; natural; not accidental; not merely apparent.

There are sins of a contagious nature, apt to diffuse their venom to others; as there are other some, whose evil is intrinsecal to the owner.

By. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

These measures the laws of God not by the intrinsecal goodness and equity of them, but by reluctance and opposition which they find to their own hearts against them.

Zitelson.

The near and intrinsecal and convincing argument of the being of God, is from human nature itself.

Bentley.

2. Intimate; closely familiar. Out of use.

Frior.

2. Within; at the inside.

In his countenance no open alteration; but the less he shewed without, the more it wrought intrinsecally.

Watson.

VOL. II.

If once bereaved of motion, matter cannot of itself acquire it again; nor still be thrust by some other body from without, or intrinsecally moved by so immaterial self-active substance that can pervade it.

Bentley.

INTRINSICATE† adj. [This word seems to have been ignorantly formed between intricate and intrinsecal.] Perplexed; entangled. Not in use, Dr. Johnson says, citing Shakspeare. Ben Jonson uses it, evidently, in ridicule, or contempt.

Such smiling regues as these, Like rats, off his the holy cords in twain,

Two intrinsecate t'wulsooms. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Come, mortal wretch,

With thy sharp teeth this knot intrinsecate

Of life at once untie. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

There are certainly punctuations, or (as I may more nakedly insinuate them) certain intrinsecate strokes and wards, to which your activity is not yet amounted.

B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

INTRINSICK adj. [intrinsecus, Lat.]

1. Inward; internal; real; true.

Intrinsic goodness consists in accordance, and sin in contrariety to the secret will of God, as well as to his revealed. Hammond's Fundamentals.

2. Not depending on accident; fixed in the nature of the thing.

The difference between worth and merit, strictly taken; that is, a man's intrinsec; this, his current value.

Greene.

His fame, like gold, the more 'tis tried, The more shall its intrinsec worth proclaim.

Prior.

Beautiful as a jewel set in gold, which, though it adds little to intrinsec value, yet improves the lustre, and attracts the eyes of the beholder.

Rogers.

To INTRODUCE v. a. [introducere, Lat.; introduire, Fr.]

1. To conduct or usher into a place, or to a person.

Mathematicians of advanced speculations may have other ways to introduce into their minds ideas of idiosyncrasy.

Lodge.

2. To bring something into notice or practice.

This vulgar error whosoever is able to reclaim, shall introduce a new way of cure, preserving by theory as well as practice. Brown, Vulg. Err. An author who should introduce a sort of words upon the stage, would meet with small applause.

Brown.

3. To produce; to give occasion to.

Whosoever introduces habits in children, deserves the care and attention of their governors.

Lodge on Education.

4. To bring into writing or discourse by proper preparatives.

If he will introduce himself by prefaces, we cannot help it.

Lange's Trial.

INTRODUCER n. s. [introducere, French, from introduce.]

1. One who conducts another to a place or person.

2. Any one who brings any thing into practice or notice.

The beginning of the earl of Essex I must attribute to my lord of Leicester; but yet as an introducer or supporter, not as a teacher. Watson. It is commonly charged upon the army, that the beastly vice of drinking to excess had been lately, from their example, restored among us; but whoever the introducers were, they have succeeded to a miracle.

Smith.

INTRODUCTION† n. s. [introduction, Fr.; introduction, Lat.]

1. The act of conducting or ushering any place or person; the state of being ushered or conducted.

2. The act of bringing any new thing into notice or practice.

I will bring thee where thou soon shalt quit

Those rudiments, and see before thine eyes

The monarchies of the earth, their pomp and state,

Sufficient introduction to inform

Thee, of thyself so apt, in regal arts.

Milton, P. R.

The archbishop of Canterbury had pursued the introduction of the liturgy and the canons into Scotland with great vehemence.

Clarendon.

3. The preface or part of a book containing previous matter.

INTRODUCTIVE adj. [introducitivus, French, from introduce.] Serving as the means to something else.

The truths of Christ crucified, is the Christian's philosophy, and a good life is the Christian's logic; that great instrumental introducative art, that must guide the mind into the former. South.

INTRODUCTOR† n. s. [introducitur, Fr.] One who introduces another to a person or place.

No formality was necessary in addressing Madam Pruce, and therefore Leviusius went next morning without any introducer.

Johnson, Rambler, No. 162.

INTRODUCTORY adj. [from introducitur, Lat.] Previous; serving as a means to something further.

This introducitory discourse itself is to be but an essay, not a book.

Boyle.

INTROGRESSION n. s. [introgressio, Lat.] Entrance; the act of entering.

INTROIT† n. s. [introitus, old Fr.] The beginning of the mass; the beginning of public devotions, Dr. Johnson says, which is not accurate. "In the first Common Prayer Book of K. Edward VI. before every collect, epistle, and gospel, there is a palm printed, which contains something prophetic of the evangelical history used upon each Sunday and holiday, or in some way or other proper to the day; which, from its being sung or said, whilst the priest made his entrance within the rails of the altar, was called introitus, or introit." Wheatly on the Com. Pr. Ch. v. § vii.

When the exhortation is ended, there shall be song for the introit to the communion this psalm.

Form of Orderings for Priests, (1549), D. iii.

INTROMISSION† n. s. [intromissio, Lat.]

1. The act of sending in.

If sent by caused by intromission, or receiving in the form of that which is seen, contrary species of forms should be received confusedly together, which Aristotle shews to be absurd.

Pomach on Diving.

All the reason that I could ever bear alleged by the chief factors for a general intromission of all sects and persuasions into our communion, is, that those who separate from us are stiff and obstinate, and will not submit to the rules of our church, and that therefore they should be taken away.

South.

2. Admission.

The very fine yielding Earth gives admission: So gentle Venus to Mercurius darts Descend, and feeds an easy intromission.

Merc. Song of the Soul, ill. iii. 48.

It is worthy inquiry, whether the intromission of venial sins, without, which no man lives, does

1. To send in; to let in; to admit.

This bird [the ibis] has been often observed, by means of his crooked bill intromitted into the anus, to inject salt water, as with a syringe, into his own bowels.

Greenhall, Art of Embalming, p. 292.

2. To allow to enter; to be the medium by which any thing enters.

It intrmits more cases and scruples than it can resolve. Sp. Taylor, Disc. from Papyrus, ii. § 2.
Glam in the window intrmits light without cold to those in the room.

Holder, Elem. of Speech.

Tinged bodies and liquors reflect some sorts of rays, and intrmit or transmit other sorts.

Newton, Opticks.

TO INTROMIT. v. n. To intermeddle with the effects of another. See INTROMISSION.

They took her a prisoner,—possessed themselves of her mint, intrmitted with her gold and silver, and put the crown upon the head of her son.

Swart, Hist. of Scotland, l. 318.

INTRORECEPTION. n. s. [intro and receptio, Lat.] The act of admitting into or within.

Were but the love of Christ to us ever suffered to come into our hearts, as species to the eye by introreception, had we but come to the least taste and relish of it; what would we not do to recompense, and answer, and entertain that love!

Hammond, Works, iv. 564.

TO INTROSPECT. v. a. [introspectus, Lat.] To take a view of the inside.

INTROSPECTION. n. s. [from introspect.] A view of the inside.

The actions of the mind or imagination itself, by way of reflection or introspection of themselves, are discernible by man.

Hale, Orig. of Mind.

I was forced to make an introspection into my own mind, and into that idea of beauty which I have formed in my own imagination.

Dryden.

Best knees, round shoulders, intromitted, Turnp. B. 4.

TO INTROUDE. v. n. [introduere, Lat.]

1. To come in unwelcome by a kind of violence; to enter without invitation or permission.

Thy years want wit, thy will wants grace,
And manners, to intrude where I am grac'd.

Shakspeare.

The Jewish religion was yet in possession; and therefore that might so enter, as not to intrude, it is to bring its warrant from the same hand of omnipotence.

South.

2. It is followed by an before persons, or personal possessions.

Forgive me, fair one, if officious friendship

Intrudes on your repose, and comes thus late

To greet you with the tidings of success.

Some thoughts rise and introduce upon us, while we shun them; others fly from us, when we would hold them.

Watts.

3. To encroach; to force in uncalled or unpermitted: sometimes with into.

Let no man beguile you of your reward, in a voluntary humility, and worshipping of angels, introducing into those things which he hath not seen by his fleshly mind.

Col. ii. 18.

TO INTROUDE. v. a.

1. To force without right or welcome; commonly with the reciprocal pronoun.

Not to introduce one's self into the mysteries of government, which the prince keeps secret, is represented by the winds shut up in a bull hide, which the companions of Ulysses would needs be so foolish as to pry into.

Pope.

2. To force in; to cast in.

If it [a clause] should be introduced up by force, it cannot so quickly penetrate to the superior parts.

Greenhall, Art of Embalming, p. 273.

INTRODER. n. s. [from intrude.] One who forces himself into company or affairs without right or welcome.

Unnecessarily intruder as thou art!

Go, leave intruder! oversteering slave!

Betow thy fawning smiles on equal mates.

Shakspeare.

They were but intruders upon the powers, during the minority of the heir: they knew those lauds were the rightful inheritance of that young lady.

Dorset on Ireland.

Will you, a bold intruder, never learn

To know your basket, and your bread thief?

Dryden.

She had seen a great variety of faces: they were all strangers and intruders, such as she had no acquaintance with.

Leeds.

The whole fraternity of writers rise up in arms against every new intruder into the world of fame.

Addison, Freeholder.

INTROUSION. n. s. [intrusion, Fr.; intrusio, Lat.]

1. The act of thrusting or forcing any thing or person into any place or state.

Many excellent strains have been justified off by the intromission of poetical fictions.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

His majesty had a solicitor care for the payment of his debts; though in such a manner, that none of the duke's officers were intrusted with the knowledge of it.

Clarendon.

Receive my counsel, and securely move;

Intrust thy fortune to the pow'r above.

Dryden, Jun.

Are not the lives of those, who draw the sword to Rome's defence, intrusted to our care?

Addison, Cato.

He composed his billet-doux, and at the time appointed went to intrust it to the hands of his confidant.

Arbutnot.

INTUITION. n. s. [intuitus, intueor, Lat.]

1. Sight of any thing; used commonly of mental view. Immediate knowledge.

At our rate of judging, St. Paul had passed for a most malicious persecutor; whereas God saw he did it ignorantly in unbelief, and upon that intuition had mercy on him.

Cot. of the Tongue.

The truth of these propositions we know by a bare simple intuition of the ideas, and such propositions are called intuitive or self-evident.

2. Knowledge not obtained by deduction of reason, but instantaneously accompanying the ideas which are its object.

All knowledge of causes is deductive; for we know none by simple intuition, but through the mediation of their effects; for the causality itself is insensible.

Glaucon.

Intuscoram was then almost as quick as intuition.

Smith.

He their single virtues did survey,
By intuition in his own large breast.

Dryden.

INTUITIVE. adj. [intuitivus, low Latin; intuitiv, Fr.]

1. Seen by the mind immediately without the intervention of argument or testimony.

Immediate perception of the agreement or disagreement of two ideas, is when, by comparing them together in our minds, we see their agreement or disagreement; this therefore is called intuitive knowledge.

Locke.

Lofty flights of thought, and almost intuitive perception of abstract notions, or exalted discoveries of mathematical theorems, are sometimes seen existent in one person.

Bentley.

2. Seeing, not barely believing.

Faith, beginning here with a weak apprehension of things not seen, endeth with the intuitive vision of God in the world to come.

Hosier.

3. Having the power of discovering truth immediately without ratiocination.

The rule of ghostly or immaterial notions, as spirits and angels, is their intuitive intellectual judgement, concerning the amiable bounty and high goodness of that object, which, with unspeakable joy and delight, doth set them on work.

Hosier.

The soul receives

Discursive or intuitive.

Milton, P. L.

INTUITIVELY, adv. [intuitivement, French.] Without deduction of reason; by immediate perception.

That our love is sound and sincere, that it cometh from a pure heart, and a good conscience, and a faith unfeigned, who can pronounce, saving only the searcher of all men's hearts, who alone intuitively doth know in this kind who are his? Hood.

God Almighty, who sees all things intuitively, does not want logical helps. Dexter on Learning.

Lords of the deserts that their swords had made.

INVECTIVE. n. s. [invecito, Latin.] Reproachful accusation; railing; invective.

Many men with Luther have used a more temperate style sometimes, especially against princes and temporal estates; and he himself did openly acknowledge his fault therein, especially his immoderate invective against King Henry the 8th.

INVECTIVE. n. s. [invecitve, Fr. invecitiva, low Latin.]

1. A censure in speech or writing; a reproachful accusation.

Plain men desiring to serve God as they ought, but being not so skilful as to unwind themselves, where the snares of glowing speech do so entangle them, are in kind not a little troubled, when they bear so bitter invecitves against that which this church hath taught them to reverence as holy, to approve as lawful, and to observe as behoofful for the exercise of Christian duty.

If we take satire, in the general signification of the word, for an invecitve, 'tis almost as old as verse.

So deep'st rate thine, all hopeless of their lives, Breathes out invecitves 'gainst the officers.

Cast off respect, he fell to bitter invecitves against the French king.

2. It is used with against.

So deep'st rate thine, all hopeless of their lives, Breathes out invecitves 'gainst the officers.

3. Less properly with at.

Whilst we condemn others, we may indeed be in the wrong; and then all the invecitves we make at their supposed errors, fall back with a rebounded force upon our own real ones.

INVECTIVE. adj. [from the noun.] Satirical; abusive.

Let him rail on; let his invecitive muse Have four and twenty letters to abuse.

INVECTIVELY. adv. Satirically; abusively.

Thus most invecitively he pierceth through The body of the country, city, court,

Yes, and of this our life; revealing that we Are mere usurpers, tyrants.

TO INVEIGH. v. a. [invecho, Lat.] To utter censure or reproach; with against.

I cannot blame him for inveighing so sharply against the vices of the clergy in his age.

His inveighs severely against the folly of parties, in retaining secondaries to retail their lies.

INVEIGHMENT. n. s. [from inveigh.] Vehement railing.

Ill-temper'd and extravagant inveighs against Papists, made by men whose persons wanting authority as much as their speeches do reason, do nothing else but set an edge upon our adversaries' sword; whilst the light behaviour, and bad example of the inveigher's life infuseth courage to their hearts, and addeth strength unto their arms.

One of these inveighers against mercy, in seven weeks, could not cure one small herpes in the face.

TO INVEIGLE. † v. a. [invogliare, Ital. Minshew; avogliar, or enavogliar, Fr. Skinner and Junius; wiegeln, Germ. from the Goth, wagian, to excite, to move. Serenius.] To persuade to something bad or hurtful; to wheedle; to allure; to seduce.

Most false Therses, royal richly dight, That only was to inveigle weaker sight.

Was, by her wicked arts and wily skill, Too false and strong far earthly goal or might.

Achilles hath inveigled his foot from him.

Yet have they many baits and guileful spoli, To inveigle and invite the unwary sense Of them that pass unwitting by the way.

Both right able To inveigle and draw in the rabble.

Those drops of pretences, scatteringly sprinkled amongst the creatures, were designed to exalt our conceptions, not inveigle or detain our passions.

I leave the use of garlick to such as are inveigled into the gout by the use of too much drinking.

The inveigling a woman, before she is come to years of discretion, should be as criminal as the seducing of her before she is ten years old.

Heracles's meeting with Pleasure and Virtue was invented by Prodicus, who lived before Socrates, and in the first drawings of philosophy.

4. To light on; to meet with. Not used. For oft he wonders what them makes so glad; Or Bacchus' merry fruit they did invent, Or Cybele's frantic rites have made them mad.

INVENTER. n. s. [from inventer, French.] 1. One who produces something new; a deviser of something not known before.

As a translator, he was just; as an inventer, he was rich.

2. A forger.

INVENTIVE. \ adj.* [invent and full.] Full of invention.

The genius of the French government appears powerful only in destruction, and inventive only in oppression.

INVENTIBLE. \ adj.* [from invent.] Discoverable; capable of being found out.

When first I gave my thoughts to make guns shoot often, I thought there had been but one only exquisite way inventible.

INVENTION. n. s. [invention, Fr.; inventio, Lat.]

1. Excoigation; the act or power of producing something new.

O for a muse of fire, that would accend The brightest heavens of invention!

By improving what was writ before, Invention labours less, but judgement more.

Invention is a kind of muse, which, being possessed of the other advantages common to her sisters, and being warred by the fire of Apollo, is raised higher than the rest.

Mine is th' invention of the charming lyre; Sweet notes and heav'nly numbers I inspire.

The chief excellence of Virgil is judgement, of Homer is invention.

2. Discovery. Nature hath provided several glands to separate spittle from the blood, and no less than four pairs of canals to convey it into the mouth, which are of a late invention, and called ductus salivares.

3. Forgery; fiction. We hear our bloody cousins, not confining Their cruel parricide, filling their hearers With strange invention.

If thou can't accuse
Do it without invention suddenly.
Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

4. The thing invented.

The garden, a place not fairer in natural ornaments than artificial inventions.
The invention all admit of; and each how he
To be the inventor mis'd, so easy it seem'd Once found, which yet unfound most would have thought Impossible.
Milton, P. L.

INVENTIVE. adj. [inventif; Fr. from invent.]

1. Quick at contrivance; ready at expedients.
Those have the inventive heads for all purposes and roundest tongues in all matters.

I found,
Forsooth, an inventory, thus importing,
The several parcels of his plate.
Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

The leanness that afflicts us, the object of our misery, is as an inventory to particularise their abundance; our sufferings is a gain to them.
Shakespeare, Coriol.

Who'er looks,
For themselves dare not go, o'er Chenopodium books,
Shall find their wardrobe's inventory.
Donne.

It were of much consequence to have such an inventory of nature, wherein, as, on the one hand, nothing should be wanting, so nothing repeated on the other.
Green, Mus.

In Peria the daughters of Eve are reckoned in the inventory of their goods and chattels; and it is usual, when a man sells a bale of silk, to tom half a dozen women into the bargain.
Addison, Spect.

To INVENTORY. v. a. [inventorier, Fr.] To register; to place in a catalogue.

I will give out divers schedules of my beauty: it shall be inventoried, and every particle and atom lab'ell'd.
Shakespeare.

A man looks on the love of his friend as one of the richest possessions: the philosopher thought friends were to be inventoried as well as goods.
Gos. of the Tongue.

INVENTRESS. f. n. s. [inventrice, from inventor.] A female that invents.

Poverty hath been the inventress of all good crafts.
Remedy for Seditious, (1536.) F. II. b.
The arts, with all their residue of lesser trades, history and tradition tell us when they had their beginning; and how many of their inventors and inventresses were defied.
Burnet.

Cecilia came,
Inventress of the vocal frame:
The sweet enthusiast, from her sacred store,
Enlarg'd the former narrow bounds.
Dryden.

INVERSE. adj. [inverse, Fr.; inversus, Lat.] Inverted; reciprocal; opposed to direct. It is so called in proportion, when the fourth term is so much greater than the third, as the second is less than the first; or so much less than the third as the second is greater than the first.

Every part of matter tends to every part of matter with a force, which is always in a direct proportion of the quantity of matter, and an inverse duplicate proportion of the distance.
Gorth.

INVERSION. n. s. [inversion, Fr.; inversio, Lat.]

1. Change of order or time, so as that the last is first, and first last.

If he speaks truth, it is upon a subtle inversion of the precept of God, to do good that evil may come of it.
Brown.

To just the inversion of an act of parliament; your lordship first signed it, and then it was passed amongst the lords and commons.
Dryden.

2. Change of place, so as that each takes the room of the other.

To INVERT. v. a. [inverto, Lat.]

1. To turn upside down; to place in contrary method or order to that which was before.

With fate inverted, shall I bumbly woo?
And some proud prince, like wild Numidia born,
Pray to accept me, and forget my scorn!
Walker.

Ask not the cause why winter spring,
So long delays her flowers to bear,
And winter storms invert the year.
Dryden.

Poetry and oratory omit things essential, and invert signs and actions, to place every thing in the most affecting light.
Hutton.

2. To place the last first.

Yes, every poet is a fool;
By demonstration Ned can show it:
Happy, could Ned's inverted rule
Prove every fool to be a poet.
Prior.

3. To divert; to turn into another channel; to pervert. Instead of this convert or invert is now commonly used.

Seymour charged him bitterly with inverting his treasures to his own private use, and having secret intelligence with his enemies.
Kneller, Hist. of the Turks.

INVERTEDLY. adv. [from inverted.] In contrary or reversed order.

Let the divine part be upward, and the region of base below; otherwise, 'tis but to live invertedly, and with thy head upon the heels of thy antipodes.
Brown, Chr. Mor. vi. 14.

Placing the forehead of the eye to the hole of the window of a darkened room, we have a pretty landscape of the objects abroad, invertedly painted on the paper, on the back of the eye.
Derham, Phys. Theol.

To INVESTIT. v. a. [investir, Fr.; investio, Lat.]

1. To dress; to clothe; to array. It has in or with before the thing superinduced or conferred.

How long a day never! Thou make that day in the grave, yet there is no day between that and the resurrection. Then we shall all be invested, re-appeared, in our own bodies.
Denham, Dred. (1625.) p. 358.

Thus with sackcloth I invest my woe.
Sandys, Job, p. 26.

Thou with a mantle didst invest
The rising world of waters.
Milton, P. L.

Let thy eyes shine forth in their full lustre;
Invest them with thy loveliest smiles, put on Thy choicest looks.
Denham, Sophy.

2. To place in possession of a rank or office.

When we sanctify or hallow churches, that which we do is only to testify that we make places of publick resort, that we invest God himself with them, and that we sever them from common uses.
Hooker.

After the death of the other archbishop he was invested in that high dignity, and settled in his palace at Lambeth.
Clarendon.

The practice of all ages, and all countries, hath been to do honour to those who are invested with publick authority.
Aubrey.

3. To adorn; to grace; as clothes or ornaments.

Honour most,
Not accompanied, invest him only;
But signs of nobleness, like stars, shall shine
On all deceivers.
Shakespeare, Macbeth.

The foolish, over-careful fathers for this engrow'd
The canker'd beams of rotten achieved gold;
For this they have been thoughtful to invest
Their sons with arts and martial exercises.
Shakespeare, Some great potentate,

Or of the thrones above; such majesty
Invests him coming.
Milton, P. L.

4. To confer; to give.

If there can be found such an inequality between man and man, as there is between man and beast, or between soul and body, it invests a right of government.
Bacon.

5. To enclose; to surround so as to intercept succours or provisions; as, the enemy invested the town.

6. To put on.

As for plain, that so fair a crew,

Chryne, Phil. Princ.

INVESTIGATION. n. s. [investigation, Fr. investigatio, Lat. The word is of no great age either in the French or our own language. Rousseau considers himself as the introducer of it into French use. The original meaning of investigatio is the searching out by the tracks of the feet, in and vestigia; a phrase of hunting.]

1. The act of the mind by which unknown truths are discovered.

Not only the investigation of truth, but the communication of it also, is often practised in such a method as neither agrees precisely to synthetic or analytic.

Progressive truth, the patient force of thought
Investigation calm, whose silent powers Consume the world, Thomson, Summer.

2. Examination.
Your travels I hear much of; my own shall never more be in a stranger land, but a diligent investigation of my own territories. Pope to Swift.

INVESTIGATIVE. adj. [from investigate.] Curious and deliberate in making inquiry.

When money was in his pocket, he was more deliberate and investigative.

Never, Assoc. of the Eng. Lang.

INVESTIGATOR. n. s. [investigator, Lat.] One who diligently searches out.

This occult piece of history—I leave to the curiosity and conjectures of some more laborious investigator. Walton, Hist. E. P. iii. 47.

1. The right of giving possession of any manor, office, or benefice.

He had refused to yield up to the pope the investiture of bishops, and collation of ecclesiastical dignities within his dominions. Raleigh, Essays.

2. The act of giving possession.
His redemption is sealed in heaven, and shall in due time be manifested to thee investitive with the eternal glory and happiness which God hath prepared for all his. Ep. Hall, Rom. p. 139.

INVESTIVE. adj. [from invest.] Encircling; enclosing.
The horrid fire, all mercies, did choke
The scorched wretches with investive smoke.

Mr. For Mag. p. 829.

INVESTMENT. n. s. [in and vestment.] Dress; clothes; garment; habit.

Ophelia, do not believe his vows; for they are brokers,
Not that they do which their investments show.

You my lord archbishop,
Whose see is by a civil peace maintain'd,
Whose beard the silver hand of peace hath touch'd,
Whose learning and good letters peace hath tutur'd,
Whose white investments figure innocence,
The dove, and every blessed spirit of peace;
Wherefore do you so ill translate yourself,
Out of the speech of peace, that bears such grace,
Into the harsh and boisterous tongue of war?

Shakespeare.

INVESTMENT. n. s. [investiture, Lat.]

1. Long continuance of any thing bad; obstinacy confirmed by time.

The investment of the people's prejudices compelled their rulers to make use of all means for reducing them. Addison.

INVESTIGATE. adj. [investigatus, Lat.]

1. Old; long established.
The custom of Christians was then, and therefore had a long time, not to wear garlands, and therefore that undoubtedly they did offend who presumed to violate such a custom by not observing that thing; the very investigate observation whereof was a law, sufficient to bind all men to observe it, unless they could show some higher law, some law of Scripture, to the contrary. Hooker.

It is an investitive and received opinion, that cathartics, applied to any part of the body, touch the bladder and evacuate it. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. Obstinate by long continuance.

It is not every sinful violation of conscience that can quench the spirit; but it must be a long investitive course and custom of sinning, that at length produces and ends in such a cursed effect.

He who writes satire honestly is no more an enemy to the offender, than the physician to the patient when he prescribes harsh remedies to an investitive disease. Dryden.

In a well-instituted state the executive power will never let abuses grow investitive, or multiply so far that it will be hard to find remedies. Swift.

TO INVESTERATE. v. a. [investiter, Fr. investere, Lat.] To fix and settle by long continuance.

The vulgar conceived, that now there was an end given, and a consummation to superstitious prophecies, and to an ancient tacit expectation, which had by tradition been infused and interwoven into men's minds.

Let not abjects lay the fault of their sins upon human nature, which have their prevalence from long custom and invested habit. Beatty.

INVERTATENESS. n. s. [from invertate.] Long continuance of any thing bad; obstinacy confirmed by time.

As time hath rendered him more perfect in the art, so hath the invertateness of his malice made him more ready in the execution. Evelyn.

Neither the invertateness of the mischief, nor the prevalence of the fashion, shall be any excuse for those who will not take care about the meaning of their words. Locke.

INVERTATION. n. s. [invertatio, Lat.] The act of hardening or confirming by long continuance.

INVIDIOUS. adj. [invidiosus, Lat.]

1. Envious; malignant.

I shall open to them the interior secrets of this mysterious art, without imposture or invidious reserve.

2. Likely to incur or to bring hatred. This is the more usual sense.

Agamemnon found it an invidious affair to give the preference to any one of the Grecian heroes.

Not to be further tedious, or rather invidious, there are a few causes which have contributed to the ruin of our morals. Swift.

INVIDIOUSLY. adv. [from invidiosus.]

1. Malignantly; enviously.

The clergy murmur against the privileges of the laity; the laity invidiously aggravate the immunities of the clergy. Swift.

INVIDIOUSNESS. n. s. [from invidiosus.] Quality of provoking envy or hatred.

Pythagoras was the first, who shated of the invidiousness of the name, and from envy brought it down to philosophy, from a master to a lover of wisdom. South, serm. 8. 245.

The offence has not the invidiousness of singularity. Johnson, Journ. Western Islands.

INVIOLABILITY. n. s. [invigilance, old Fr. in and vigilancy.] Sleepiness; laziness; want of vigilance.

TO INVIGORATE. v. a. [in and vigour.] To endue with vigour; to strengthen; to animate; to enforce.

The spleen is introduced to invigorate the sinister side, which, dilated, would rather inform and debilitate. Brown.

Discloses well the earth's all-seeing womb,
Invigorating tender seeds. Phillips.

I have lived when the prince, instead of invigorating the laws, assumed a power of dispensing with them. Addison.

No one can enjoy health, without he feel a lightness and invigorating principle, which spurs him to action. Spectator.

Christian graces and virtues they cannot be, unless fed, invigorated, and animated by universal charity. Archbishop.

INVIGORATION. n. s. [from invigorate.]

1. The act of invigorating.

The state of being invigorated.

I find in myself an appetitive faculty, which is always in the very height of activity and invigoration. Norris.

This favours which invigoured learning, and nourished men of desert and worth.

Waterman, Appl. for Term. (1655, p. 5.)

INVILLAGED. part. adj. [from in and village.] Turned into a village. Not in use.

There on a goodly plain (by time throwne downe)
Lies buried in his dust some ancient towne;

Who now no more survives, there's only silence,
In his waste ruins what his state has been.

Broune, Jrid. Part. i. 2.

INVINCIBILITY. n. s. [from invincible.] The quality of being invincible.

Thus a happy victory may be gained over invincibility itself.

Invincible, form. an Prov without covering.

INVINCIBLE. adj. [Invincible, French; invincibilis, Lat.] Insuperable; unconquerable; not to be subdued.

I should have thought her spirits had been invincible against all assaults of affection. Shakspeare.

Should he invade their country, he would soon see that invincible nation with their united forces up in arms. Audley.

The spirit remains invincible. Milton.

That mistake, which is the consequence of invincible error, scarce deserves the name of wrong judgement. Locke.

If an atheist had had the making of himself, he would have framed a constitution that could have kept pace with his insatiable lust, been invincible by intemperance, and have held out a thousand years in a perpetual delirium. Boswell.

INVINCIBleness. n. s. [from invincible.] Unconquerableness; insuperableness.

The invincibleness of their ignorance. Hammond, Works, i. 303.

INVINCIBLY. adv. [from invincible.] Insuperably; unconquerably.

Ye have been fearless in his righteous cause; And as ye have receiv'd, so have ye done. Lecker.

Neither invitations nor threats avail with those who are invincibly impelled, to apply them to their benefit. Deacy of Patey.

INVIOIABILITY. n. s. [invioiabilitas, Fr. from invincible.] State or quality of being inviolable.

Having excluded all probability of the event of a systematic abuse of royal power, or a dangerous exorbitance of prerogative, our constitution exempts her kings from the degrading necessity of being accountable to the subject: She invests them with the high attributes of political impotence; she declares, that wrong, in his public capacity, a king of Great Britain cannot do; and thus unites the most perfect security of the subject's liberty with the most absolute inalienability of the sacred person of the sovereign.

Dn. Horsey, Sermon, 30 Jan. 1799.
INVOLABLE. adj. [involuta, Fr. involubilis, Lat.]

1. Not to be profaned; not to be injured.

Thou, be sure, shalt give account
To him who sent us, whose charge is to keep
This place invulnerable, and these from harm.

Milton, P. L.

In vain did Nature's wise command
Divide the waters from the land,
If daring ships, and men profane,
Invade the invulnerable main;
The eternal fences overlap.
And pass at will the boundless deep. Dryden.
Ye lamps of heaven, be said, and lifted high
His hands, now free; thou venerable sky!
Invulnerable powers! ador'd with dread,
Be all of you adjur'd. Dryden, Dn.

This hitherto, when our author pleases, must and must not be sacred and invulnerable. Locke.

2. Not to be broken.

The prophet David thinks, that the very meeting of men together, and their accompanying one another to the house of God, should make the bond of their love inalienable, and tie them in a league of invulnerable amity.
See, see, they join, embrace, and seem to kiss,
As if they vow'd some league invulnerable. Shaksp.

3. Insuperable of hurt or wound.

The invulnerable saints
In cubick phalanx firm advanc'd entwine.

Milton, P. L.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

But let invulnerable truth be always dear
To thee; even before friendship, truth prefer.

Denham.

If the past
Can hope a pardon, by those mutual bonds
Nature has seal'd between us, which, though I
Have cancell'd, thou hast still preserv'd invulnerable.
I beg thy pardon. Denham, Dryden.

My love your claim invulnerable secures;
'Tis writ in fate, I can be only yours.
In all the changes of his doubtful state,
His truth, like Heav'n's was kept invulnerable.

Dryden.

INVULNERATED. * adj. [involutus, Lat.] Unprofaned; unpolliuted.

A most invulnerable shrine.

Dryden, Barons' Wars, iv. 68.

They may be demonstrated to be innumerable, substituting their smallness for the reason of their invisibility. Bay.

INVISIBLE. adj. [invisible, Fr. invisible, Lat.] Not perceptible by the sight; not to be seen.

He was invisible that hurt me so;
And some invisible, but spirits, can go. Sidney.

Borne with the invisible and creeping wind,
Drew the huge bottoms to the furrow'd sea.

Shakspere.

'Tis wonderful
That an invisible instinct should frame them
To lightly unlearn'd, labourer taught. Shaksp.

In these thy lowest works. Milton, P. L.
He that believes a God, believes such a being as hath all perfections; among which this is one, that he is a spirit, and consequently that he is invisible, and cannot be seen.

It seems easier to make one's self invisible to others, than to make another's thoughts visible to me, which are not visible to himself. Locke.

INVISIBLY. adv. [from invisible.] Imperceptibly to the sight.

Age by degrees invisibly doth creep,
Nor do we seem to die, but fall asleep. Denham.

INVITATION. * n. s. [invitation, Fr. invitation, Lat.]

1. The act of inviting, bidding, or calling to any thing with ceremony and civility. That other answer'd with a lovely look,
And soon the gracious invitation took. Dryden.

2. Allurement.

She gives the leer of invitation.
Shakspere, Mer. Wives of Windsor.

INVITATORY. † adj. [from invito, Lat.] Using invitation; containing invitation.

In the Latin services it (the 95th) is called the invitatory psalm; it being always sung with a strong and loud voice, to listen those people into the church, who were in the cemetery, or churchyard, or any other adjacent parts, waiting for the beginning of prayers.

Wheatley on the Com. Prayer, ill. p. 8.
INVITATORY. * n. s. Formerly an hymn of invitation to prayer.

Response, invitatory, and such like things as did break the continual course of the reading of the Scripture.

Concerning the Service of the Church, Com. Prayer.
TO INVITE. v. a. [invito, Lat. inviter, Fr.]

1. To bid; to ask to any place, particularly to one's own house, with intreaty and complaisance.

If thou be invited of a mighty man, withdraw thyself.

He comes invited by a younger son. Mt. P. L.
When such company is invited, then be as sparing as possible of your coin. Swift.

2. To allure; to persuade; to induce by hope or pleasure.

A war upon the Turks is more worthy than upon any other Gentiles, though facility and hope of success might tempt some other choice. Bacon.

Nor art thou such Created, or such place lost here to dwell,
As may not oft invite, though spirits of heav'n,
To visit thee. Aldrich, P. L.

The liberal contributions such teachers met with, served still to invite more labourers into that work. Essay of Chr. Piety.

Sturdy groves, that easy shew invite,
And after toilsome days a soft repose at night.

Dryden, Virg.

TO INVITE. v. n. [invito, Lat.] To ask or call to any thing pleasing.

All invites invite

INVITEMENT. * n. s. [from invite.] Act of inviting; invitation.

He never makes a general invitement, but against the publishing of a new suit; many then you shall have more drawn to his lodging than come to the launching of some three ships.

B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

INVITER. n. [from invite.] One who invites.

They forcibly cut out abortive votes, such as their inviters and encouragers most fancied.

King Charles.

Honour was the aim of the guests, and interest was the scope of the inviter. Smalridge, Sermon.
Wines and cakes the tables glare,
But most the kind inviter's cheerful face.

Pope, Ode.

INVITING. * n. s. [from invite.] Invitation.

He hath sent me an earnest inviting.
Shakspere, Twelfth Night.

INVITINGLY. adv. [from inviting.] In such a manner as invites or allures.

If he can but dress up a temptation to look invitingly, the business is done.

Essay of Chr. Piety, p. 165.

INVITINGNESS. * n. s. [from inviting.] Power or quality of inviting.

Elegant flows of speech, to which the nature and resemblances of things, as well as human fancies, have an aptitude and invitingness.

Dr. Taylor, Arct. Handmaid, p. 165.

TO INVUMBATE. v. a. [invumbro, Lat.] To shade; to cover with shades. Dict.

INVUNCT. * adj. [invinctus, Lat.] Anointed.

INVUNCTIO. * n. s. [invungo, invinctus, Lat.] The act of smearing or anointing.

Irrigation, invinctio, oshorments, prescribed for the head. Durion, Anat. of Med. p. 406.

The wise Author of Nature hath placed on the rump two glands, which the bird catches hold upon with her bill, and squeezes out an oily liquid, fit for the invaction of the feathers, and causing their filaments to cohere. Ray.

INVUNDANT. * adj. [invundans, Lat.] Overflowing.

A torrent, in the summer temperate and shallow, but in the spring and winter inundant and raging.

Hogwood's Hier. of Angels, (1635.) p. 531.

Days, and nights, and hours,
Thy voice, hydroptic Fancy, calls aloud
For costly draughts inundant how of joy.

To INUNDATE,* v. a. [inundo, Lat.]
This word has been reprobated as one of the affected introductions of modern writers into our language. This is not the case; for we find inundated used in the sense of overwhelmed, nearly two centuries since, in the vocabulary of Cockerham.] To overflow a place with water; to overwhelm.

INUNDATION. n. s. [inundation, Fr. inundatio, Lat.]

1. The overflow of waters; flood; deluge. Inundation, says Cowley, implies less than deluge.

Her father counts it dangerous,

That she should give her sorrow so much way:

And in his wisdom lates our marriage.

To stop the inundation of her tears. Shakespeare.

The same inundation was not past forty feet in most places; so that some few wild inhabitants of the woods escaped. Bacon.

All foundations of the deep.

Broke up, shall leave the ocean to surp

Beyond all bounds, till inundation rise.

Above the highest hills. Milton, P. L.

This inundation upon the Egyptians happened when it is winter unto the Ethiopians.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Your care about your banks leaves a fear

Of threatening floods, and inundations near.

Dryden.

No swelling inundation hides the grounds,

But crystal currents glide within their bounds.

Gay.

2. A confluence of any kind.

Many good towns, through that inundation of the Irish, were utterly wasted.

Spenser on Ireland.

INUNDERSTANDING,* adj. [in understanding.] Wanting the faculties of the mind; void of understanding.

Many of the beasts of the field, divers of the plants of the earth, are of a more durable constitution, and outlive the sons of men. And can we think that such material and mortal, that such understanding souls should by God and Nature be furnished with bodies of so long continuance, and that our spirits should be joined unto flesh so subject to corruption, so suddenly dissolvable, were it not that they lived but once, and so enjoyed that life for a longer season, and then went soul and body to the same destruction, never to be restored to the same subsistence?

Flaccus, on the Creed, Act. 11.

To INVOCATE,† v. a. [invoco, Lat.]

To invoke; to implore; to call upon; to pray to.

Poor key-cold figure of a holy king!

Be't fearful, that I invoke thy ghosts,

To hear the lamentations of poor Anne? Shakspeare.

The church of Rome, in her public and allowed offices, prays to dead men and women, who are, or whom they suppose to be, beatified; and these they invoke as preservers.

Bp. Taylor, Diss. from Popery, ch. ii. § 9.

If I dream be thy God.

Go to his temple, invoke his aid

With solemnest devotion. Milton, S. A.

Here rather let me drudge, and earn my bread,

Till vermin or the draft of servile food

Consume me, and oft innocent death

Hasten the welcome end of all my pains.

Milton, S. A.

INVOCATION. n. s. [invocation, Fr. invocatio, Lat.]

1. The act of calling upon in prayer.

Is not the name of prayer usual to signify even all the service that ever we do unto God?

And that for an other cause, as I suppose, but to shew that there is in religion an acceptable duty, which devout invocation of the name of God doth not either presuppose or infer. Hobbes.

2. The form of calling for the assistance or presence of any being.

My invocation is Honest and fair, and in his mistress' name.

Shakespeare.

The proposition of Gratius is contained in a line, and that of invocation in half a line. Warr.

I will strain myself to breathe out this one invocation. Hemell.

The whole poem is a prayer to fortune, and the invocation is divided between the two deities.

Addison on Italy.

INVOICE. n. s. [This word is perhaps corrupted from the French word envoyer, send.] A catalogue of the freight of a ship, or of the articles and price of goods sent by a factor.

To INVOLVE, v. a. [invoco, Latin; involvere, French.] To call upon; to implore; to pray to; to invoke.

The power I will invoke dwells in her eyes. Sedney.

One peculiar nation to select

From all the rest, of whom to be invol'd.

Milton, P. L.

The skilful bard,

Striking the Thracian harp, invokes Apollo,

To make his hero and himself immortal. Prior.

To INVOLVE,† v. a. [involvere, Latin.]

1. To inwrap; to cover with any thing circumfluent.

The floods my soul involv'd below,

The swallowing deeps being'd me round.

Samjays, Sacred Songs, p. 20.

Leave a sing'd bottom all involv'd in

With stench and smoke. Milton, P. L.

No man could miss his way to heaven for want of light; and yet so vain are they as to think they elude the world by involving it in darkness.

Decay of Chr. Piety.

In a cloud involv'd, he takes his flight,

Where Greeks and Trojans mix'd in mortal fight. Dryden.

2. To imply; to comprise.

We cannot demonstrate these things so as to shew that the contrary necessarily involves a contradiction. Milton.

To ENTWIST; to join.

He knows his end with mine involv'd.

Milton, P. L.

4. To take in; to catch; to conjoin.

The gathering number, as it moves along

Involves a vast involuntary throng. Pope.

Sin we should hate altogether; but our hatred of it may involve the person which we should not hate at all.

One death involves

Tyrants and slaves. Thomson, Summer.

5. To entangle.

This reference of the name to a thing whereof we have no idea, is so far from diffusing it, it only serves the more to involve us in difficulties.

Locke.

As obscure and imperfect ideas often involve our reason, so do dubious words puzzle men's

TURNING.

6. To complicate; to make intricate.

Some involv'd their realty feels. Milton, P. L.

Syllingism is of necessary use, even to the lovers of truth, to shew them the fallacies that are often concealed in florid, witty, or involved discourses.

Locke.

7. To blend; to mingle together confusedly.

Earth with hell mingle and involve.

Milton, P. L.

8. In mathematics, to multiply any quantity by itself any given number of times.

INVOLUNTARILY,† adv. [from involuntary.]

Not by choice; not spontaneously.

They are not the work of the soul itself, but involuntarily obtruded upon it.

A. Baxter on the Soul, li. 188.

INVOLVEDNESS,* n. s. [from involved.]

State of being involved.

The involvement of all men in the guilt of swearing. Bosley against Cauter. Svo. p. 13.

INVOLUNTARINESS,* n. s. [from involuntary.] Want of choice or will.

There is not an absolute involuntariness in this engagement, but a mixed one.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. D. 1. C. 6.

INVOLUNTARY. adj. [in and voluntarius, Latin. involontaire, French.]

1. Not having the power of choice.

The gathering number, as it moves along, involves a vast involuntary throng.

Who gently dawn, and struggling less and less, Roll in her vortex, and her pow'r confess. Pope.

2. Not chosen; not done willingly.

The forbearance of that action, consequent to such command of the mind, is called voluntary; and whatsoever action is performed without such a thought of the mind, is called involuntary.

Locke.

But why, ah tell me, ah too dear!

Steels down my cheek th' involuntary tear? Pope.

INVOLUTION,† n. s. [involution, old Fr. involutio, Latin.]

1. The act of involving or inwrapping.

2. The state of being entangled; complication.

Leave never an angle or involution in it.

Hammond, Works, li. 302.

All things are mixed, and causes blended by mutual involutions. Glanville, Scypia.

3. That which is wrapped round any thing.

Great conceits are rises of the involution or membranous covering called the silly-hew, sometimes found about the heads of children upon their birth; and is therefore preserved with great care, not only as medical in diseases, but effectual in success, concerning the infant's orders; which is surely no more than continued supererogation.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

INURBANITY,* n. s. [in and urbanity.]

Want of courteousness; rudeness; unkindness.

An answer to pope Urban his inurbanity.

Bp. Hall, Works, li. 503.

Discouraging such idle stilt to the maids and widows, as his own servile inurbanity forbears not to put into the Apostol's mouth.

Milton, Colerston.

To INURGE,† v. a. [in and urge.]

1. To habituate; to make ready or willing by practice and custom; to accustom. It had anciently with before the thing practised, now to.

That it may no painful work endure, It to strong labour can itself enure.

Spenser, Faerie Tale.

England was a peacable kingdom, and but lately enured to the mild and goodly government of the Confessor. Spenser on Ireland.

Because they so proudly insist, we must a little raise their ears with hearing, how others whom they more regard, are accustomed to use the self-same language with us.

Hobbes.

If there might be added true art and learning, there would be as much difference, in maturity of judgement, between me thereof insured, and that which now men are, at between them that are now, and innocents. Hooker.

The forward hand, insur'd to wounds, makes
way
Upon the sharpest fronts of the most fierce.

Then cruel, by their sport to blood insur'd
Of fighting beasts, and men to beasts exp'd.
Milton, P. R.

To insure Milton, P. L.
Our prompt obedience.
They, who had been most insured to business, had not in their lives ever undergone so great fatigue for twenty days together. Clarendon.
We may insure ourselves by custom to bear the extremities of weather; without injury.
Addison, Guardian.

2. To commit. Obsolete.

He can that ladie strongly to appeale
Of many lascivious crimes by her insured.
Spenser, F. Q. v. ix. 89.

To insure* v. n. To come into use or power; to have effect.

The decree of deprivation doth not insure, till a judicial sentence passeth further on us.
Bp. of Norwich, Lett. in 1690, Life of Kettlewell, App. p. 1v.

INSUREMENT. n. s. [from insure.] Practice;
habit; use; custom; frequency.

If iron will acquire by long continuance a secret appetite, and as I may term it, an habitual inclination to the site it held before; then how much more may we hope, through the very same means, education being nothing else but a constant plight and insurement, to induce by custom good habits into a reasonable creature!
Wotton, Surv. of Education.

To insure v. a. [in and insure.] To in-tomb; to bury.

The sepulchre
Wherein we saw thee quietly insured,
Hath op'd its ponderous and marble jaws
To cast thee up again. Shakespeare, Hamlet.
Amidst the tears of Trojan dames insured,
And by his loyal daughters truly insured.
Dryden.

INSURAT'ION.* n. s. [insuratus, Latin.]
State of being unused; want of use.

The manner of the life he had not vanished by insurature. Pope, Sat. Ep. vii. c. 22.

Latin.] Uselessness; unprofitableness.

Colgrave, and Sherwood.

INSUTTERABLE.* adj. [in and utterable.]
Not to be uttered; inexpressible.

All prodigious things,
Abominable, insuttable, and worse
Than fables yet have feign'd, or fow conceiv'd.

The planets — they invoked with secret or insuttable invocations. Patrick on Gen. xii. 8.

INVULNERABLE. adj. [invulnerabilis, Fr. invulnerabilis, Latin.] Not to be wounded; secure from wound.

Our cannon's malice vainly shall be spent
Against thy invulnerable cheeks of brass.
Shakespeare.

Nor vainly hope
To be invulnerable in those bright arms,
That mortal diet none can resist. Milton, P. L.

Venus, though by Pallas taught,
By no sensible thought,
Searching in books for wisdom's aid,
Was in the very search betray'd. Swift.

INVULNERABLENESS. n. s. [from invul-nerable.] State of being invulnerable.

We wrestle not only against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places; which words must be most dangerous unto us. 1. For their wariness that grapple with us. 2. For their invulnerableness, they being spirits; whereas we are flesh and blood. Bp. Pringle, Euch. (1656), p. 92.

To inwallow, v. a. [in and wall.] To inclose or fortify with a wall.

Three such towns in those places with the garrison, would be so augmented as they would be able with little to inwall themselves strongly.
Spenser on Ireland.

INWARD. } adv. [insepch, Saxon.]
INWARDS. }
1. Towards the internal parts; within.

The parts of living creatures that be more inwards, nourish more than the outward flesh.

The medicines which go to these magical cuntrivances are so strong, that if they were used inwards
they would kill; and therefore they were used potently, though outwards. Bacon.

2. With inflexion or incurvature; concavely.

He stretched out his arm in sign of peace, with his breast bending inward. Dryden.

3. Into the mind or thoughts.

Looking inward we are stricken dumb; looking outward we speak and prevail. Hooker.

Celestial light
Shine inwards, and the soul through his pow'rs

INWARD. adj.

1. Internal; placed not on the outside;
but within.

He could not rest, but did his stout heart eat,
And waste his inward gall with deep despatch.
Spenser, F. Q.

To each inward part
It shoots invisibly. Milton, P. L.

Sickness, contributing no less than old age to the shaking down this scaffolding of the body, may discover the inward structure more plainly.
Pope.

2. Reflecting; deeply thinking.

With outward smiles thy flattery I receive'd;
But bent and inward to myself again
Perplex'd, these matters I reveal'd, in vain. Prior.

3. Intimate; domestick; familiar.

Though the lord of the liberty do pain himself all he may to yield equal justice unto all, yet can there not be great abuses lurk in so inward and absolute a privilege. Spenser on Ireland.

All my inward friends abhorred me.
Job, xix. 19.

4. Seated in the mind.

Princes have but their titles for their glories,
An outward honour for an inward toil;
And for empty imaginations,
They often feel a world of restless cares. Shaksp.

INWARD.† n. s. [Sax. inseppe, the bowels.]

1. Any thing within, generally the bowels.
Seldom has this sense a singular.

Then sacrificing, laid
The inwards, and their fat, with incense strew'd
On the cleft wood, and all due rites perform'd.
Milton, P. L.

They esteem them most profitable, because of the great quantity of fat upon their inwards.
Morimer.

2. Intimate; near acquaintance. Little used.

Sir, I was an inward of his; a sly fellow was the duke; and I know the cause of his withdrawing.
Shakspere.

INWARDLY.† adj. [Sax. inseppe; from inward.]

1. In the heart; privately.

That which inwardly each man should be, the church outwardly ought to testify. Hooker.

I blessed inwardly for my lord. Shakspere.

Mean time the king, though inwardly he mournd,
In pomp triumphant to the tow' return'd;
Attended by the chiefs. Dryden, Kn. Tale.

2. In the parts within; internally.

Let Denodich, like cover'd firs,
Consume away in sighs, waste inwardly. Shaks.

Cantharides he prescribes both outwardly and inwardly. Arbuthnot on Coins.

3. With inflexion or concavity.

INWARDNESS.† n. s. [from inward.]

1. Intimacy; familiarity.

You know my inwardness and love
Is very much unto the prince and Claudio. Shakspere.

His nephew is fallen into some trouble, by reason of his familiarity and inwardness with Sir
R. Cotton.

Bourchier to Alg. Usher, (1698), Lett. p. 415.

2. Internal state. Not noticed by Dr.
Johnson.

Sense cannot arrive to the inwardness
Of things, nor penetrate the crusty fence
Of consanguine matter. Merc, Song of the Soul, i. 8.

To inweave v. a. preter. inwove or inweaved, part. pass. inwoven, inwove, or inweaved. [in and wave.]

1. To mix any thing in weaving, so that it forms part of the texture.

A fair border, wrought of sundry flowers,
inwoven with an ivy winding trail. Spenser.

Down they cast
Their crowns, inwoven with amaranth and gold.

And o'er soft falls of purple grass unfold
Rich tap'try, suffic'd with inwoven gold.
Pope, Odyssey.

2. To intertwine; to complicate.

The roof
Of thickest covert was inwoven shade. Milt. P. L.

INWHEEL.* v. a. [in and wheel.] To surround; to encircle.

Heaven's grace inwheel ye!
And all good thoughts and prayers dwell about ye!

Abundance be your friend! and holy Charity
Be ever at your hand to crown ye glorious!
Bacon, and Fl. Pilgrim.

INWIT.* n. s. [Saxon, inwit, conscientia.]
Mind; understanding. Obsolete. Wicliffe and Chaucer use it.

To inwood v. a. [in and wood.] To hide in woods. Not used.

He got out of the river, inwooded himself so as the ladies lost the marking his sportfulness. Sidney.

To inwrap v. a. [in and wrap.]

1. To cover by involution; to involve.

And over them Arachne high did lift
Her cunning web, and spread her subtil net,
Inwrept in foul smog. Spenser, F. Q.

Thus, as an amber drop, inwraps a bee,
Covering discovers your quick soul; that we May in your through-shine front our hearts'
thoughts see. Donne.

2. To perplex; to puzzle with difficulty or obscurity.

The case is no sooner made than resolved: if it be made not unswayed, but plainly and perspicuously.

3. It is doubtful whether the following examples should not be enrap or unrap, from in and rap, rapio, Lat. to ravish or transport.

This pearl she gave me, I do feel't and see't; And though 'tis wonder that enrap me thus, Yet 'tis not madness. Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

For if such holy song Enwrap our fancy long, Time will run back, and fetch the age of gold. Milton, Ode Nativ.

To INWRAP. ATH. V. a. [in and tenetate.]

To surround as with a wreath. Bind their resplendent locks inwreath'd with beams. Milton, P. L.

Not less the palm of peace inwreathes thy brow. Thomson.

INWRUGHT. adj. [in and wrought.]

Adorned with work. Next Camus, reverend in, went footing slow, His mantle hairy, and his bonnet sedge. Inwrought with figures dim, and on the edge Like to that sanguine flower, inwrought with woe. Milton, Lycidas.

JOB.† n. s. [A low word now much in use, of which I cannot tell the etymology. Dr. Johnson. — Κόπος (kopos) in Greek signifies labour; and in our ordinary word job, a piece of work, we again trace it under a different form. Whiter, Etym. Magn. p. 276.]

1. Petty, piddling work; a piece of chance work; in some places a piece of labour undertaken at a stated price.

2. A low man, lucrative, busy affair.

He was ood with his old friends, like an old favourite of a cunning minister after the job is over. Arbutnot.

No cheek is known to blush, no heart to throb, Save when they lose a question or a job. Pope.

Such patents as these were granted with a view of being a job, for the interest of a particular person to the damage of the publick. Swift.

3. A sudden stab with a sharp instrument. (Aieb, Germ. a stroke, from hauen, to strike. Wachter, and Serenius.)

To JOB. v. a.

1. To strike suddenly with a sharp instrument.

An ass with a galled back was feeding in a meadow, a raven pitched upon him, and sat jobbing of the sore. L'Estrange.

2. To drive in a sharp instrument.

Let peacocks and turkeys have jobbing their backs. Tamr.

The work would, where a small irregularity of stuff should happen, draw or job the edge into the stuff. Mason.

To JOB. v. n. To play the stockjobber; to buy and sell as a broker.

The judge shall job, the bishop bite the town, And mighty dukes pack cards for half a crown. Pope.

JOB'S TEARS. n. s. An herb. Ainsworth.

JOBBER.† n. s. [from job.]

1. A man who buys and sells stock in the publick funds. See STOCKJOBBER.

So cast it in the southern seas, And view it through a jobber's glass; Put on what spectacles you please; Your guinea's but a guinea still. Swift.

2. One who engages in a low lucrative affair.

An absolute discouragement to all sorts of jobbers, gamblers, fortune-hunters and stock-jobbers. Hidrop, Lett. on the Commandments, p. 20.

3. One who does chancework.

JOBBERNOWT.† n. s. [most probably from jobber, Flemish, dull, and nowl, hnd, Saxon, a head.] Loggerhead; block-head.

His guts are in his brains, huge jobbernowt, Right garnet's head; the rest without all soul. Morton, Scourge of Villains, (1599) li. 6.

Dull-pated jobbernowt. Morton, Scourge, §c. li. 7.

And like the world, men's jobbernowts Turn round upon their ears the poles. Hudibras.

JOCKEY. n. s. [from Jack, the diminutive of John, comes Jackey, or, as the Scotch, jockey, used for any boy, and particularly for a boy that rides race-horses.]

1. A fellow that rides horses in the race. These were the wise ancients, who bespied up greater honour on Pindar's jockies than on the poet himself. Addison.

2. A man that deals in horses.

Nor hyacinths of purest virgin white,
Low bent and blushing inward; nor joquilles of potent fragrance. Thomson, Spring.

- JORDEN.* n. s. [yon, Sax. stercus, and ben, receptaculum. Dr. Johnson from Skinner. So Serenius; gor, So. Goth. excrementum, and den, cavea. Both denoting a receptacle of filth. It is sometimes written jordan. Chaucer uses it; "thynne urynalis, and thy jordenes;" Pardoner's Prologue; where Mr. Tyrwhitt notices the mention of the word by Walsingham; "dum oile, quas jordanes vocamus." A pot.

They will allow us ne'er a jorden, and then we look in your chimney; and your chamberly boys look like a leach. Shakespeare.

This China jorden let the chief o'ercome Replenish not ingloriously at home. Pope, Dunciad.

The copper-pot can boil milk; best porridge, hold small beer, or in case of necessity, serve as for a jorden. Swift.

- JO'RUM.* n. s. A colloquial term in several parts of England for a bowl or drinking-vessel with liquor in it; hence the burden of a song, "Push about the jorum."

- JO'SEPH.* n. s. A riding-coat or habit for women, with buttons down to the skirts. A word formerly much in use; but now, as well as the dress itself, rarely found, or mentioned.

- JOSEPH'S FLOWERS. n. s. A plant.

Ainsworth.

- TO JO'STLE. v. a. [jouster, Fr.] To joust; to rush against.

- JOT.* n. s. [jota, Gothic; tota, Saxon; iota, Greek; jod, Heb. See also IOA.] A point; a title; the least quantity assignable.

As superfluous flesh did rot,
Amendment ready still at hand did wait,
To pluck it out with pinners fiery hot,
That soon in him was left no one corrupt jot. Spenker, F. Q.

Do Eroa, send his treasure after, do it;
Detain no jot, I charge thee. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Let me not stay a jot from dinner; go, get it ready. Shakespeare.

This nor hurts him nor profits you a jot;
Forbear it therefore; give your cause to Hæu's. Shakespeare.

This bond doth give thee here no jot of blood;
The words expressly are a pound of flesh. Shakespeare.

I argue not Against Heaven's hand, or will; nor hate one jot
Of heart or hope; but still bear up, and steer Right onwards. Milton, Sonnet.

You might, with every jot as much justice, hang me up, because I'm old, as best me because I'm impotent. L'Estrange.

A man may read the discourses of a very rational author, and yet acquire not one jot of knowledge. Lache.

The final event will not be one jot less the consequence of our own choice and actions, for God's having from all eternity foreseen and determined what that event shall be. Rogers.

- TO JOT.* v. a. [from the noun.] To set down; to make a memorandum of. Modern.

- JO'TA.* n. s. [ioa, Sax.; iota, Fr. See JOT.] A title.

It is no less than a direct affront to our Creator and Governor, in a branch of that law, that he values as a transcript of his own holiness, and enforces by the penalty of eternal death threatened to the transgressors of the least iota of it. Barnes, vol. I. S. 10.

Nor have all the self-reflections or abstractions of the most exalted minds, from any combinations or alterations of ideas, been able, amidst their other prodigious discoveries, to add a single iota to one of these. Ellis, Knowl. of Divine Things, p. 115.

- JO'TTING.* n. s. [from To jot.] A memorandum; as, cursory jottings. Of very recent usage. The Scotch also employ this word. See Dr. Jamieson's Dictionary.

- JO'VIAL.* adj. [jovialis, Lat.; jovial, French; which Cotgrave renders 'jo-vial, sanguine, born under the planet Jupiter;' and he describes a jovialis as "one that is naturally, and by complexion, pleasant or sanguine." A learned etymologist of modern times considers the word, in its secondary sense, as connected with jubilo, meaning to make a noise of loud and unrestrained merriment. "From the accidental similarity of jovial, loudly joyous, to jovial, relating to Jupiter, a confusion has arisen; and our ancient poets, as well as their commentators, appear to have imagined, that jovial, in the sense of merry, was deduced from jovial, as a quality belonging to Jove." Whiter's Etymol. Magn. p. 219. Skinner agrees with Cotgrave.]

1. Under the influence of Jupiter.

The fixed stars are astrologically differentiated by the planets, and are esteemed martial or jovial, according to the colours whereby they answer these planets. Brown, Vul. Err.

2. Gay; airy; merry; cheerful.

The heavens always jovial, Look'd on them lovely. Spenker, F. Q. li. xii. 51.
My lord, sleep o'er your rugged looks;
Be bright and jovial among your guests. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Our jovial star reign'd at his birth. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

Some men, of an ill and melancholy nature, incline the company, into which they come, so be sad and ill-disposed; and contrariwise, others of a jovial nature dispose the company to be merry and cheerful. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

His odes are some of them panegyrical, others moral, the rest jovial or bacchanical. Dryden.

Perhaps the jovial that charm'd the sprightly crowd,
And made the jovial table laugh no loud,
To some false notion ow'd its poor pretence. Prior.

JO'VIALIST. * n. s. [from jovial.] One who lives jovially. Cotgrave and Sherwood both give this word. See the etymology of JOVIAL.
What talk we to these jovialists? It is liberty, with them, for a man to speak what he thinks, to take what he likes, to do what he lists.

Sp. Hall, Rem. p. 21.
The jovialists of the world drink wine in bowls.

JO'VIALITY. * adv. [from jovial.] Merrily; gaily.

Though his table be jovially furnished.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 235.
Fare jovially, and clap your hands.

JO'VIALITY. * n. s. [from jovial.] Gaiety; merriment.

They are not become true penitents. — Swearing, with such persons, is but a grace and lustre to their speech; — lying but wit's craft or policy; drunkenness, jovialness or good fellowship; — thus do they baptize vice by the name of virtue.
Henry, Serms. (1658), p. 32.
JO'VIALTY. * n. s. [from jovial.] Merriment; festivity.

The first day vapours away in tobacco, feasts, and other jovialty. J. S. Herbert, Trans. p. 308.
The night, — he had purposed to spend in jovialty, whilst others slept.

Gregory, Potham. (1650), p. 245.

To think that this perhaps might be the last banquet they should taste of; that they should themselves shortly become the feast of worms and serpents, could not but somewhat spoil the gust of their highest delicacies, and disturb the sport of their loudest jovialties.

Barrow, Works, vol. iii. S. 14.

JO'VIANCE. n. s. [rejoissance, Fr.] Jollity; merriment; festivity. Obsolete.

Collis, my dear, when shall it please thee sing, As thou wert wont, songs of some joviance?

Thy muse too long slumbered in sorrowing,
Lulled asleep through love's misgovernment.

Spenser.

TO JOUNCE. * v. a. To shake; to jolt; as, a jouncing trot, i. e. a hard rough trot. Norfolk Dial. Grose. Hence a jounce, in the same part of England, is a jolt or shake. Probably from the old French jancer, "to stir a horse in the stable till he sweat withal." Cotgrave.

TO JOUP. * To shake up; to dash. See TO JAUP. Grose, and Craven Dialect.

JO'URNAL. adj. [Journal, Fr. giornale, Italian.] Daily; quotidian. Out of use.

Now gain the golden Ptochus for to steep
His fery face in billows of the west,
And his faint steeds water'd in ocean deep,
Whilst from their journal labours they did rest.

Spenser, F. Q.

Ere twice
The sun has made his journal greeting to
The under generation, you shall find
Your safety manifested.

Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.
Stick to your journal course; the breach of custom

Is breach of all. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

JO'URNAL. n. s. [journal, Fr.; giornale, Italian.]

1. A diary; an account kept of daily transactions.

Edward kept a most judicious journal of all the principal passages of the affairs of his estate.

Hayward on Edw. VI.

Time has destroyed two noble journals of the navigation of Hanno and of Hamilar.

Arbutnot on China.

2. Any paper published daily.

JO'URNALIST. * n. s. [from journal.] A writer of journals.

The reader will be surprised to find the above-mentioned journalist taking so much care of a life, that was filled with such inconsiderable affairs.

Addison, Spect. No. 318.
TO JO'URNALIZE. * v. a. [from journal.]

To enter in an account of daily transactions.

He kept his journal very diligently, but then what was there to journalize? Johnson.

JO'URNEY. n. s. [journée, Fr.]

1. The travel of a day.

When Duncan is asleep,
Where'to the rather shall this day's hard journey
Soundly invite him. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Scarcely the sun
Hath finish'd half his journey. Milton, P. L.

2. Travel by land; distinguished from a voyage or travel by sea.

So are the horses of the enemy,
In general journey bated and brought low. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Before the light of the gospel, mankind travelled like people in the dark, without any certain prospect of the end of their journeys, or of the way that led to it.

He for the promise'd journey bids prepare
The smooth hair'd horses and the rapid car. Pope, Odyssey.

3. Passage from place to place.

Some, having a long journey from the upper regions, would float up and down a good while.

Light of the world, the ruler of the year,
Still as thou dost thy radiant journeys run,
Through every distant climate own,
That in fair Albion thou hast seen.

The greatest price the brightest crown. Prior.

TO JO'URNEY. v. n. [from the noun.] To travel; to pass from place to place.

Gentlemen of good esteem
Are journeying to salute the emperor. Shakespeare.

We are journeying unto the place, of which the Lord said, I will give it you. Numbers, s. 29.

Since such love's natural station is, may still
My love descend, and journey down the hill;
Not parting after growing beauties, so
I shall ebb on with them who homeward go.

Donne.

I have journeyed this morning, and it is now the heat of the day; therefore your Lordship's discourses had need content my ears very well, to make them interest my eyes to keep open.

Over the tent a cloud
Shall rest by day, a fiery gleam by night,
Save when they journey. Milton, P. L.

Having heated his body by journeying, he took cold upon the ground.

Warren, Surgery.

JO'URNEMAN. n. s. [journée, a day's work, Fr. and man.] A hired workman; a workman hired by the day.

They were called journeymen that wrought with others by the day, though now by statute it be extended to those likewise that covenant to work in their occupation with another by the year.

Players have so strutted and bellowed, that I have thought some of nature's journeymen had made men, and not made them well.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

I intend to work for the court myself, and will have journeymen under me to furnish the rest of the nation.

Addison.

See Frog to Bull, this old rogue will take the business into his hands: we must starve or turn journeymen to old Lewis Baboon.

Arbutnot, John Bull.

JO'URNERY. n. s. [journée, Fr. and work.] Work performed for hire; work done by the day.

Did no committee sit, where he Might cut out journeymen for thee?

And set these a task with subordination,
To stick up sale and sequestration. Hudibras.

Her family she was forced to hire out at journeymen to her neighbours. Arbutnot, John Bull.

JOUST. * n. s. [joust, Fr. jost, impetus; ant. Fland. Serenius.] Tilt; tournament; mock fight. It is now written less properly just. Dr. Johnson. — Spenser writes it giust, following the Italian giostra. Lat. justa.

And sing of bloody Mars, of wars, of giusts. Spenser, Shep. Cal. Oct.

Bases, and unsteal trappings, gorgeous knights
At joust and tournament. Milton, P. L.

TO JOUST. * v. n. [joster, Fr.] To run in the tilt.

So forth they went and both together giusted. Spenser, F. Q.

All who since
Joustal in Asprament or Mantaban. Milton, P. L.

JOUL. * See Jole.

JO'WLER. * n. s. [perhaps corrupted from howler, as making a hideous noise after the game, whom the rest of the pack follow as their leader. Dr. Johnson. — Rather perhaps from jowl, as jole, the head, is sometimes written; hounds having usually large heads.] The name of a hunting dog or beagle.

See him dig his feeble legs about,
Like hounds ill-coupled: jowler lugs him still
Through hedges, ditches, and through all this ill.

Dryden.

JO'WTER. n. s. [perhaps corrupted from jolter.]

Plenty of fish is vented to the fish-drivers, whom we call jouters. Corru.

JOY. * n. s. [joye, Fr. gioia, Italian. Dr. Johnson. — Menage deduces the word from the Latin gaudium; Morin from the Greek io io, i. e. Lat. io, a cry of joy. The abbreviation of gaus for gaudium, however exists.]

1. The passion produced by any happy accident; gladness; exultation; delight. Dr. Johnson here cites the definition of Locke: "Joy is a delight of the mind, from the consideration of the present, or assured approaching possession of a good." It is thus minutely distinguished by one of our old learned divines. "He doth not say, 'with food and joy,' Acts. xiv. 17. For joy, properly taken, hath its seat in the mind and spirit of man; nor is it there placed without the spirit of God; whereas the gladness, whereof the apostle there speaks, may harbour in the inferior or affective part. This difference, which we now observe, between joy and gladness in our English, the Greek writers curiously observe between io io and χαρά; so do the Latins between letitia and gaudium." Dr. Jackson, Works, iii. 511.

There appears much joy in him; even so much, that joy could not be itself modest enough without a badge of bitterness.

Shakespeare.

There should not be such heaviness in their destruction, as shall be joy over them that are persuaded to salvation.

2 Entry.

The lightness passion of joy was not that trivial, vanishing, superficial thing, that only glides the apprehension, and plays upon the surface of the soul.

2. Gaiety; merriment; festivity.

The roofs with joy resound;
And hymen, id hymen rung around.

Dryden.

3. Happiness; felicity.

My lord Balamio, and my gentle lady,
I wish you all the joy that you can wish.
Come, love and health to all!
Then I'll sit down: give me some wine:
I drink of the general joy of the whole table.
Alonzo smiling came,
Attended with a train of all her race,
Whom in the rage of empire I had murder'd;
But now, no longer foes, they gave me joy
Of my new conquest.

Dryden, Don Sebastian.

Lovely herself, and lovely by her side,
A bevy of bright nymphs, with sober grace,
Came glittering like a star, and took her place:
Her heavenly form beheld, all wish'd her joy;
And little wanted, but in vain, their wishes all employ.

The said Mrs. Flambeau had not been to see the lady Towndy, and wish her joy, since her marriage with Sir Ralph.

Tatler, No. 269.

4. A term of fondness.

Now our joy,
Although the last, not least; —
What can you say?

Shakespeare, A. Lear.

To Joy. v. n. [from the noun.] To rejoice;
to be glad; to exult.

Sometimes I joy when glad occasion fits,
And mark it much like to a comedy;
Soon after, when my joy to sorrow fits,
I will make my woe a tragedy.
I cannot joy, until I be resolv'd
Where our right valiant father is become.

Dryden.

He will joy over thee with singing.

Zeph. iii. 17.

I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation.

Rish. iii. 18.

Exceedingly the more joyful be for the joy of Thou, because his spirit was refreshed by you.

2 Cor. vii. 13.

They laugh, we weep; they joy while we lament.

Psalm.

No man imparteth his joys to his friend, but he joys the more; and no man imparteth his griefs, but he grieveth the less.

Bacon, Ess.

Well then, my soul, joy in the midst of pain;
Thy Christ that conquer'd hell, shall come from above
With greater triumph yet return again,
And conquer his own justice with his love.

Watson.

What he gives in thee, this paradise,
And thy fair Eve.

Milton, P. L.

Their cheerful age with honour youth attends,
Joy'd that from pleasure's slavery they are free.

Denham.

1. To Joy. v. a.

To congratulate; to entertain kindly.

Like us they love or hate, like us they know
To joy the friend; or grapple with the foe.

Prior.

2. To gladden; to exhilarate.

She went to Palerma, meaning to delight her eyes and joy her brother with the conversation of her beloved sister.

Sidney.

My soul was joy'd in vain;
For angry Neptune rous'd the raging main.

Pope.

For [Joie de, French.] To enjoy; to have happy possession of.

Let us hence,
And let her joy her raven-colour'd love.

Tasso, Andron.

I might have liv'd, and joy'd immortal bliss,
Yet willingly chose rather death with thee.

Milton, P. L.

Th' usurper joy'd not long
His ill-got crown.

Dryden, Span. Fr.

JO'YANCE. n. s. [joint, old French.]
Gaiety; festivity. Obsolete.

With joyance bring her, and with jollity. Spenar.
His gladfulness and kindly joyance. Spenar.

JO'YFUL. adj. [joy and full.]

1. Full of joy; glad; exulting.
They blazed the king, and went unto their tents joyful and glad of heart. 1 Kings, viii. 66.
My soul shall be joyful in my God. Is. lxi. 10.

2. Sometimes it has of before the cause of joy.
Six brave companions from each ship we lost:
We sail outspread we fly th' unequal strife,
Sad for their loss, but joyful of our life.

Pope, Odys.

JO'YFULLY. adv. [from joyful.] With joy;
gladly.

If we no more meet 'till we meet in heav'n,
Then joyfully, my noble lord of Bedford,
And my kind kinsmen, warriors all, adieu.

Shakespeare, Hen. F.

Never did men more joyfully obey,
Or sooner understood the sign to fly
With such alacrity they bore away,
As if to praise them all the states stood by.

Dryden.

The good Christian considers pains only as necessary passages to a glorious immortality; that, through this dark scene of fancied horror, sees a crown and a throne, and everlasting blessings prepared for him, joyfully receives his summons, as he has long impatiently expected it.

Water.

JO'YFULNESS. n. s. [from joyful.] Gladness; joy.

Thou wert not the Lord thy God with joyfulness, and with gladness of heart, for the abundance of all things.

Deut. xlviii. 47.

JO'YLESS. adj. [from joy.]

1. Void of joy; feeling no pleasure.
A little joy enjoys the queen thereof;
For I am she, and altogether joyless.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

With downcast eyes the joyless victor sat,
Revolving in his alter'd soul
The various turns of chance below:
And now and then a sigh he stole,
And tears began to flow.

Dryden, Alce. Faust.

2. It has sometimes before the object.
With two fair eyes his mistress burns his breast;
He looks and languishes, and leaves his rest;
Forakes his food, and pining for the last,
Is joyless of the grove, and spurns the growing gram.

Dryden.

3. Giving no pleasure.

A jocular, dismal, black, and sorrowful issue:
Here is the babe, an loathsome as a toad.

Titus, Andron.

Here love his golden shafts employ; here lights
His constant lamp, and waves his purple wings;
Reigns here, and revels; not in the thought smiles
Of harlots, loveless, joyless, unpleas'd.

Milton, P. L.

The pure in heart shall see God; and if any others could so invade this inclosure, as to take heaven by violence, it surely would be a very joyless possession.

Decay of Chr. Piety.

He forgets his sleep, and loaths his food,
That youth, and health, and war are joyless to him.

Adrian.

JO'YLESSLY. adv. [from joyless.] Without receiving pleasure; without giving pleasure.

JO'YLESSNESS. n. s. [from joyless.] State of being joyless.

Is the joy of heaven no perfecter in itself, but that it excites the scorn of this life to give it a taste? Is that joy, and that glory, but a compa-rsive glory, and a comparative joy? not such in itself, but such in comparison of the joylessness and the insignificance of this world? I know, my God, it is far, far otherwise.

Dante, Divot. (1625.) p. 426.

JO'YOUS. adj. [old French, joyous; modern, joyeux.]

1. Glad; gay; merry.
Most joyous man, on whom the shining sun
Did bestow his face, myself I did esteem,
And that my father friend did no less joyous deem.

Spenar, F. Q.

In this your joyous city, whose antiquity is of ancient days?

Joyous the birds; fresh gales and gentle airs
Whisper'd it.

Milton, P. L.

Then joyous birds frequent the lonely grove,
And breathe, by nature stung, renew their love.

Dryden.

Fast by her flowery bank the toots of Arcas Favourites of Heaven, with happy care protect Their feeble charge, and joyous drink her wave.

Prior.

2. Giving joy.

They all as glad as birds of joyous prime,
Thence led her forth, about of jocosus prime.

Spenar, F. Q.

3. It has of sometimes before the cause of joy.

Round our death-bed every friend should run,
And joyous of our conquest early won;
While the malicious world with envious tears
Should grudge our happy end, and wish it theirs.

Dryden.

JO'YOUSLY. adv. [from joyous.] With joy; with gladness. Huolto, and Barrett.

They were of the senate and people joyously received.

Sir T. Blyot, Gen. fol. 151.

JO'YOUSNESS. n. s. [from joyous.] State of being joyous.

IPACACUANHA. n. s. [An Indian plant.]
Ipacacuanha is a small irregularly contorted root, rough, dense, and firm.

One sort is of a dusky greyish colour on the surface, and of a paler grey when broken, brought from Peru: the other sort is a small root, resembling the former; but it is of a deep dusky brown on the outside, and white when broken, brought from the Brazils. The grey ought to be preferred, because the brown is apt to operate more roughly.

Hill, Mat. Med.

The violent operation of ipacacuanha lies in its resin, but the saline extract is a gentle purge and diuretic by the stimulus of its salts.

By. Berkeley, Sires, § 84.

IP'OCRA. n. s. [See HIPPOCRAS. Where Dr. Johnson follows the opinions of many in explaining it a medicated wine, quasi vinum Hippocratis. Morin thinks it more probably derived from the Gr. ios and ipocras, a mixture, and to have no connection with the name of Hippocrates.

But Mr. Tyrrwhitt says, that "ipocras, wine mixed with spices and other ingredients, was so named, because strained through a woollen cloth, called the sieve of Hippocrates." Spiced wine.

Its drinketh ipocras, &c. Caesars, Morch. Tit.
Drugs of ipocras out of a great bowl.
Sir J. Flett, Overy, on Ambros. (1656.) p. 11.

IRASCIBILITY. n. s. [from irascible.]
Propensity or disposition to anger.

The irascibility of this class of tyrants is generally exercised upon petty provocations.

Johnson, Rambler, No. 112.

IRASCIBLE, adj. [irascibilis, low Latin; irascibile, Fr.] Partaking of the nature of anger.

The irascible passions follow the temper of the heart, and the conspicuous distractions the crisis of the liver. Brown.

I know more than one instance of irascible passions subdued by a vegetable diet. Arbutnot on ailments.

We are here in the country surrounded with blessings and pleasures, without any occasion of exercising our irascible faculties. Digby to Pope.

IRASCIBLENESS, * n. s. [from irascible.] State of being angry. Scott.

IRE, † n. s. [ira, Latin; ippe, Saxon; ire, old French:]

"My good father, tell me this;

"What thing is ire? Sonne, it is That in our English wrath is hote."

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 3.]

Anger; rage; passionate hatred.

She lik'd not his desire;

Fain would be free, but dreading parents' ire. Sidney.

If I digg'd up thy forefathers' graves,

And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,

It could not slake mine ire, nor ease my heart. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Or Neptune's ire, or Juno's, that so long

Perpleth'd the Greek and Cytherea's son. Milton, P. L.

The sentence, from thy head remov'd, may light

On me, sole cause to thee of all this woe;

Me! me! only just object of his ire. Milton, P. L.

For this the avenging Power employs his darts,

And empties all his quiver in our hearts;

Thus will persist, relentless in his ire,

Till the fair slave be render'd to his ire. Dryden.

IRREFUL, adj. [ire and full.] Angry; raging; furious.

The irreful band Orleans, that drew blood

From thee, my boy, I soon encounter'd." Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

By many hands your father was subdued;

But only slaughter'd by the irreful arm

Of unrelenting Clifford. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

There learn'd this maid of arms the irreful quiver. Fletcher.

Is he not irreful, and replenish'd with wrath and displeasure?

Hemlock, Scen. II. against Adultery.

In midst of all the dense confusion sat,

And glodown discontent and fall debate,

And madness laughing in his irreful mood. Dryden.

IRREFULLY, † adv. [from ire.] With ire; in an angry manner.

(He) irrefully usag'd would needs to open arms. Dryden, Polyd. B. 4.

IRENARCH, * n. s. [irenarque, French; ἱρεναρχος, Greek; from ἱρεν, peace, and ἀρχη, a ruler.] An officer of the old Greek empire, employed to preserve public tranquillity.

IRENICAL, * adj. [ἱρενικός, Gr.] Pacific; desirous of peace.

How meek his temper was, his many irenic traits do show. Prof. to Sp. Hall's Rem. (1660), sign. b.

IRIS, * n. s. [Latin.]

1. The rainbow.

Beside the solitary inn, which God shew'd unto Noah, there is another luxury, whose efficient is the moon. Brown.

2. Any appearance of light resembling the rainbow.

When both bows appeared more distinct, I measured the breadth of the interior iris 2 gr. 10'

and the breadth of the red yellow, and green in the exterior iris, was to the breadth of the same colours in the interior 3 to 2. Newton, Opt.

3. The circle round the pupil of the eye.

4. The flower-de-luce.

Iris all bues, roses, and jessamine. Milton, P. L.

IRISH, * n. s.

1. Natives of Ireland. [Erin.]

All the customs of the Irish, which I have often noted and compared, would minister occasion of a most ample discourse of the original of them, and the antiquity of that people, which in truth

I think to be more ancient than most that I know in this end of the world. Spenser on Ireland.

It was from the time when he (Scott) first began to patronize the Irish, that they may date their riches and prosperity. Johnson, Life of Swift.

2. The Irish language.

There are many compositions of letters in Irish,

which have not the same force in English.

Richardson on the Irish Language, (1712).

3. A game of elder times.

The inconstancy of Irish fully represents the changeableness of humane occurrences, since it ever stands so tickle that one malignant throw can quite ruin a never so well built game. Hall, Hen. Facies, (1646).

4. Linen so called, being made in Ireland.

IRISH, † adj. Denoting what belongs to Ireland, what is produced or made in Ireland.

The Irish will be better drawn to the English, than the English to the Irish government. Spenser on Ireland.

My coaches, beds, and window-curtains are of Irish stuff. Gauvain, No. 49.

IRISHMEN, * n. s. [from Irish.] Mode of speaking used by the Irish.

"I will be there as soon as you." I will, instead of I shall, is a Scotchism. Douce. And an

Irishism too. Reed, Note on Shaksp. Com. of Err.

IRISHRY, * n. s. [from Irish.] The people of Ireland. See ENGLISHRY.

I know that among the Irishry it was not yet clean taken away. Dryden, Disc. of Civ. Life, (1606), p. 157.

To IRK, † v. a. [yrk, work, Icelandic.

Dr. Johnson. — yrk, to urge on, Goth.

Serenius. — But Irish rightly supposes it to be the Saxon peope, or rype, pain, torture, anxiety.] This word is used only impersonally, it irks me; miki pana

ent, it gives me pain; or, I am weary of

it. Thus the authors of the Accidence say, tudet, it irketh. Dr. Johnson. —

Certainly it is commonly used impersonally, but the following example is an exception.

But when these petting poets in their rimes

Shall taunt, or jest, or paint our wicked works,

And cause the people know and curse our crimes,

This ugly fault no tyrant lines but irks. Mir. for Mag. p. 456.

It irks me to hear one thing to often. Holnet.

Come, shall we go and kill our venison?

And yet it irks me, the poor despised poor!

Should in their own confines, with forked heads,

Have their round haunches gor'd? Shakespeare.

It irks his heart he cannot be reveng'd. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

IRKSOME, † adj. [from irk.]

1. Wearisome; tedious; troublesome; toilsome; tiresome; unpleasant.

I know she is an irksome bawling scold. Shakespeare.

Since that thou can't talk of love so well,

Thy company, which erst was irksome to me,

I will endure. Shakespeare, As you like it.

2. An instrument or utensil made of iron:

as, a flat iron, box iron, or smoothing

iron. In this sense it has a plural.

Where he may likeliest find

Trace to his restless thoughts, and entertain

The irksome hours, till his great chief return. Milton, P. L.

For not to irksome toil, but to delight

He made us, and delight to reason join'd. Milton, P. L.

There is nothing so irksome as general discourses, especially when they turn chiefly upon words. Addison, Spect.

Frequent appeals from hence have been very irksome to that illustrious body. Swift.

2. Weary; tired. Not now in use.

The people then embracing titles new,

Irksome of present, and longing for change,

Assented soon, because they love to range. Mir. for Mag. p. 352.

IRKSOMELY, † adv. [from irksome.] Wearisomely; tediously.

Our doctrine forces not dispute and unwilling-ness irksomely to keep in. Milton, Dict. and Errour of Divorce, l. 15.

Neither irksomely hating, nor fondly loving himself. Barrow, Works, l. 4.

IRKSOMENESS, * n. s. [from irksome.] Tediousness; wearisomeness.

As Castile describes it, the beginning, middle,

end of love, is sought else but sorrow, vexation, torture, irksomeness. Burton, Disc. of Med. p. 531.

Thus was he driven to shift and change his desire from one thing to another, finding solid content in never a one of them; but, after some small experiences, great irksomeness in them all. Fletcher, Atholm. p. 209.

The irksomeness of that truth, which they brought, was so unpleasant to them, that every where they call it a burden. Milton, Rem. of Ch. Gov. B. 2.

IRON, † n. s. [haiarn, Welsh; iern, Erse;

iarrun, Irish; ipn, ipen, Sax. iern, Sax.

iern, Icelandic. iern, earn, Goth. "ab

iberia sic dictum." Serenius.]

1. A metal found in most parts of the world. Its specific gravity is 778, water being 100; so that it is not a heavy metal, though there are many lighter. It is one of the few metals which are magnetic. It is employed in medicine, though of much less importance than several other metals.

Journ. of Arts and Sciences, No. 20.

p. 286. But its several uses are far more important than those of any other of the metal. It is one of the hardest of the metals, yet malleable, and most so as it approaches nearest, when heated, to fusion.

Not irksome dungeon, nor strong links of iron,

Can be retentive to the strength of spirit. Shakespeare.

If he smile him with an instrument of iron, so that he die, he is a murderer. Nam. text. 16.

The power of drawing iron is one of the ideas of a lunatic, and to be drawn is a part of that of iron. Locke.

In a piece of iron ore, of a ferruginous colour, are several thin plates, placed parallel to each other. Woodward.

There are incredible quantities of iron slag in various parts of the forest of Dean. Woodward on Fossils.

Iron stones lie in strata. Woodward on Fossils.

I treated of making iron work, and steel work. Miron.

2. An instrument or utensil made of iron:

as, a flat iron, box iron, or smoothing

iron. In this sense it has a plural.

Irons of a dolt, doublets that hangmen would Bury with those that were worn, these base slaves,
Ere yet the light be done, pack up.

Shakespeare, Coriol.
O Thou! whose captain I account myself,
Look on my forces with a gracious eye:
Put in their hands thy bruising iron of wrath,
That they may crush down with a heavy fall
The usurping helmets of our adversaries.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.
Can't thou fall his skin with barbed iron, or his head with fish-spears? Shakespeare, Jak. III. 7.
For this your locks in paper dance bound!
For this with tort'ring iron wreath'd around?

Pope.
3. Chain; shackle; manacle; as, he was put in iron.

The iron entered into his soul.
Psalms, Comm. Prayer.
His feet they hurt with fetters: he was laid in iron. Psalms, cv. 19.

IRON† adj. [open, Saxon adjective.]

1. Made of iron.
In iron walls they decia'd me not secure.
Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Get me an iron crow, and bring it straight Unto my cell. Shakespeare, Hen. and Jul.
Some are of an iron rod, shining, and polite;
others cut polite, but as if powdered with iron dust. Woodward.

Falcons and weasels do a great deal of injury to warrens: the way of taking them is in iron traps. Mortimer.

2. Resembling iron in colour.
A piece of stone of a dark iron grey colour,
but in some parts of a ferruginous colour.

Woodward on Fauns.
Some of them are of an iron rod, and very bright. Woodward.

3. Harsh; stern; severe; rigid; miserable; calamitous; as, the iron age, for an age of hardship and wickedness. These ideas may be found more or less in all the following examples.

Pouring forth their blood in brutish wise,
That any iron eyes, to see it, would agrieve.

Spenser, F. Q.
No man so iron hearted but the loadstone of each love may draw him.

Wallat, Life of Christ, (1615.) C. 8. b.
These iron hearted soldiers are no cold.

Hausen, and Fl. Laws of Candy.
Three rigorous virgins, waiting still behind,
Assist the throne of the iron scepter'd king.

Cruikshank, Scap. & Heroide.
But O sad virgin, that thy power
Might bid the soul of Orpheus sing
Such notes as, warbled to the lyre,
Drew iron tears from Pluto's cheeks,
And made hell groat what love did seek.

Milton, II. Pens.
In all my iron years of wars and dangers,
From blooming youth to decaying age,
My fame ne'er knew a stain of dishonour.

Rome.
Jove crush the nations with an iron rod,
And ev'ry monarch be the scourge of God.

Pope, Ode on St. Simeon.
4. Indissoluble; unbroken.
Rash Elpenor, in an evil hour,
Dry'd an immeasurable bowl, and thought
To exalt his surfet by irrogious sleep,
Imprudent: him death's iron sleep oppress'd.

Philips.
5. Hard; impenetrable.
I will converse with iron-wiz'd fools,
And unresponsive boys: none are for me,
That look into me with consid'rate eyes.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.
To IRON. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To smoothen with an iron.
2. To shackle with irons.

Vol. II.

IRONED. * adj. [from iron.] Armed;
dressed in iron. (ferratus.) Hulot.
IRONHEARTED. * adj. Hardhearted. See the third sense of the adjective IRON.

IRONICAL.† adj. [ironique, Fr. from irony.]
Expressing one thing and meaning another; speaking by contraries.

Hence the philosopher, out of a serious meditation of man's lives, fell a weeping; and with continual tears bewailed their misery, madness, and folly. Democritus on the other side burst out a laughing, their whole life to him seem'd so ridiculous; and he was so far carried with this ironical passion, that the citizens of Abdera took him to be mad.

Barton, Anal. of Med. To the Reader.
The whole court shall take itself absurd
By its ironical confederacy.

B. Johnson, Cynthia's Revels.
In this fallacy may be comprised all ironical mistakes, or expressions receiving inverted significations. Brown.

I take all your ironical civilities to a literal sense, and shall expect them to be literally performed. Swift.

IRONICALLY. adv. [from ironical.] By the use of irony.

Socrates was pronounced by the oracle of Delphos to be the wisest man of Greece, which he would turn from himself ironically, saying, There could be nothing in him to verify the oracle, in himself, that he was not wise, and knew it; and others were not wise, and knew it not. Bacon.

The dean, ironically grave,
Still shunn'd the fool, and lash'd the knave. Swift.

IRONICK. * adj. [ironique, French.] Speaking by contraries; ironical.

Most Socratically! B. B. Johnson, New Tan.
Or, if you will, ironically! Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 11.

IRONIST. * n. s. [from irony.] One who speaks by contraries.

A poet, or orator, — would have no more to do but to send to the ironist for his sarcasms.

Arbutnot and Pope, Mort. Scind.
Secrets took the cause of ironist from the continued hammer, and ridicule, which runs through his moral discourses. Hurd.

IRONMONGER. n. s. [iron and monger.] A dealer in iron.

IRONMOLD. * n. s. [iron and mould.] A mark or spot on linen, occasioned by the rust of iron.

Fine linen, being once stained with black ink, though it be washed never so, will retain an iron-mould ever after.

Junius, Sin Sigmant. (1635.) p. 378.
We have seen armies, the ironmould that stained our religion, and eat out order and laws.

Spencer, Righteous Ruler, (1660.) p. 57.
IRONWOOD. n. s. A kind of wood extremely hard, and so ponderous as to sink in water. It grows in America.

Robinson Crusoe.
IRONWORT. n. s. [sideritis, Lat.] A plant.

Miller.
IRONY. adj. [from iron.] Made of iron;
partaking of iron.

The force they are under is real, and that of their fate but imaginary; it is not strange if the irony chains have more solidity than the contemplative. Hammond on Fundamentals.

Some springs of Hungary, highly impregnated with virriolick salts, dissolve the body of one manual, suppose iron, put into the spring; and deposits in lieu of the iron particles carrying off, coppery particles. Woodward on Fauns.

IRONY.† n. s. [ironie, French; alpevia, Gr. from iron, a dissembler.] A mode of speech in which the meaning is contrary to the words: as, Bolingbroke was a holy man. Irony is a word of great age in our language, though Dr. Johnson has cited it only from Swift.

He speaks it by an ironic or skorne.
By, Gardiner on the Sacrament, 1551. fol. 82.

So grave a body, upon so solemn an occasion, should not be dead in irony, or explain their meaning by contraries. Swift.

IRONUS. * adj. [ireux, French.] Angry; passionate. Obsolete.

It is great harm, and certes great piece,
To set an iron man in high degree.
Chaucer, Sompn. Tale.

This Naman Sires,
So fell, and so irous. Shelton, Poems, p. 174.

IRRADIANCE.† n. s. [irradiance, French;
IRRADIANCY, irradio, Latin.]

1. Emission of rays or beams of light upon any object.

The principal affliction is its translucency; the irradiance and sparkling, found in many gems, is not discoverable in this. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Beams of light emitted.
Love out the heavenly Spited? Or do they mix
Irradiance, virtual, or immediate touch.

Milton, p. L.
To IRRADIATE.† v. a. [irradio, Lat.]

1. To adorn with light emitted upon it; to brighten.

When he thus perceives that these opacous bodies do not hinder the eye from judging light to have an equal ptenary diffusion through the whole place, he is obliged to be careful not to difficulty to allow air, that is diaphanous, to be every where mingled with light. Digby on Bodies.

It is not a converting but a crowning grace;
such an one irradiates and puts a circle of glory about the head of him upon whom it descends.

South, Sermon, li. 574.
2. To enlighten intellectually; to illuminate; to illuminate.

Reason — unmixed and contemporized with the soul, and not only extrinsically irradiating it.
Ep. Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 17.

Celestial Light.
Shine inward, and the mind through all her powers
Irradiate; there plant eyes: all mist from thence Purge and dispense. Milton, P. L.

God — is lodged in our very essence, and is as a soul within the soul, to irradiate its understanding, rectify its will, purify its passions, and enlighten all the powers of man. Spectator, No. 571.

3. To animate by heat or light.

Ethereal or solar heat must digest, influence, irradiate, and put those more simple parts of matter into motion. Hale.

4. To decorate with shining ornaments.
No weeping orphan saw his father's store
Our shines irradiate, or loblaze the floor. Pope.

To IRRADIATE. v. n. To shine upon.

Day was the state of the hemisphere, on which light irradiated; and night was the state of the opposite hemisphere, on which rested the shadow projected by the body of the earth.

Sp. Heron, Lett. on Fidelity, L. 10.
IRRADIATE. * part. adj. Decorated with shining ornaments.

The peacock spreads his rainbow train, with eyes
Of sapphire bright, irradiate each with gold.

Macon, Eng. Gard. B. 4.

IRRADIATION. n. s. [irradiation, Fr. from irradiate.]

1. The act of emitting beams of light.

If light were a body, it should drive away the air, which is likewise a body, wherever it is admitted; for within the whole sphere of the irradiation of it, there is no point but light is found.

Lightly on Rodica.

The generation of bodies is not effected by irradiation, or answerably unto the propagation of light; but having a transmutation is made materially from some parts, and ideally from every one.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Illumination; intellectual light.

The means of immediate union of these intelligible objects to the understanding, are sometimes divine and supernatural, as by immediate irradiation or revelation.

Hale.

IRRATIONAL. adj. [irrationalis, Lat.]

1. Void of reason; void of understanding; wanting the discursive faculty.

Thus began

Outrage from lifeless things; but discord first, Daughter of sin, among the irrational Death introduced.

He hath eaten, and lives,
And knows, and speaks, and reasons, and discerns;

Irrational till then. Milton, P. L.

2. Absurd; contrary to reason.

Since the brain is only a part transmittent, and that humours oft are precipitated to the lungs before they arrive to the brain, no kind of benefit can be effected from so irrational an application.

Murray on Conspuans.

I shall quietly submit not wishing so irrational a thing as that every body should be deceived.

Pope.

IRRATIONALITY. n. s. [from irrational.]

Want of reason.

Who is it here that dreams to the frivolousness and irrationality of our dreams?

A. Baxter on the Road, (1737.) p. 167.

IRRATIONALLY. adv. [from irrational.]

Without reason; absurdly.

The orthodox Jew, that he might more easily avoid the truth of the second, hath most irrationally denied the first. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 3.

He had foolishly and irrationally bartered away eternity for a trifle. South, Sermon. viii. 151.

IRRECLAIMABLE. adj. [in and reclaimable.]

Not to be reclaimed; not to be changed to the better.

When length of days made virtuous habits heretical and unmovable, inveterate and irreclaimable.

Brown, Chr. Moral. iii. 1.

If we may judge by proportion, the angels in heaven, who rejoice at the conversion of one sinner, do also mourn and lament for the irreclaimable wickedness of so many millions as are in the world.

Norris on the Heavens, p. 44.

As for obstinate, irreclaimable, professed enemies, we must expect their calamities will continue.

Atchick, Preacher.

IRRECLAIMABLY. adv. [from irreclaimable.]

So as not to be reclaimed.

Thus we see the irreclaimably wicked lodged in a place and condition very wretched and calamitous.

Chandler, Pre-est. p. 135.

IRRECONCILABLE. adj. [irreconcilable, Fr. in and reconcilable.]

This word was formerly irreconcilable; like the old French also, irreconcilable. "They are irreconcilable to their princes." Sir R. Williams, Actions of the Low Countries, 1618. p. 102. "Irreconcilable contradictions." Bp. Morton, Discharge of Five Imputations, &c. 1633. p. 98.

1. Not to be recalled to kindness; not to be appeased.

Wage eternal war,

Irreconcilable to our grand foe. Milton, P. L.
A weak unequal faction may irritate a government; but when it grows equal in strength, and irreconcilable by animosity, it cannot end without some crisis.

Temple.

There are no factions, though irreconcilable to one another, that are not united in their affection to you.

Dryden.

2. Not to be made consistent; it has with or to.

As she was strictly virtuous herself, so she always put the best construction upon the words and actions of her neighbours, except where they were irreconcilable to the rules of honesty and decency.

Arbuthnot, John Bull.

Since the sense I oppose is attended with such gross irreconcilable absurdities, I presume I need not offer any thing further in support of the one, or in disproof of the other.

Rogers.

This essential power of gravitation or attraction is irreconcilable with the Atheist's own doctrine of a chaos.

Bentley.

All that can be transmitted from the stars is wholly unaccountable, and irreconcilable to any system of science.

Bentley.

IRRECONCILABLENESS. n. s. [from irreconcilable.]

Impossibility to be reconciled. What must it be to live in this disagreement with every thing, this irreconcilable and opposition, to the order and government of nature?

Ld. Shaftesbury.

IRRECONCILABLY. adv. [from irreconcilable.]

In a manner not admitting reconciliation.

The five great points controverted between the two families — so irreconcilably.

Sir T. Herbert, Truce. p. 123.

Often times you shall see husband and wife irreconcilably divided.

South, Sermon. vi. 118.

TO IRRECONCILE. v. a. [in and reconcile.]

To prevent being reconciled to. As the object calls for our devotion, — so it must needs irreconcile us to sin.

Bp. Taylor, Life of Christ, iii. 15.

They first laboured to find some defect in his election, and then to irreconcile those towards him, who they found had any esteem or kindness for him.

Ld. Charendon, Life. l. 75.

IRRECONCILED. adj. [in and reconciled.]

Not atoned.

A servant dies in many irreconciled loquities.

Shakespeare.

An irreconciled petitioner in God's Court of Requests, is like (as you see): to find no audience.

Bp. Prideaux, Euch. p. 40.

IRRECONCILEMENT. n. s. [in and reconciliation.]

Want of reconciliation; disagreement.

Such an irreconcilable between God and Man.

Wake, Reason on Texts of Script. p. 85.

IRRECONCILIATION. n. s. [in and reconciliation.]

Want of reconciliation.

How irreconcilable with our brethren would all our addresses to God, we need be lessened no further than from our Saviour's own mouth.

Bp. Prideaux, Euch. p. 71.

IRRECORDABLE. adj. [in and recordable.]

Not to be recorded.

Cockerm.

IRRECOVERABLE. adj. [in and recoverable.]

1. Not to be regained; not to be restored or repaired.

Time, in a natural sense, is irrecoverable: the moment, just fled by us, it is impossible to recall.

Rogers.

2. Not to be remedied.

The irrecoverable loss of so many livings of principal value.

Holzer.

It concerns every man, that would not trifle away his soul, and fool himself into irrecoverable misery, with the greatest seriousness to require.

Tillot.

IRRECOVERABLENESS. n. s. [from irrecoverable.]

State of being beyond recovery, or repair.

The first notice my soul hath of her sickness, is irrecoverableness.

Donne, Devot. p. 13.

The irrecoverableness of your fall — from the highest pitch of happiness to the lowest state of misery.

Archbishop, deacy, Alarum, p. 64.

IRRECOVERABLY. adv. [from irrecoverable.]

Beyond recovery; past repair.

O dark, dark, dark amid the blaze of noon;

Irrecoverably dark, total eclipse;

Without all hope of day!

Milton, S. A.

The credit of the philosopher is irrecoverably lost by the last breach with the bankers.

Temple.

IRRECOVERABLE. adj. [irrecoverable, Fr.; irrecoverabilis, Lat.]

Irrecoverable. Not now in use.

Colgrave, and Sherwood.

IRRECOVERABLY. adv. [from irrecoverable.]

Irrecoverably; without hope of recovery.

Striking his soul with irrecovered wound.

(1598.)

IRREDUCIBLE. adj. [in and reducible.]

Not to be brought or reduced.

These observations seem to argue the corporeity of air to be irreducible into water.

Boyle.

IRREFRAGABILITY. n. s. [from irrefragable.]

Strength of argument not to be refuted.

IRREFRAGABLE. adj. [irrefragable, old French; irrefragabilis, Lat.]

Not to be confuted; superior to argumental opposition.

What a marvellous concurrence is here of strong and irrefragable convictions!

Bp. Hall, Compend. B. 4.

The clear and irrefragable demonstrations of truth.

He is irrefragable in his honour, he will be a hog still.

Burton, Annot. of Mtd. to the Reader.

Strong and irrefragable the evidences of Christianity must be: they who resisted them would resist every thing.

Atterbury, Sermon.

The danger of introducing unexperienced men was urged as an irrefragable reason for working by slow degrees.

Swift.

IRREFRAGABLENESS. n. s. [from irrefragable.]

Force above confutation.

The plainness and irrefragableness of this truth is an affection between those terms that no power in heaven and earth can abolish.

Annals on Glencoe, &c. (1682.) p. 256.

IRREFRAGABLY. adv. [from irrefragable.]

With force above confutation.

It follows irrefragably from all this.

Bp. Hall, Rem. 244.

God's making the world, irrefragably proves, that he governs it too.

South, Sermon. ii. 247.

That they denied a future state is evident from St. Paul's reasonings, which are of no force but only on that supposition, as Origen largely and irrefragably proves.

Atterbury.

IRREFUTABLY. adv. [irrefutabilis, Latin.]

Not to be overthrown by argument.

Hear that irrefutable discourse of Cardinal Caietan.

Of fighting winds, while all is calm below,
They furious spring.

Thomson, Summer.

IRRITATE, part. adj. Heightened.

When they are collected, the heat becomes more violent and irritate, and thereby expelleth worse.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To IRRITATE, v. s. [low Lat. irritare, to make null, from irritus. See IRRITANT.] To render null or void.

If any thing should come to pass otherwise than it doth, yet God's foreknowledge could not be irritated by it, for then he did not know that it should come to pass as it doth.

Ep. Bramhall, Works, p. 727.

IRRITATION. n. s. [irritatio, Latin; irritation, French; from irritate.]

1. Provocation; exasperation. Sherwood.
2. Stimulation; vellilation.

Violent affections and irritations of the nerves, in any part of the body, is caused by something acrimonious. Arbutnot.

IRRITATORY.* adj. [from irritate.] Stimulating.

The other perardventure is sufficiently grounded for principles of faith, yet is weak by reason either of some passion, or of some irritatory and troublesome humour in his behaviour. Hales, Rem. p. 45.

Nothing hinders wounds from cicatrizing more than concourse of humour to the diseased part, and keeping things irritatory about the orifice of the wound. Hales, Rem. p. 285.

IRRUPTION. n. s. [irruption, Fr. irruptio, Latin.].

1. The act of any thing forcing an entrance.

How doth the water rage with his inundations, irruptions, flinging down towns, cities, villages, villages, besides swamps &c.!

Burton, Ann. Met. p. 4.

I refrain, too suddenly,

To utter what will come at last too soon;
Lest evil tidings, with too rude irruption,
Misting thy aged ear, should pierce his too deep.

Milton, S. A.

There are frequent inundations made in maritime countries by the irruption of the sea.

Burnet.

A full and sudden irruption of thick melancholic blood into the heart, puts a stop to its pulsation.

Harey.

2. Inroad; burst of invaders into any place.

Five or six weeks before my lord's fatal irruption into the city. Wotton, Rem. p. 180.

The famous wall of China, built against the irruptions of the Tartars, was begun about a hundred years before the Incarnation.

Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 189.

Notwithstanding the irruptions of the barbarous nations, one can scarce imagine how plentiful a soil should become so miserably unpeopled.

Addison on Italy.

IRRUPITIVE.* adj. [irruptus, Lat.] Bursting forth; rushing down or in.

Conscious fears his soul affright,
And storms of wrath and indignation dread
Seem ready to displace irruption on his head.

Whitchouse, Ode to Justice, (Poems, 1794.)

IS. [is, Saxon; es, Celt; is, Teut. ist, Goth. est, Lat. is, Gr. See To Is.]

1. The third person singular of To be: I am, thou art, he is.

He that is of God, heareth God's words.

St. John, vii. 47.

Be not afraid of them, for they cannot do evil; neither is it in them to do good. Jer. x. 5.

My thought, whose murmur yet is but fantastical,
Shakes to my single state of man, that function
Is smother'd in surmise; and nothing is.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

2. It is sometimes expressed by is.

There's some among you have beheld me fight ing. Shakespeare.

ISAGOICAL.* adj. [Gr. isagōgikos, isē, into, and agōgē, to lead.] Introductory; belonging to an introduction.

I will make further relation

Of this isagogical collation. Shelton, Poems, p. 169.

Scaliger was bold to call him Meredos; but he repented of it in his censorious imagination.

Gregory, Posthum. (1650.) p. 247.

ISCHIA. DICK. adj. [ischia, ischia, ischia, ischia, Fr.] In anatomy, an epithet to the crural vein; in pathology, the ischia-adick passion is the gout in the hip, or the sciatia.

ISCHURY. n. s. [ischuria, ischuria and ischuria, urine; ischuria, Fr. ischuria, Latin.] A stoppage of urine, whether by gravel or other cause.

ISCHURETICK. n. s. [ischureticque, French, from ischuria.] Such medicines as force urine when suppressed.

ISM. [is, Saxon.]

1. A termination added to an adjective to express diminution, a small degree, or incipient state of any quality: as, bluish, tending to blue; brightish, somewhat bright.

2. It is likewise sometimes the termination of a gentile or possessive adjective: as, Sweedish; Danish; the Danish territories, or territories of the Danes.

3. It likewise notes participation of the qualities of the substantive to which it is added: as, foolish, foolish; man, manish; rogue, roguish.

ISCLE. n. s. [more properly icicle, from ice; but ice should rather be written ice; is, Saxon.] A pendent shoot of ice.

Do you know this lady?

— The moon of Rome; cluete as the icicle

That's curlied by the frost from purest snow

Hanging on Dian's Temple. Shakespeare.

The frosts and snows lay tender body upon

These are not limbs for icicles to tear. Dryden.

ISINGLASS. n. s. [from ice, or is, and glass; ichthyocolla, Lat.]

Isinglass is a tough, firm, and light substance, of a whitish colour, and in some degree transparent, much resembling glue. The fish from which isinglass is prepared, is one of the cartilaginous kind: it grows to eighteen and twenty feet in length, and greatly resembles the Danube, the Boristhenes, the Volga, and the larger rivers of Europe.

From the intestines of this fish the isinglass is prepared by boiling. Hill, Mat. Med.

The cure of putrefaction requires an increasing diet, as all viscid broths, lardens, ivory, and serous glass.

Flyger.

Some make it clear by reiterated fermentations, and others by addition, as isinglass.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

ISINGLASS Stone. n. s. A fossil which is one of the purest and simplest of the natural bodies. The masses are of a brownish or reddish colour; but when the plates are separated, they are perfectly colourless, and more bright and pellucid than the finest glass. It is found in Moscow, Persia, the island of Cyprus, in the Alps and Apennines, and the mountains of Germany.

Hill, Mat. Med.

ISLAND. n. s. [insula, Latin; isola, Italian; calend, Erse. It is pronounced iland.] A tract of land surrounded by water.

He will carry this island home in his pocket, and give it his son for an apple. — And sowing the kernels of it in the sea, bring forth more islands. Shakespeare, Tempest.

Within a long recess there lies a bay,

An island about it from the rolling sea,

And forms a port. Dryden.

Island of bliss! amid the subject seas.

Thomson.

ISLANDER. n. s. [from island. Pronounced lander.] An inhabitant of a country surrounded by water.

We, as all islanders, are lunares, or the moon's men.

Camden.

Your dinner, and the generous islanders

By you invited, do attend your presence.

Shakespeare.

There are many bitter sayings against islanders in general, representing them as fierce, treacherous, and unobtainable; those who live on the continent have such frequent intercourse, with men of different religions and languages, that they become more kind than those who are the inhabitants of an island. Addison, Freeholder.

A race of rugged mariners are there,

Unpolish'd men, and boisterous on their seas;

The native islanders abuse their care,

And hateful be that breathes a foreign air.

Pope, Odys.

ISLANDY.* n. s. [from island.] Full of, or belonging to, islands. Not now in use. Culgrave, and Sherwood.

ISLE. n. s. [isle, French; insula, Latin. Pronounced ile.]

1. An island; a country surrounded by water.

The instalment of this noble duke

In the next royal of this famous isle.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

The dreadful fight

Between a nation and two whales I write:

Sea-islands with gore I sing, islands no tale,

And how these monsters did disarm an isle.

Waller.

2. [Written, I think, corruptly for aile, from aile, French, from ala, Latin, the aile being probably at first only a wing or side walk. It may come likewise from alée, French, a walk.] A long walk in a church, or public building.

O'er the twilight groves and dusky caves,
Long sounding stile and intermingled graves,
Black Melancholy isles.

Pope.

ISLET.* n. s. [islette, French, from isle; so the old Fr. insullette, from insula] A little island.

They agreed to convey themselves and their substance into the uttermost bow of the Adriatic gulf, and there possessed certain desolate islets, by tradition, about seventy in number.

Wotton, Rem. p. 251.

ISOLATED.* adj. [isolé, French. At first a term of architecture; for standing by itself. "The affected, frenchified, and unnecessary word isolated is not English, and we trust never will be." British Critic, Oct. 1800. The writer of the preceding remark had forgotten, or knew not, that the word had been then in use nearly half a century. Lord Chesterfield somewhere uses it. It will be sufficient, in proof of my assertion, to cite bishop Warburton; but I fully agree with the writer in considering it as a most affected word.] Detached; separate.

Short, isolated sentences were the mode in which ancient writers delighted to convey its precepts for the regulation of human conduct.

Warburton, Doctrine of Grace, Pref.

ISOCHRONAL.† adj. [isochronē, Gr. iso, equal, and chronos, time, Gr.] Having equal times.

The isochronal velocities describing the particles of MN. Ph. Berkeley, Analyst, § 41.

ISOPERIMETRICAL. adj. [isōpērē, isō, equal, and pērē, time, Gr.] Having equal times. In geometry, isoperimetrical figures are such as have equal perimeters or circumferences, of which the circle is the greatest. Harris.

ISOCELES. n. s. [isocelē, Fr. or equiangular triangle.] That which hath only two sides equal. Harris.

ISSUABLE.† adj. [issuē, in law.] So as to bring to issue, or decision.

If a prisoner shall stand as contumacious in contempt, and shall not put in an issuable plea, guilty or not guilty of the charge given against him, whereby he may come to a fair trial; that, as by an implicit confession, may be taken "pro confesso."

Nor, of the Trial of C. Ch. I. Jan. 25, 1618, p. 4.

Hilary and Trinity terms, from the making up of the issues thereto, are usually called issuable terms. Blackstone.

ISSUE. n. s. [issue, French.]

1. The act of passing out.

2. Exit; egress; or passage out.

Unto the Lord belong the issues from death.

Ps. lxxvii. 30.

Let us examine what bodies touch a movable whilst in motion, as the only means to find an issue out of this difficulty. Dugby on Bodies.

We might have easily prevented those great returns of money to justice; and if it be true the French are so impoverished, in what condition must they have been if that issue of wealth had been stopped? Singh.

3. Event; consequence.

Spirits are not finely touch'd,

But to fire issues. Shakespeare, Measure for Measure.

If I were ever fearful

To do a thing, where I the issue doubted,

Whereof the execution did cry out

Against the non-performance, 'twas a fear

Which oft infects the wisest. Shakespeare, Wind. Tole.

But let the issue correspondent prove

To good beginnings of each enterprise. Falstaff.

If things were cast upon this issue, that God would never prevent sin till man deserved it, the best would sin, and sin for ever. South.

The wisest sayings and sentences will be found the issues of chance, and nothing else but so many lucky hits of a roving fancy. South.

Our present condition is better for us to the issue, than that uninterrupted health and security that the Altheist desires. Hewitt.

4. Termination; conclusion.

He hath preserved Argulus alive, under presence of having him publicly executed after these wars, of which they hope for a soon and prosperous issue. Sidney.

What issue of my love remains for me!

How wild a passion works within my breast!

With what prodigious flames am I possess'd!

Dryden.

Hotter, at a loss to bring difficult matters to an issue, loses his hero asleep, and this solves the difficulty. Brown.

5. Sequel deduced from premises.

I am to pray you not to strain my speech

To greater issues, nor to larger reach,

Than to suspicion. Shakespeare, Othello.

6. A fontanel; a vent made in a muscle for the discharge of humours.

This tumour in his left arm was caused by strict binding of his issue. Wicman.

7. Evacuation.

A woman was diseased with an issue of blood. St. Matt. ix. 30.

8. Progeny; offspring.

Of nation miserable! By chance the truest issue of thy throne,

By his own jurisdiction stands accus'd.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Nor where Abassia kings their issue guard,

Mount Amara, though this by some suppos'd

This parallel, under the Æthiopi line

By Nilus' head. Milton, P. L.

This peaceful prince, as Heaven decreed,

Was bless'd with no male issue to succeed.

Dryden, Æn.

The frequent productions of monsters, in all the species of animals, and strange issues of human birth, carry with them difficulties, not possible to consist with this hypothesis. Locke.

9. [In law.] Issue hath divers applications in the common law: sometimes used for the children begotten between a man and his wife; sometimes for profits growing from an amercement, fine, or experiences of suit; sometime for profits of lands or tenements; sometime for that point of matter depending in suit, whereupon the parties join and put their cause to the trial of the jury.

Issue is either general or special: general issue seemeth to be that whereby it is referred to the jury to bring in their verdict, whether the defendant have done any such thing as the plaintiff layeth to his charge. The special issue then must be that, where special matter being alleged by the defendant for his defence, both the parties join thereupon and so grow rather to a demurrer, if it be questio juris, or to trial by the jury,

if it be questio facti. Comell.

To ISSUE. v. n. [from the noun; issere,

Fr. issire, Italian.]

1. To come out; to pass out of any place.

Waters issued out under the threshold of the house. Ezek. xlv. 1.

From the uttermost end of the head branches

there issueth out a gummy juice. Rodriguez, Hist.

Waters issu'd from a cave. Milton, P. L.

Ere Pallus issu'd from the thunderer's head,

Dulcinea o'er all possess'd her ancient right. Pope.

2. To make an eruption; to break out.

Three of master Ford's brothers watch the door with pistols, that none should issue out, otherwise you might slip away. Shakespeare.

To see that none these issue forth a spy.

Milton, P. L.

Haste, arm your Ardennes, issue to the plain;

With faith to friend, assault the Trojan train.

Dryden.

At length there issu'd, from the grove behind,

A fair assembly of the female kind. Dryden.

A buzzing noise of bees his ears alarms;

Straight issue through the sides assembling swarms. Dryden.

Full for the port the Ithacians stand,

And furl their sails, and issue on the land.

Pope, Odyssey.

3. To proceed as an offspring.

Of thy sons that shall issue from thee, which thou shalt beget, shall they take away.

2 Kings, ix. 18.

4. To be produced by any fund.

These salaries issued out of the offerings made to the altar, and were payable to the priesthood.

Agdife, Pavegen.

5. To run out in lines.

Pipes, made with a belly towards the lower end,

and then issuing into a straight conical again.

Becon.

To ISSUE. v. a.

1. To send out; to send forth.

A weak degree of heat is not able either to digest the parts or to issue the reins.

Becon, Nat. Hist.

The commissioners should issue money out to no other use. Temple.

2. To send out judicially or authoritatively. This is the more frequent sense. It is commonly followed by a participle, out or forth.

If the council issued out any order against them,

or if the king sent a proclamation for their repair to their houses, some nobleman published a pro-testation. Clarendon.

Deep in a rocky cave he makes abode,

A mansion place for a mourning god:

Here he gives audience, issuing out decrees

To rulers, his dependent deities. Dryden.

In vain the master issues out commands,

In vain the trembling sailors ply their hands;

The tempest unforeseen prevents their care. Dryden.

They constantly wad in court to make a due return of what they have done, and to receive such other commands as the judge shall issue forth. Agdife, Pavegen.

ISSUED.† part. adj. [from issue.] Descended.

His only heir

And princess: so worse issued. Shaks. Temp.

ISSUELESS. adj. [from issue.] Having no offspring; wanting descendants.

Carew, by virtue of this entail, succeeded to Hugh's portion, as dying issueless. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

I have done six

For which the Heaven, taking angry note,

Have left me issueless. Shakespeare, Wind. Tole.

ISSUING.† n. s. [from issue.] The act of passing or going out.

By some others affected, and interpreted, as issuings forth, or sallies of soul.

Willecke, Mann. of the Engl. p. 360.

ISTHMUS. n. s. [isthmus, Lat.] A neck of land joining the peninsula to the continent.

There is a castle strongly seated on a high rock, which joyneth by an isthmus to the land, and is impreguably fortified. Sandy, Travels.

The Assyrian empire stretcheth northward to that isthmus between the Euxine and the Caspian seas. Brevinsword on Languages.

O life, thou nothing's younger brother!

Thou weak built isthmus, that do'st proudly rise

Up betwixt two eternities,

Yet can'st not wave nor wind sustain;

But broken and o'erwhelm'd the ocean meets again. Colop.

Our church of England stands as Corinth between two seas, and there are some busy in cutting the isthmus, to let in both at once upon it.

Sitting fleet.

Cleanness thinking it more advisable to fortify, not the isthmus, but the mountains, put his design

in execution. Creek.

Plac'd on this isthmus of a middle state,

A being darkly wise, and rudely great. Pope.

IT.† pronoun. [het, hit, Saxon; hit, Danish; het, Dutch; hit, Iceland; ita, Gothick. It is supposed by Mr.

H. Tooke to be the past participle of the Goth. haitan, Sax. hætan, to name, and so equivalent to the said. But this etymon is doubted by Dr. Jamieson, on this solid ground, "that the analogy is lost, as to the supposed participle, when the participle are compared. For it is hit, hȳr, in Sax. is in the M. Goth. ita."] Dr. Jamieson.

1. The neutral demonstrative. Used in speaking of things. For it, our ancestors used he, as the neutral pronoun; and for its they used his. Thus in the Accidence, a noun adjective is that which cannot stand by himself; but requireth another word to be joined with him to shew his signification.

Nothing can give that to another which it hath not itself. Sp. Bramhall against Hobbes.

Will our great anger learn to stoop so low? Conley.

Tell me, O tell, what kind of thing it is, Thou who master art of it. Cowley.

His son, it may be, dreads no harm; But kindly wails his father's coming home.

The time will come, it will, when you shall know Platman.

The rage of love. Dryden.

How can I speak? or how, sir, can you hear? Imagine that which you would most desire; And that which I would speak, is it or more? Dryden.

A mind so furnished, what reason has it to acquiesce in its conclusion? Lectio.

The glory which encompassed them covered the place, and darted its rays with so much strength, that the whole fabric began to melt. Adisson, Freochlorer.

If we find a greater good in the present constitution, than would have accrued either from the total privation of it, or from other frames and structures, we may then reasonably conclude, that the present constitution proceeded from the intelligent and good being, that formed it that particular way out of choice. Bentley.

2. It is used absolutely for the state of a person or affair.

How is it with our general? Even so.

As with a man by his own aims impoison'd, And with his charity slain. Shakespeare, Coriol.

3. It is used for the thing; the matter; the affair.

It's come to pass, That tractable obedience is a slave

To that incensed will. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII. The design, it seems, is to avoid the dreadful impuption of pleasure. Swift.

4. It is sometimes expressed by 't.

He rallied, and again fell to 't; For catching foe by never foot, He lifted with such might and strength, As would have bur'd him thrice his length. Hudibras.

5. It is used ludicrously after neutral verbs, to give an emphasis. Mr. Malone notices, with me, a very early example of this usage in the Comedy of Fair Em, written about 1590, which one is led to suppose had caught the eye of Pope. See the last of the examples in the present section.

Let mistress Nice go seint it, where she list, And coyly quaint it with dissembling face. Fair Em.

If Abraham brought all with him, it is not probable that he meant to walk it back again for his pleasure. Raleigh.

The Lacedemonians, at the straits of Thermopylae, when their arms failed them, fought it out with their nails and teeth. Dryden.

I have often seen people lavish it profusely in tricking up their children, and yet starve their minds. Lectio.

The mole courses it not on the ground, like the rat or mouse, but lives under the earth. Adisson, Spect.

Whether the charmer sinner it, or wain it, It folly grows romantic. I must paint it. Pope.

6. Sometimes applied familiarly, ludicrously, or mildly to persons.

Let us after him, Whose care is gone before to bid us welcome: It is a peerless kinsman. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Do, child, go to it grandam, child; Give grandam kingdom, and its grandam will Give up him. Shakespeare, St. John.

7. It is sometimes used of the first or second person, sometimes of more. This mode of speech, though used by good authors, and supported by the il y a of the French, has yet an appearance of barbarism.

Who was't came by? — 'Tis two or three, my lord, that bring you word. Macduff is fled to England. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

City, 'Tis that made thy widows. Shakespeare, Coriol.

'Tis these that early taint the female soul. Pope.

- ITALIAN.* n. s.

1. A native of Italy.

As much is more apt to make proselytes than melancholy, it is observed that the Italians have many of them for these late years given very far into the modes and freedoms of the French. Adisson, Remarks on Italy.

2. The Italian language.

Speak Italian, right or wrong, to every body; and if you do but laugh at yourself first for your bad Italian, nobody else will laugh at you for it. Ld. Chesterfield.

- ITAL'IAN.* adj. Relating to the manners, customs, language, or persons of Italy.

The Italian proverb says of the Genoese, that they have a sea without fish, land without trees, and men without faith. Adisson on Italy.

- TO ITAL'IANATE.* v. a. [from Italian.]

To make Italian; to render conformable to Italian custom or fashion.

Another chops in with English italicized, and applies the Italian phrase to our English speaking. Wilmot, Art of Rhetorick, (1558), B. 5.

Our Englishmen italicized have more in reverence the Triumphs of Petrarche than the Genesis of Moyse. Archam, Schoolmaster, (1589).

Our italicized munitbanks seek to salve it. Denn King, Sermon, 5. Nov. 1608, p. 31.

- TO ITAL'IANIZE.* v. n. [Italianizing, Fr.]

To speak Italian; to play the Italian.

Colgrave, and Sherwood.

- TO ITAL'ICISE.* v. a. [from Italic.]

To distinguish a word by printing it in the Italic character. See ITALICK.

In p. 17. of his pamphlet the doctor has printed, but not italicized, another inaccuracy.

Dr. Parr on Dr. Combe's Statement, p. 78.

- ITAL'ICK.* adj. Denoting a type first used by Italian printers, and now usually employed to distinguish a particular word or sentence; as each word, illustrated in the examples given in this Dictionary, is printed. It is common also to say, substantively, the passage is printed in Italicks.

ITCH. n. s. [gitch, Saxona.]

1. A cutaneous disease, extremely contagious, which overspreads the body with small pustules filled with a thin serum, and raised as microscopes have discovered by a small animal. It is cured by sulphur.

Lord and Liberty Creep in the minds and narrows of our youths, That 'gainst the stream of virtue they may strive, And drown themselves in riot, itch, blains. Shakespeare, Timon.

The Lord will smite thee with the scab and with the itch, whereof thou canst not be healed. Deut. xlvii. 27.

As if divinity had catch'd The itch, on purpose, to be scratch'd. Hudibras.

2. The sensation of uneasiness in the skin, which is eased by rubbing.

3. A constant teasing desire.

A certain itch of meddling with other people's matters, puts us upon shifting. L'Entrance.

He had still pedgure in his head, and an itch of being thought a divine king. Dryden.

From servants' company a child is to be kept, not by prohibitions, for that will but give him an itch after it, but by other ways. Lectio.

At half mankind when generous Manly naves, All know 'tis virtue; for he thinks them knaves: When universal human Umbrs pass, All see 'tis vice, and itch of vulgar praise. Pope.

TO ITCH. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To feel that uneasiness in the skin which is removed by rubbing.

A troublesome itching of the part was occasioned by want of transpiration. Wilmot, Surgery.

My right eye itches; some good luck is near; Perhaps my Amartylls may appear. Dryden.

2. To long; to have continual desire.

This sense appears in the following examples, though some of them are equivocal.

Master Shallow, you have yourself been a great fighter, though now a man of peace. — Mr. Page, though now I be old, and of peace, if I see a sword out, my finger itches to make one. Shakespeare.

Camiut, you yourself Are much condemn'd to have an itching palm, To sell and mart your offices for gold. Shakespeare, Jul. Cas.

The itching cure, being an epidemic disease, give fair opportunity to every mountebank. Decoy of Ch. Forty.

All such have still an itching to deride, And find fault to be upon the laughing side. Pope.

ITCH'Y. adj. [from itch.]

1. Infected with the itch.

This man, that is alone a king in his desire, By no proud ignorant lord is barely overrid'd, Nor his false praise affects, who, grossly being given claw'd, Stands like an itchy mayle. Dryden, Polyd. S. 15.

2. Having a constant teasing desire.

The hypocritical druskard, and knight-scouting thief, The itchy lecturer, and self-tickling poet. Dennis, Poems, p. 218.

ITEM. adv. [Latin.] Also. A word used when any article is added to the former.

ITEM. n. s.

1. A new article.

I could have looked on him without the help of admiration, though the catalogue of his endowments had been tabled by his side, and I to pursue him by stone. Shakespeare.

2. A hint; an innuendo.

If this discourse have not concluded our weakness, I have one item more of wine: if knowledge can be found, I must lose that which I thought I had, that there is none.

To ITERM.* v. a. [from the noun.] To make a memorandum of.

Abg. I have always taken your part before my lady.

Fel. You have so, and I have iterm'd it in my memory.

ITERABLE.* adj. [from To iterate.] Capable of being repeated.

Others may wonder how the curiosity of elder times, having this opportunity of his [Apollo's] answers, omitted natural questions; or how the old magicians discovered no more philosophy; and, if they had the assistance of spirits, could rest content with the bare assertions of things without the knowledge of their causes; whereby they had made their acts iterable by sober hands, and a standing part of philosophy.

See P. Bacon, Miscell. p. 178. Which being as often iterable as there be place of Scripture explicable, or mistakeable by the enthusiasts, these subtractions and additions may also be infinite.

ITERANT.* adj. [iterans, Lat.] Repeating.

Waters being near, make a current echo; but being further off, they make an iterant echo.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To ITERATE. v. a. [itero, Lat.]

1. To repeat; to utter again; to inculcate by frequent mention.

We come to make the psalms especially familiar unto all; this is the very cause why we iterate the psalms oftener than any other part of Scripture besides; the cause wherefore we insure the people together with their minister, and not the minister alone to read them, as other parts of Scripture be doth.

Hooker.

In the first ages God gave laws unto our fathers, and their memories served instead of books; whereas the imperfections being known to God, he relieved the same by often putting them in mind: in which respect we see how many times one thing hath been iterated into the best and wisest.

Hooker.

The king, to keep a decency towards the French king, sent new solemn ambassadors to intimate unto him the decree of his estate, and to iterate his motion that the French would desist from hostility.

Bacon, Hist. XVII.

There be two kinds of reflections of sounds: the one at distance, which is the echo, wherein the original is heard distinctly, and the reflection also distinctly: the other in concurrence, when the sound returns immediately upon the original, and so iterates it, not but amplifies it.

Bacon.

2. To do over again.

Asbes burnt, and well reverberated by fire, after the salt thereof hath been drawn out by iterated decantations.

Brown.

Adam took no thought, Eating his fill; nor Eve to iterate Her former trespass fear'd; the more to soothe Him with her lov'd society.

Milton, P. L.

ITERATION. n. s. [iteration, Fr.; iteratio, Lat.] Repetition; recital over again.

Truth sh'd with iteration

As true as steel, as plantage to the moon. Shaksp.

— My husband!

— My husband!

— What needs this iteration, woman?

I say, thy husband.

Shakspere, Othello.

Iterations are commonly loss of time; but there is no such gain of time, as to iterate often the case of the question; for it chaseth away many a frivolous speech.

Bacon, Ess.

In all these respects it hath a peculiar property to engage the receiver to persevere in all piety, and is further inspired by the frequent iteration and repetition.

Housman.

ITERATIVE.* adj. [iterativus, French; from iterate.] Repeating; redoubling.

Cotgrave.

ITERANT.* adj. [iterant, Fr.]

He [Edgar] usually rode the circuit as a judge iterant through all his provinces.

Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 5.

2. Wandering; not settled.

It should be my care to sweeten and mellow the voices of iterant tradesmen, as also to accommodate their cries to their respective wares.

Adison, Spect.

ITERARY.* n. s. [itinerare, French; itinerarius, Latin.] A book of travels.

Huloet.

Of what importance Julius Cæsar, Antonine, and the other emperors held these descriptions, in manifest by their very own itineraries yet to be seen.

Gregory, Potham. p. 359.

The clergy are sufficiently reproached, in most itineraries, for the universal poverty one meets with in this plentiful kingdom.

Adison on Italy.

ITERARY.* adj. [itinerare, French; itinerarius, Latin.] Travelling; done on a journey; done during frequent change of place.

He did make a progress from Lincoln to the northern parts, though it were rather an itinerary circuit of justice than a progress.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

Four mouths I allow for itinerary removals.

Hovell, Abstract. For. Trans. p. 174.

This itinerary preaching.

Milton. Means to remove Hivings out of the Church.

To ITERATE.* v. n. [itineror, itineratus, Lat.] To journey.

Cockram.

ITER'LF. pronoun. [it and self.] The neutral reciprocal pronoun applied to things.

Who then shall blame

His poster'd self to recoil and start,

When all that is within him does condemn

Itself for being there? Shakspere, Macbeth.

Borrowing of foreigners, in itself, makes not the kingdom rich or poor.

Locke.

JUB.* n. s. [our old word for jug, apparently.] A bottle; a vessel. Not now in use.

Cockram, and Bullock.

With him he brought a jug of Malvoe,

And eke another full of fine Verage.

Chaucer, Shipm. Tale.

JUBILANT.* adj. [jubilans, Lat.] Uttering songs of triumph.

The planets list'ning stood,

While the bright pomp ascended jubilant.

Spenser, P. L.

The tone of sorrow is mournful and plaintive; the notes of joy, exulting and jubilant.

Dr. Horne, Occas. Sermon. p. 268.

JUBILATION.* n. s. [jubilatio, French; jubilatio, Lat.] The act of declaring triumph.

Sounding the trumpet of a thankful jubilatio.

Dr. Hall, Works. ii. 257.

Well therefore may we, the whole world, in consideration of our being under so good a government, be excited to joy and jubilatio with the Psalmist.

Brown, ii. 11.

Praise and thanksgiving, jubilations, and balladings, — are yet as pleasing a work to God as any other.

South, Sermon. iii. 425.

JUBILEE. n. s. [jubilæ, Fr.; jubilum, from jubilo, low Lat.] A publick festivity; a time of rejoicing; a season of joy.

Angels uttering joy, heaven rung
With jubiles, and loud harmonies fill'd
The eternal regions.

Milton, P. L.

Joy was their masculine and a severe thing,
The recreation of the judgement, or rejoicing, the jubile of reason.

South.

The town was all a jubilæ of feasts.

Dryden.

JUCUNDITY. n. s. [jucunditas, jucundus, Lat.] Pleasantness; agreeableness.

The new, unusual, or unexpected jucundities, which present themselves — will have activity enough to excite the earliest soul, and raise a smile from the most composed temper.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

JUDICIAL.* adj. [from Judah.] Jewish; belonging to Jews.

Pride of every kind, and in every shape, exalting itself whether in judicial pharisaism, or gentile philosophy, against the knowledge of God, shall be made low, and subdu'd to the obedience of Christ.

By. Horne, Convid. on St. John the Bapt. § 4.

Of the Pharisees on Isaiah nothing very favourable can be said. Sublime and solemn praise gains little by a change to blank verse; and the paraphrast has devalued his original, by admitting images not Asiatic, at least not Judaical.

Johnson, Life of Fenton.

JUDICALLY.* adv. [judicialiter.] After the Jewish manner.

Celebrating their Exodus judicially.

Milton, Of Prelat. Episcopacy.

JU'DAISM.* n. s. [from Judah.] The religion of the Jews.

Nicholas Lira — was born at Lira in Brabant, from whence he had his name, and where he was converted from Judaism to Christianity.

By. Cassin, Canon of Script. p. 176.

For ought I see, though the Monarchical part of Judaism be abolished amongst Christians, the Philosophical part of it never will.

South, Sermon. ii. 391.

The alcoran is but a system of the old Arabianism, ill digested and worse put together, with a mixture of some Heathenism and Judaism.

Leahy, Truth of Christianity Demonstr.

JUDAS Tree. n. s. [siliquastrum, Latin.] A plant.

Judas tree yields a fine purplish, bright, red blossom in the Spring, and is increased by layers.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

To JU'DAIZE. v. n. [judaizer, Fr.; judaizo, low Lat.] To conform to the manner of the Jews.

Paul judaiz'd with Jews, was all to all.

Scotsay.

JU'DAIZER.* n. s. [from To judaize.] One who conforms to the manners or rites of the Jews.

The judaizers maintained their opinions in a direct opposition to the authority that was lodged with the apostles.

Dr. Burnet, Hist. Sermon. (1703), p. 34.

JU'DDOCK.* n. s. A small snipe, so called in some places; what by others is termed the jack snipe.

JUDGE. n. s. [juge, Fr.; judex, Lat.]

1. One who is invested with authority to determine any cause or question, real or personal.

Shall not the judge of all the earth do right?

Gen. xviii. 25.

A father of the fatherless, and a judge of the widows is God in his holy habitation.

Ps. x. 18.

Thou art judge.

Of all things made, and judgest only right.

Milton, P. L.

2. One who presides in a court of judicature.

My lord Bassanio gave his ring away
Unto the judge that bogg'd it.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.
A single voice; and that not past me, but
By learned approbation of the judges.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.
How darest thou pride,
As in a listed field, to fight thy cause,
Unask'd the royal grant; nor marshal by,
As knightly rite require, nor judge to try. Dryden.

It is not sufficient to initiate nature in every circumstance dully; it becomes a painter to take what is most beautiful, as being the sovereign guide of his own art. Dryden.

3. One who has skill sufficient to decide upon the merit of any thing.

One court there is in which he who knows the secrets of every heart will sit, judge himself. Shelton.

A perfect judge will read each piece of wit,
With the same spirit that its author writ. Pope.

To JUDGE, v. n. [judge, Fr.; judico, Lat.]

1. To pass sentence.

My wrong be upon thee; — the lord judge between thee and me. Gre. xvi. 5.

Ye judge not for man, but for the Lord, who is with you in the judgment. 2 Chron. xix. 6.

2. To form or give an opinion.

Bestrew me, but I lose her heartily;
For she is wise, if I can judge aright. Shakespeare.

Authors to themselves,
Both what they judge and what they choose. Milton, P. L.

If I did not know the originals, I should never be able to judge, by the copies, which was Virgil, and which Ovid. Dryden.

Whether it be a divine revelation or no, reason must judge, which can never permit the mind to reject a greater evidence, or embrace what is less evident. Locke.

He proceeds in his inquiry into sciences, resolved to judge of them freely. Locke.

3. To discern; to distinguish; to consider accurately.

How dost God know? Can he judge through the dark cloud? Jeb. xxi. 13.

Judge in yourselves: is it comely a woman pray unto God uncovered? 1 Cor. xi. 13.

How properly the tories may be called the whole body of the British nation, I leave to any one's judging. Addison.

To JUDGE, v. a.

1. To pass sentence upon; to examine authoritatively; to determine finally.

Chace shall judge the strife. Milton, P. L.

Then thou, whom form of laws
Coudenn'd to die, when traitors judge'd thy cause. Dryden.

2. To pass severe censure; to doom severely. This is a sense seldom found but in the Scriptures.

He shall judge among the heathen; he shall fill the places with the dead bodies. Ps. xxi. 5.

Judge not, that ye be not judged. St. Mat. vii. 1.

Let no man judge you in meat or drink. Col. ii. 16.

JUDGEMENT, n. s. [judgement, French; "Sometimes it [the letter e] has no other effect than that of softening a preceding g as lodje, judge, JUDGEMENT." Lowth, English Grammar.]

1. The power of discerning the relations between one term or one proposition and another.

O judgement! thou art dead to bristling beasts,
And men have lost their reason. Shaks. Jud. Cens.
The faculty, which God has given man to supply the want of certain knowledge, is judgement, whereby the mind takes any proposition to be true or false, without perceiving a demonstrative evidence in the proofs.

Judgment is that whereby we join ideas together by affirmation or negation; so, this tree is high. Watts.

2. Doom; the right or power of passing judgement.

If my suspect be false, forgive me, God;
For judgement only doth belong to thee. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

3. The act of exercising judicature; judicatory.

They gave judgement upon him. 2 Kings, xiv. 6.

When thou, O Lord, shalt stand disclosed
In majesty severe,
And sit in judgement on my soul,
O how shall I appear? Addison, Spect.

4. Determination; decision.

Where distinctions or identities are purely material, the judgement is made by the imagination, otherwise by the understanding. Glanville, Scyria.
We shall make a certain judgement what kind of dissolution that earth was capable of. Burnet, Theory.

Reason ought to accompany the exercise of our senses, whenever we would form a just judgement of things proposed to our inquiry. Watts.

5. The quality of distinguishing propriety and impropriety; criticism.

Judgement, a cool and slow faculty, attends not a man; and the rupture of poetical composition. Dennis.

'Tis with our judgements as our watches, none Go just alike; yet each believes his own. Pope.

6. Opinion; notion.

I see men's judgements are
A parcel of their fortunes, and things outward
Draw the inward quality after them,
To suffer all alike. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

When she did think my master lord's her
She, in my judgement, was as fair as you. Shaks.

7. Sentence against a criminal.

When he was brought again to the bar, to hear His knell rung out, his judgement, he was stir'd
With agony. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

The chief priests informed me, desiring to have judgement against him. Acts, xxi. 15.

On Adam last this judgement be pronounced.
Milton, P. L.

8. Condemnation. This is a theological use.

The judgement was by one to condemnation; but the free gift is of many offences unto justification. Rom. v. 16.

The precepts, promise, and threatenings of the Gospel will rise up in judgement against us, and the articles of our faith will be so many articles of accusation. Tillotson.

9. Punishment inflicted by Providence, with reference to some particular crime.

This judgement of the heavens that makes us tremble, Touches us not with pity. Shakespeare, C. Lear.

We cannot be guilty of greater uncharitableness, than to interpret afflictions as punishments and judgements; it aggravates the evil to him who suffers, when he looks upon himself as the mark of divine vengeance. Addison, Spect.

10. Distribution of justice.

The Jews made insurrection against Paul, and brought him to the judgement seat. Acts, xviii. 12.

Mingles true judgement, and bestraws the state
Of that integrity which should become it. Shakespeare, Coriol.

In judgements between rich and poor, consider not what the poor man needs, but what his own.

A hold and wise petitioner goes strait to the throne and judgement seat of the monarch. Arbuthnot and Pope.

11. Judiciary law; statute.

If ye hearken to these judgments, and keep and do them, the Lord thy God shall keep unto thee the covenant. Deut. vii. 12.

12. The last doom.

The dreadful judgement day
So dreadful will not be as was his sight. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

JUDGMENT, n. s. [from judge.] One who forms judgement; or passes sentence.

A judge of thoughts and intents of the heart. Bible, on the Revel. P. 1. (1550), B. 5. b.

The vulgar threatened to be their oppressors, and judges of their judges. King Charles.

They who guide themselves merely by what appears, are ill judges of what they have not well examined. Digby.

JUDGESHIP, n. s. [from judge.] Office or dignity of a judge.

To pass over the pope's universal pastorship, and judgship in controversy. Barnes on the Pope's Supremacy.

JUDICATIVE, adj. [judico, Lat.] Having power to judge.

The former is but an act of the judicative faculty. Hummond, Works, i. 492.

They address as well to their reasons, make solemn appeals to their judicative faculties. Lively, Oracle, &c. p. 76.

JUDICIARY, n. s. [judico, Lat.]

1. Distribution of justice.

No such crime appeared as the lords, the supreme court of judicatory, would judge worthy of death. Clarendon.

2. Court of justice.

Human judicatories give sentence on matters of right and wrong, but inquire not into bounty and beneficence. Atterbury.

JUDICIARY, adj. Distributing justice; judicially pronouncing.

The Son of man is that constantly represented as making the great decorative separation, and the last judiciary distinction between man and man. Peardon on the Creed, Art. 7.

Hence their vain distinctions of druidical shrines, trophies of royal inauguration, triumphal piles, vespulchres, and judicatory tribunals. Warren, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 61.

JUDICATURE, n. s. [judicature, Fr.; judico, Lat.]

1. Power of distributing justice.

The honour of the judges in their judicature is the king's honour. Beacon, Act. to Villiers.

If he should bargain for a place of judicature, let him be rejected with shame. Bacon.

2. Court of justice.

In judicatories to take away the trumpet, the scarlet, the attendance, makes justice naked as well as blind. South.

JUDICIAL, adj. [judicelle, old Fr. La-combe; judicium, Lat.]

Practised in the distribution of publick justice.

What government can be without judicial proceedings? and what judicature without a religious oath? Bentley.

2. Inflicted on as a penalty.

The resistance of those who will cause a judicial harden. South.

JUDICIALLY, adv. [from judicial.] In the forms of legal justice.

It will behave us to think that we see God will looking on, and weighing all our thoughts, words, and actions in the balance of infallible justice, and passing the same judgement which he intends hereafter judiciously to declare. Green.

JUDICIARY, adj. [judiciare, Fr.; judicarius, Lat.] Passing judgement upon any thing.

The consideration of his judiciary astrology.
Hakewell on Providence, p. 161.
 Regular and judiciary power.

Parsons on the Creed, Art. 6.
 Before weight be laid upon judiciary astrology, the influence of constellations ought to be made out.
Dryde.

JUDICIOUS, adj. [judicieux, Fr.] Prudent; wise; skillful in any matter or affair.

For your husband,
 His noble, wise, judicious, and best known
 The fits o' th' season. Shakespeare, Macbeth
 Love hath his seat
 In reason, and is judicious. Milton, P. L.
 To each savour meaning we apply
 And palate call judicious. Milton, P. L.
 We are beholden to judicious writers of all ages
 for those discoveries they have left behind them.
Locke.

JUDICIOUSLY, adv. [from judicious.] Skillfully; wisely; with just determination.
 So bold, yet so judiciously you dare,
 That your least praise is to be regular. Dryden
 Longinus has judiciously preferred the sublime genius that sometimes errs to the middling or indifferent one, which makes few faults, but seldom rises to excellence.
Dryden.

JUDICIOUSNESS, n. s. [from judicious.] State or quality of being judicious.

JUG, n. s. [jugg, Danish.] A large drinking vessel with a gibbous or swelling belly.

You'll rail upon the bottom of the house,
 Because she bought stone jugs and no seal'd quart.
Shakespeare.

He fetch'd 'em drink,
 Fill'd a large jug up to the brim. Swift.

To JUG, v. a. [perhaps from the noun, or from the sound.] To emit, or pour forth a particular sound, as we still say of certain birds.

She [the nightingale] will jug it forth but cheerfully and sweetly too.
Parthenius Socrus, (1633), p. 140.

To JUG, v. a. To call or bring together by a particular sound.

Some have taken, in these times, by a mutual call of one another to jug themselves, like partridges, into small coveys.
Rp. Camden, Itinerary, (1653), p. 392.

To JUGGLE, v. n. [jougler, or jongler, Fr.; joculari, Lat.]

1. To play tricks by slight of hand; to show false appearances of extraordinary performances.

The ancient miracle of Memnon's statue seems to be a juggling of the Ethiopian priests.
Dicly on Bodice.

2. To practice artifice or imposture.

Be these juggling funds no more believ'd,
 That palter with us in a double sense.
Shakespeare, Macbeth.

They ne'er or forewarn themselves, nor liad;
 Diadad'd to stay for friends' consents;
 Nor jugg'd to avoid settlements. Hudibras.

To JUGGLE, v. a. To effect by artifice or trick; to deceive.

It's possible the spells of France should juggle
 Men into such strange mockeries?
Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

There was a worse paid in the straw than in there discovered, that juggled the paper into the king's hand.
Hosier's Life of Alp. Williams, (1695), p. 195.

JUGGLE, n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A trick by legerdemain.

2. An imposture; a deception.

The notion was not the invention of politicians, and a juggle of state to cozen the people into obedience.
Tillotson.

JUGGLER, n. s. [from juggle.]

1. One who practises slight of hand; one who deceives the eye by nimble conveyance.

They say this town is full of cozenage,
 As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye,
 Drag-working sorcerers that change the mind,
 Disguised cheaters, prating mountebanks,
 And many such like liberties of Julius. Shakespeare.
 I saw a juggler that had a pair of cards, and would tell a man what card he thought.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.
 Aristatus was a famous poet, that flourished in the days of Cæsar, and a notable juggler.

Smollett, Travels.
 Fortune-tellers, jugglers, and impostors, do daily delude them.

Brown, Vulg. Err.
 The juggler which another's slight can show,
 But teaches how the world his own may know.

Garth.
 One who is managed by a juggler fancies he has money in hand; but let him grip it never so carefully, upon a word or two it increases or dwindles.

Addison, Miscellaneous.
 What magick makes our money rise,
 When dropt into the southern main;
 Or do these jugglers cheat our eyes? Swift.

2. A cheat; a tricky fellow.

O me, you juggler, oh, you canker blossom,
 You thief of love; what have you done by night,
 And stolen my love's heart from him? Shakespeare.

I sing no harm
 To officer, juggler, or justice of peace. Donne.

JUGGLING, n. s. [from juggle.] Deception; imposture.

All superations being in effect but jugglings.
Blount, Voyage to the Levant, p. 89.

JUGGLINGLY, adv. [from juggle.] In a deceptive manner.

JUGULAR, adj. [jugulum, Lat.] Belonging to the throat.

A gentleman was wounded into the internal jugular, through his neck.
Wiseman, Surgery.

JUICE, n. s. [jus, Fr.; juyt, Dutch. Dr. Johnson.—To this may be added the Icelandic juck, juice; and the Lat. succus; and particularly the Celt. jus. This old English word is sometimes written jus or jute; and is pronounced juice in some parts.]

1. The liquor, sap, or water of plants and fruits.

If I define wine, I must say, wine is a juice not liquid, or wine is a substance; for a juice includes both substance and liquid.
Watts, Logic.
 Of herbs of all the best juice. Gower, Conf. Am.
 Thy baths shall be the juice of July-flowers.
B. Jonson, Fest.

Unnumber'd fruits,
 A friendly juice to cool thine's rage contain.
Thomson.

2. The fluid in animal bodies.

Juice is language is less than blood; for if the words be but becoming and signifying, and the sense genuine, there is juice; but where that wanteth, the language is thin, scarce covering the bone.
B. Jonson, Discoveries.

An animal whose juices are wounded can never be nourished; unground juices can never repair the fluids.
Aristot.

To JUICE, v. a. [from the noun.] To moisten.

Some gallants perchance count all conquests dry meat which are not juiced with blood.
Fuller, Holy War, p. 164.

JU'CELESS, adj. [from juice.] Dry; without moisture; without juice.

My joyous corps shall yield up banish'd breath.
True, Hist. of Rom. and Julius, (1682).

Divine Providence has spread her table every where; not with a juicy green carpet, but with succulent herbage and nourishing grass.

More against Atheism.
 When Boreas' spirit blusters sore,
 Beware th' inclement bear's; now let thy hearth,
 Crackle with juicyest boughs. Philips.

JU'ICINESS, n. s. [from juice.] Plenty of juice; succulence. Sherwood.

JU'ICY, adj. [from juice.] Moist; full of juice; succulent.

Earth being taken out of watery woods, will put forth herbs of a fat and juicy substance.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Each plant and juicyest gourd will pluck.
Milton, P. L.

The musk's surprising worth! that, in its youth,
 Its tender nosegay, loads the spreading boughs
 With large and juicy offspring. Philips.

JUIZE, n. s. [Jow Lat. juisium, a word occurring in old charters; from juic.] Judgement; justice. Obsolete.

See the vengeance of his juize.
Gower, Conf. Am. B. 7.

JU'JUBA, n. s. [zyzphor, Lat.] A plant JU'JUBA, whose flower consists of several leaves, which are placed circularly, and expand in form of a rose. The fruit is like a small plum, but it has little flesh upon the stone. Müller.

Beld, kumel, i. e. civitas vel regio zyzphorum; a city in Africa, so called, as Leo Africanus doth testify, of the abundance of jujubes which do grow there about.

Beland's Arabian Traveller, (1615), p. 90.

With her the jujube tree, a milder plant,
 Which (though offensive thorns she does not want)
 In peace and mirth alone does pleasure make;
 Her flow'r is at fests the genial gardens takes;
 Her wood the vine, that keeps the guests awake.
Tate's Conyey.

To JUKE, v. n. [jucker, Fr. Dr. Johnson.—Auk, Sa. Goth. avium more reclinare. Serenius.]

1. To perch upon any thing, as birds.

2. Juking, in Scotland, denotes still any complaisance by bending of the head.

Two asses travelled; the one laden with oats, the other with money; the money-merchant was so proud of his trust, that he went juking and teasing of his head.
L'Estrange.

JU'LAP, n. s. [a word of Arabic origin; julapum, low Lat.; julep, Fr.]

Julep is an extemporaneous form of medicine, made of simple and compound water sweetened, and serves for a vehicle to other forms not so convenient to take alone. Quincy.

Behold this cordial julep here,
 That flames and dances in his crystal bowls
 With spirits of balm and fragrant syrups mixt.

If any part of the after-birth be left, endeavour the bringing that away; and by good sudorifics and cordials expel the venom, and contemporize the best and acrimony by juleps and emulsions.
Wierman, Surgery.

JU'LIAN, adj. Denoting the old account of the year, so called from Julius Cæsar, and used among us in England till 1752; when the Gregorian was adopted. See GREGORIAN.

The flood came upon the earth anno 1656 of the creation, and 2490 of the Jewish period.

JULUS. n. s. [Julus, Gr.] Among botanists, the ulus denotes those long worm-like tufts or palms, as they are called in willows, which at the beginning of the year grow out, and hang pendular down from hazels, walnut-trees, &c. Miller.

JULY. n. s. [Julius, Lat.; juillet, Fr.] We now usually pronounce the word with the accent on the last syllable; but formerly it was on the first as Dr. Johnson has placed it. The month anciently called quintilis, or the fifth from March, named July in honour of Julius Caesar; the seventh month from January.

Then came hot July boiling like to fire,

July I would have drawn in a jacket of light yellow, eating cherries, with his face and bonom sun-burnt. Poetsom.

JULY-FLOWER. n. s. What is commonly called the gillyflower. See GILLY-FLOWER.

Thy baths shall be the juice of July-flowers, Spirit of roses, and of violets. B. Jonson, Fas.

JUMMART. n. s. [Jumart, Fr.] Mules and jumarts, the one from the mixture of an ass and a mare, the other from the mixture of a bull and a mare, are frequent.

Locke.

To JUMBLE. v. a. [In Chaucer, jombre, from comber, Fr. Skinner.] To mix violently and confusedly together. Persons and humours may be jumbled and disguised; but nature, like quicksilver, will never be killed.

A verbal concordance leads not always to texts of the same meaning; and one may observe, how apt that is to jumble together passages of Scripture, and thereby disturb the true meaning of holy Scripture. Locke.

Writing is but just like dice, And lucky chance make people wise; And jumbled words, if fortune throw them, Shall, well as Dryden, form a poem. Prior.

It is not a firmer foundation for tranquillity, to believe that all things were created, and are ordered for the best, than that the universe is mere bungling and blundering; all ill-fortuned and jumbled together by the unguided agitation and rude shuffles of matter? Bentley.

How tragically and comedy embrace, How fierce and quiet got a jumbled race. Duncanson.

That the universe was formed by a fortuitous concurrence of atoms, I will no more believe, than that the accidental jumbling of the alphabet would fall into a most ingenious treatise of philosophy. Swift.

To JUMBLE. v. n. To be agitated together.

They will all meet and jumble together into a perfect harmony. Swift.

JUMBLE. n. s. [from the verb.] Confused mixture; violent and confused agitation.

- JUNK. n. s. [probably an Indian word.]

1. A small ship of China, Dr. Johnson says; and so the example, which he brings from Bacon, serves to shew; but it is also used for a large ship.

America, which have now but junks and canoes, abounded then in tall ships.

Bacon, New Atlantis.

This storm forcing a Malabar junk, a pirate, in view of us; whom our ordinance could not reach.

St. T. Herbert, Trav. p. 41.

The ship, or junk, (for so it is called), thus usually goes from Surat to Madras of an enormous great burden; some of them, I believe, fourteen or fifteen hundred tons, or more; but these huge vessels are very ill built.

Terry, Voyage to the E. Ind. (1655), p. 167.

2. Pieces of old cable.

- JUNKET. n. s. [properly juncate. See JUNCATE.]

1. A sweetmeat.

You know, there wants no juncats at the feast.

Shakespeare.

2. A stolen entertainment.

- TO JUNKET. v. n. (from the noun.)

- JURAT. v. n. [juratus, Lat. juré, Fr.]

A magistrate in some corporations, Dr. Johnson says; which Cowell tells us is in the nature of an alderman; as the mayor and jurats of Maidstone, &c. So in French, "jurats de Bourdeaux." Cotgrave. Originally, however, this word was applied to any person sworn to a particular purpose, juratus.

Witnesses and jurats, which shall proceed in the trial, do make no lesser oath; but do openly receive the help of God and his saints, and the benefit of his passion, if they say not true, as far forth as they know.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 161. b.

JURATORY. adj. [juratoire, French, jurato, Lat.] Comprising an oath.

A continuacious person may be compelled to give juratory caution de parando juris.

Porteus.

JURIDICAL. adj. [juridicus, Latin, juridicus, Fr.]

1. Acting in the distribution of justice.

All discipline is not legal, that is to say juridical, but some is personal, some economical, and some ecclesiastical.

Milton, Coleridge.

2. Used in courts of justice.

According to a juridical account and legal signification, time within memory, by the statute of Westminster, was settled in the beginning of the reign of king Richard the First.

Hale, Com. Law of England.

This is not to be measured by the principles of jurists. Black.

JUROR. n. s. [juro, Lat.] One that serves on the jury.

Were the jurors picked out of choice men, the evidence will be so deceitful as the verdict.

Spranger on Ireland.
You shall find your lordship judge and juror.
I am so merciful, I see your end,
'Tis my undoing. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.
I sing no harm, good sooth! to any wight,
Juror, or judge.
About noon the jurors went together, and because they could not agree, they were shut in.
Heyward.

JURY. n. s. [jurata, Lat. jurée, Fr.]

Jury, a company of men, as twenty-four or twelve, sworn to deliver a truth upon such evidence as shall be delivered them touching the matter in question. There be three manners of trials in England: one by parliament, another by battle, and the third by assize or jury. The trial by assize, by the action civil or criminal, publick or private, personal or real, is referred for the fact to a jury, and as they find it, so passeth the judgement. This jury is used not only in circuits of justices errant, but also in other courts, and matters of office, as if the escheator make inquisition in any thing touching his office, he doth it by a jury of inquest: if the coroner inquire how a subject found dead came to his end, he useth an inquest: the justices of peace in their quarter-sessions, the sheriff in his county and turn, the bailiff of a hundred, the steward of a court-leet or court-baron, if they inquire of any offence, or decide any cause between party and party, they do it by the same manner: so that where it is said, that all things be triable by parliament, battle, or assize; assize, in this place, is taken for a jury or inquest, impanelled upon any cause in a court where this kind of trial is used. This jury, though it appertain to most courts of the common law, yet it is most notorious in the half-year courts of the justices errant, commonly called the great assize, and in them it is most ordinarily called a jury, and that in civil causes: whereas in other courts it is often termed an inquest. In the general assize, there are usually many juries, because there be store of causes, both civil and criminal, commonly to be tried, whereof one is called the grand jury, and the rest petit juries. The grand jury consists ordinarily of twenty-four grave and substantial gentlemen, or some of them yeomen, chosen indifferently out of the whole shire by the sheriff, to consider of all bills of indictment preferred to the court; which they do either approve by writing upon them these words, billa vera, or disallow by writing ignoramus. Such as they do approve, if they touch life and death, are farther referred to another jury to be considered of, because the case is of such importance; but others of lighter moment are, upon their allowance, without more work, fined by the bench, except the party traverse the indictment, or challenge it for insufficiency, or remove the cause to a higher court by certiorari; in which two former cases it is referred to another jury, and in the latter transmitted to the higher. Those that pass upon civil causes real, are all, or so many as can conveniently be had, of the same hundred where the land or tenement in question doth lie, and four at the least; and they, upon due examination, bring in their verdict either for the demandant or tenant: according unto which, judgement passeth afterward in the court where the cause first began; and the reason hereof is, because these justices of assize are, in this case, for the ease of the countries only to take the verdict of the jury by the virtue of the writ called nisi prius, and so return it to the court where the cause is depending. Covent.

The jury, passing on the prisoner's life.
May in the sworn twelve have a thief or two Guiltier than him they try. Shaksp. Meas. for Meas.
How innocent I was,
His noble jury and foul cause can witness.

Shakespeare.
Clodius was acquitted by a corrupt jury, that had palpably taken shares of money before they gave up their verdict. Black.

JURYMEN. n. s. [jury and man.] One who is impanelled on a jury.

The hungry judges soon the sentence sign,
And wretches hang that jurymen may dine. Pope.
No jury was known, upon or off the bench,
To use the least insinuation, that might affect The interests of any one single jurymen, much less of a whole jury. Swift.

JURYMEN. n. s. It seems to be properly durée made, mét de durée, a maist made to last for the present occasion. So the seamen call whatever they set up in the room of a maist lost in a fight, or by a storm; being some great yard which they put down into the step of that lost maist, fastening it into the partners, and fitting to it the mizen or some lesser yard with sails and ropes, and with it make a shift to sail. Harri.

It has been also thought that the Norman Fr. jur, jura, a day, might give rise to this word; implying a temporary maist, a maist for a day.

JUST. adj. [juste, Fr. justus, Lat.] The past participle of jubere, to command, as Mr. H. Tooke thus speciously contends. "A right and just action is such as one as is ordered and commanded. A just man is such as he is commanded to be, qui leges juraque servat, who observes and obeys the things laid down and commanded." Divers. of Farley, vol. ii. p. 9. — In reply to the objection, that, according to this doctrine, every thing that is ordered and commanded is right and just, Mr. Tooke not only admits the consequence, but considers it as an identical proposition: It is only affirming, he observes, that what is ordered and commanded is — ordered and commanded! — Dugald Stewart's Philosoph. Essays, p. 165. This however requires an admission, that the nature of the thing itself must depend upon its etymology, or that the obligation of subjection to the commanding or governing power must be conceded. From this dilemma Mr. Tooke endeavours to extricate himself by a distinction "between what is ordered by human authority, and what the laws of our nature teach us to consider as ordered by God." And thus, in the choice of obedience, a man must occasionally disregard what is ordered by one authority. In short, "in the present instance, Mr. Tooke has availed himself of a philological hypothesis to decide, in a few sentences, and, in my opinion, to decide very erroneously, one of the most important questions connected with the theory of morals." Dugald Stewart, p. 166.]

1. Upright; incorrupt; equitable in the distribution of justice.

Take it, while yet 'tis praise, before my rage
Unawfully just, break loose on this bad age. Dryden.
Men are commonly so just to virtue and goodness, as to praise it in others, even when they do not practise it themselves. Tillotson.

2. Honest; without crime in dealing with others.

Just balances, just weights, and a just scale.
Lat. xix.

3. I know not whether just of has any other authority.

Just of thy word, in every thought sincere,
Who knew so wish but what the world might bear. Pope.

4. Exact; proper; accurate.

Boileau's numbers are excellent, his expressions noble, his thoughts just, his language pure, and his sense close. Dryden.

Embellish'd with good morals and just thought. Greenhill.

Just precepts thus from great examples giv'd,
She drew from them what they deriv'd from. Pope.

Just to the tale, as present at the fray,
Or taught the labours of the dreadful way. Pope.

Once on a time La Mancha's knight, they say,
A certain back encountering on the way,
Discours'd in terms so just, with looks so sage,
As e'er could Dennis of the laws of the stage. Pope.

Though the syllogism be irregular, yet the inferences are just and true. Walsh, Logick.

5. Virtuous; innocent; pure.

How should man be just, with God? Job, ix. 2.
A just man falleth seven times and riseth.
Pov. xiv. 16.
He shall be recompensed at the resurrection of the just. St. Luke, xiv. 14.

- The just the unjust to serve. Milton, P. L.
 6. True; not forged.
 Crimes were laid to his charge too many, the least whereof being just, had bereaved him of estimation and credit. Hooker.
 7. Grounded on principles of justice; rightful.
 Me though just right
 Did first create your leader. Milton, P. L.
 8. Equally retributed.
 He received a just recompence of reward.
 Whose damnation is just. Rom. li. 2.
 As Herod kings, spread water o'er thy fields,
 And a most just and glad increase it yields. Dennis.
 9. Complete without superfluity or defect.
 He was a comely personage, a little above just stature, well and strait limbed, but slender. Bacon, Hen. VII.
 10. Regular; orderly.
 When all
 The war shall stand ranged in its just array,
 And dreadful pomp, then will I think on thee. Addison.
 11. Exactly proportioned.
 The prince is here at hand: pismeth your lordship
 To meet his grace, just distance 'tween our armies? Shakespeare.
 12. Full; of full dimensions.
 His soldiers had skirmishes with the Numidians, so that once the skirmish was like to have come to a just battle. Kneller, Hist.
 Their names alone would make a just volume. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 655.
 There is not any other particular above mentioned, but would take up the business of a just volume. Hall, Orig. of Monk.
 There seldom appeared a just army in the civil wars. Duchess of Newcastle.
- JUST;† adv.
 1. Exactly; nicely; accurately.
 The god Pan guided my hand just to the heart of the beast. Sidney.
 They go about to make us believe that they are just of the same opinion, and that they only think such ceremonies are not to be used when they are unprofitable, or when as good or better may be established.
 There, ev'n just there he stood; and as the spoke,
 Where least the spectre was, she cast her look. Dryden.
 A few understanding him right; just as when
 Our Saviour said, in an allegorical sense, Except ye eat the flesh of the son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. Bentley.
 'Tis with our judgments as our watches, none Go just alike; yet each believes his own. Pope.
 2. Merely; barely.
 It is the humour of weak and trifling men to value themselves upon just nothing at all. L'Estrange.
 The Nereids went before
 To smooth the seas; a soft Euxine gale
 But just inspir'd and gently swell'd the sail. Dryden.
 Give me, ye gods, the product of one field,
 That so I neither may be rich nor poor;
 And having just enough, not covet more. Dryden.
 3. Nearly; almost; tantum non.
 Being spent with age, and just at the point of death, Demetrius called for leaves of new bread to be brought, and with the steam of them under his nose prolonged his life. Temple.
 4. Just now. Immediately. Craven Di-lect.
JUST. n. s. [joute, French.] Mock encounter on horseback; tilt; tournament. Just is more proper. See JOUST.

- None was either more grateful to the beholders, or more noble in itself, than justs, both with sword and lance. Sidney.
 What news? hold those justs and triumphs?
 Among themselves the tourney they divide,
 In equal squadrons rang'd on either side;
 Then turn'd their horses' heads, and man to man,
 And stood to steed oppos'd, the justs began. Dryden.
- TO JUST. v. n. [joust, French.] See TO JOUST.
 1. To engage in a mock fight; to tilt.
 2. To push; to drive; to jostle.
JUSTICE;† n. s. [Sax. iurice, Sax. Chron. justice, French; justitia, Lat.]
 1. The virtue which we give to every man what is his due: opposed to injury or wrong. It is either distributive, belonging to magistrates; or commutative, respecting common transactions between men.
 O that I were judge, I would do justice. 2 Sam. xii. 4.
 The king-becoming graces,
 As justice, verity, temperance, steadfastness,
 I have no relish of them. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
 The nature and office of justice being to dispose the mind to a constant and perpetual readiness to render to every man his due, it is evident, that if gratitude be a part of justice, it must be conversant about something that is due to another. Locke.
 2. Equity; agreeableness to right: as, he proved the justice of his claim.
 3. Vindicative retribution; punishment: opposed to mercy.
 He executed the justice of the Lord. Deut. xxxiii. 21.
 Let justice overtake us. Isa. lix. 9.
 Examples of justice must be made, for terror to some; examples of mercy, for comfort to others. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
 4. Right; assertion of right.
 Draw thy sword.
 That if my speech offend a noble heart,
 Thy arm may do thee justice. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
 5. [Justiciarius, Lat.] One deputed by the king to do right by way of judgement.
 And thou, Esdras, ordain judges and justices, that they may judge in all Syria. 1 Esdras, viii. 23.
- 6. JUSTICE of the King's Bench. [Justiciarius de Banco Regis.] Is a lord by his office, and the chief of the rest; wherefore he is also called capitalis justiciarius Anglie. His office especially is to hear and determine all pleas of the crown; that is, such as concern offences committed against the crown, dignity, and peace of the king; as treasons, felonies, mayhems, and such like: but it is come to pass, that he with his assistants heareth all personal actions, and real also, if they be incident to any personal action depending before them. Cowel.
 Give that whisper his errand,
 He'll take my lord chief justice's warrant. Prior.
- 7. JUSTICE of the Common Pleas. [Justiciarius Communium Placitorum.] Is a lord by his office, and is called dominus justiciariorum communium placitorum. He with his assistants originally did hear and de- termine all causes at the common law; that is, all civil causes between common persons, as well personal as real; for which cause it was called the court of common pleas, in opposition to the pleas of the crown, or the king's pleas, which are special, and appertaining to him only. Cowel.

- 8. JUSTICE of the Forest. [Justiciarius Forestæ.] Is a lord by his office, and hath the hearing and determining of all offences within the king's forest, committed against venison or vert: of these there be two, whereof the one hath jurisdiction over all the forests on this side Trent, and the other of all beyond. Cowel.
- 9. JUSTICES of Assize. [Justicarii ad capiendas Assisas.] Are such as were wont, by special commission, to be sent into this or that country to take assizes: the ground of which polity was the ease of the subjects; for whereas these actions pass always by jury, so many men might not, without great hindrance, be brought to London; and therefore justices, for this purpose, were by commission particularly authorized and sent down to them. Cowel.
- 10. JUSTICES in Eyre. [Justicarii itinerantes.] Are so termed of the French eyre, iter. The use of these, in ancient time, was to send them with commission into divers counties, to hear such causes especially as were termed the pleas of the crown, and therefore I must imagine they were sent abroad for the ease of the subjects, who must else have been hurried to the King's Bench, if the cause were too high for the country court. They differed from the justices of Oyer and Terminer, because they were sent upon some one or few especial cases, and to one place; whereas the justices in eyre were sent through the provinces and countries of the land, with more indefinite and general commission. Cowel.
- 11. JUSTICES of Gaol Delivery. [Justicarii ad Gaolas deliverandas.] Are such as are sent with commission to hear and determine all causes appertaining to such as for any offence are cast into gaol, part of whose authority is to punish such as let to mainprize those prisoners that by law be not bailable. These by likelihood, in ancient time, were sent to countries upon several occasions; but afterward justices of assize were likewise authorized to this. Cowel.
- 12. JUSTICES of Nisi Prius are all our now-a-days with justices of assize; for it is a common adjournment of a cause, in the common pleas, to put it off to such a day; nisi prius justicarii venerint ad eas partes ad capiendas assisas; and upon this clause of adjournment they are called justices of nisi prius, as well as justices of assize, by reason of the writ or action that they have to deal in. Cowel.

13. JU'STICES of Peace. [judicarii ad Pacem.] Are they that are appointed by the king's commission, with others, to attend the peace of the country where they dwell; of whom some, upon especial respect, are made of the quorum, because some business of importance may not be dealt in without the presence of them, or one of them? Concl.

The justice.
In fair round belly with good capon lin'd,
With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut,
Full of wise saws and modern instances,
And so he plays his part. Shaksp., As you like it.
Thou hast appointed justices of the peace in call poor men before them, about matters they were not able to answer. Shakspere.

The justice of peace are of great use: anciently they were conservators of the peace; they are the same, saving that several acts of parliament have enlarged their jurisdiction. Bacon.

To JU'STICE, v. a. [from the noun.] To administer justice to any. A word not in use.

As for the title of prescription, wherein the emperor hath been judge and party, and hath justified himself, God forbid but that it should endure an appeal to a war. Bacon.

Whereas one Styward, a Scot, was apprehended for intending to poison the young queens of Scots; the king delivered him to the French king, to be justified by him at his pleasure. Hayward.

JU'STICABLE.* adj. [from justice.] Liable to account in a court of justice.

Many petty kings of Gaul — were subject to their nobility, and justiciable by them. Hayward, Acum, to Diplom. (1603), ch. 3.

JU'STICEMENT, n. s. [from justice.] Procedure in courts.

JU'STICE,† n. s. [from To justice.] Administrator of justice. An old word, found in the law-books of elder times, viz. "justiciars of the peace."

With what fear and astonishment did the repining offenders look upon us unexpected a justice? Dr. Hall, Contemp. P. 4.

He was a singular good justice; and if he had not died in the second year of his government, was the likeliest person to have reformed the English colonies. Dennis on Ireland.

Preceding his progenitors, a justice upright. Warner, Athol's Eng. s. 54.

He was a good justice. Harington, Br. View of the Ch. p. 110.

JU'STICESHIP, n. s. [from justice.] Rank or office of justice. Swift.

JU'STICABLE, *adj. [from justice.] Proper to be examined in courts of justice.

JU'STICIARY.* n. s. [judicarius, low Lat.]

1. An administrator of justice.
The civil justiciary, who enquireth the performance of those good duties which the law requires; is so a damnable condition. Junius, Sin Sigm. (1639), p. 465.

They [the clergy] were — sometimes sheriffs of counties, and almost constantly the justiciaries of the kingdom. [an 1162.] Burke, Abridg. Eng. Hist. iii. 6.

2. One who boasts the justice of his own action; a self-appointed judge.

The devil is in full force to those that are justiciars, trusting in their own works, or to the liberty of their own will.

Doring on the Ep. to the Hebrews, (1576), M. R. I believe it would be no hard matter to unravel, and run through, most of the pompous austerities, and fauntings, of many religious orders and splendid justiciars. South, Sermon, ix. 146.

JU'STIFIABLE, *adj. [from justify.] Defensible by law or reason.

Just are the ways of God,
And justifiable to men. Milton, S. A.

Although some animals in the water do carry a justifiable resemblance to some at land, yet are the major part which bear their names unlike. Brown, Vulg. Err.

JU'STIFIABLENESS, n. s. [from justifiable.] Rectitude; possibility of being fairly defended.

Men, jealous of the justifiableness of their doings before God, never think they have human strength enough. King Charles.

JU'STIFIABLY, *adv. [from justifiable.] Rightly; so as to be supported by right; defensibly.

A man may more justifiably throw cross and pile for his opinions, than take them up by such measures. Locke.

JUSTIFICATION, n. s. [justification, French; justificatio, low Latin.]

1. Absolution.
I hope, for my brother's justification, he wrote this but as an essay of my virtue. Shakspere, R. Lear.

2. Defence; maintenance; vindication; support.
Among theological arguments, in justification of absolute obedience, was one of a singular nature. Swift.

3. Deliverance by pardon from sins past. Clarke.

In such righteousness
To them by faith imported, they may find
Justification towards God, and peace
Of conscience. Milton, P. L.

"Is the consummation of that former set of laws by this latter, or to the words of St. Paul, and St. James, the consummation of faith by charity and good works, that God accepteth in Christ to justification, and not the bare openness of faith to bring forth works, if those works, by the fault of a rebellious infidel, will not be brought forth. Hammond.

JU'STIFICATIVE.* adj. [justificativus, Fr.] Having power to justify; justifying; making right. Colgrave, and Sherwood.

JU'STIFICATOR, n. s. [from justify.] One who supports, defends, vindicates, or justifies.

JU'STIFICATORY.* adj. [from To justify.] Vindictory; defensorious. Johnson in V. VINDICATORY.

JU'STIFIER, n. s. [from justify.] One who justifies; one who defends or absolves; one who frees from sin by pardon.

That he might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in him. Rom. vii. 26.

To JU'STIFY, v. a. [justifier, French; justifico, low Latin.]

1. To clear from imputed guilt; to absolve from an accusation.
The law hath judg'd thee, Eleazar;
I cannot justify whom law condemns. Shaksp.

They say, behold a man glutinous, a friend of publicans and sinners; but wisdom is justified of her children. St. Math. xi. 19.

How can man be justified with God? Or how can he be clean that is born of a woman? Job, xiv. 4.

There is an exquisite subtilty, and the same is unjust; and there is a wise man that is justified in judgement. Ecclesi. xix. 25.

Sins may be forgiven through repentance, but no act or wit of man will ever justify them. Shellock.

You're neither justified, nor yet accus'd. Dryden.

2. To maintain; to defend; to vindicate.
When we began in courteous manner to lay his unkindness unto him, he seeing himself confronted by so many, like a resolute orator, went not to denial, but to justify his cruel falsehood. Bridney.

What she did, whatever in itself,
Her doing seem'd to justify the deed. Milk, P. L.

My unwilling light the gods inform,
And that must justify our sad divorce. Dramas.

Yet still thy faith shall stand in thy defence,
And justify their author's want of sense. Dryd.

Let others justify their missions as they can, we are sure we can justify that of our fathers by an uninterrupted succession. Aitburby.

3. To free from past sin by pardon.
By him all that believe are justified from all things, from which you could not be justified by the law of Moses. Acts, xiii. 39.

To JU'STILE, v. n. [from just, jouster, French.] To encounter; to clash; to rush against each other.

While injury of chance Puts back leave taking, justiles roughly by
All time of pause, rudely beguiles our lips
Of all rejoinder. Shakspere, Tr. and Cress.

The chariots shall rage in the streets, they shall justle one against another in the broad ways. Nash, ii. 4.

Argo pan'd
Through Boeoporus, betwixt the justling rocks. Milton, P. L.

Justling, or push'd with winds, rude in their shock,
Time the silent lightning. Milton, P. L.

Not one starry spark,
But gods meet gods, and justle in the dark. Lee.

Couriers therefore justify for a grant;
And, when they break their friendship, plead their want. Dryden, En. Tale.

The more remote run stumbling with their fear,
And, in the dark, men justle as they meet. Dryden.

When elephant 'gainst elephant did rear
His trunk, and caudex jostled in the air,
My sword by way to victory had shown. Swift.

I thought the deen had been too proud
To justle here among the crowd. Dryden.

To JU'STILE, v. a. To push; to drive; to force by rushing against it. It is commonly used with a particle following; as, out, or off.

Private and single abilities should not justle out and deprive the church of the joint abilities of many learned and godly men. King Charles.

Many excellent strains have been justied off by their intrusion. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The early commons shall respect duty,
And justle peerage out with property. Dryden.

It is not to be imagined that the incongruous alphabets and abuses of writing can ever be justied out of their possession of all libraries. Holday.

Running in the dark, a man may justle a point. Cilley.

Absent good, though thought on, not making any part of unhappiness in its absence, is justied out, to make way for the removal of those uneasinesses we feel. Locke.

We justied one another out, and disrupted the post for a great while. Addison, Guardian.

JU'STLE.* n. s. [from the verb.] Shock; slight encounter.

Every little justle,
Which is but the ninth part of a sound thump. Hemm, and Ft. Nice Valer.

All such as have been aggrieved by any ambiguous expression, accidental fault, or unkind repartee. Twiss, N. 250.

JU'STLING.* n. s. [from justle.] Shock; the act of rushing against each other.

Was there not one who had set bars and doors to it, and said, Hitherto shalt thou come, but no farther, and here shall thy proud waves be stayed; then might we well expect such vicissitudes, such jealousies, and clashings, in nature.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

JU'STLY. adv. [from just.]

1. Uprightly; honestly; in a just manner. Nothing can justly be despised that cannot justly be blamed; where there is no choice, there can be no blame. South.

With ignominious scourge, in upon sight:
Next view the Tarquin kings; the avenging sword
Of Brutus justly drawn, and Rome restored." Dryden.

The goddess, studious of her Grecian's fate,
Taught them in laws and letters to excel,
In acting justly, and in writing well. Prior.

2. Properly; exactly; accurately. Their artful hands instruct the luste to sound,
Their feet amidst their hands, and justly beat the ground. Dryden.

JU'STNESS. n. s. [from just.]

1. Justness; reasonableness; equity. Justness in properly applied to things; and justice to persons; though we now say the justice of a cause, as well as of a judge.

It maketh unto the right of the war against him, whose success useth commonly to be according to the justness of the cause for which it is made. Spenser on Ireland.

We may not think the justness of each act
Such and no other than event doth form it. Shaks.

2. Accuracy; exactness; propriety. In this sense it is now most used.

I value the satisfaction I had in seeing it represented with all the justness and gracefulness of action. Dryden.

I appeal to the people, was the usual saying of a very excellent dramatic poet, when he had any dispute with particular persons about the justness
and regularity of his productions. Addison, Guardian.

TO JUT. v. n. [This word is supposed to be corrupted from jct, perhaps from shoot. Dr. Johnson. — Not from shoot.
See TO JET.]

1. To push or shoot into prominences; to come out beyond the main bulk. Insulting tyranny begins to jut Upon the innocent and aweless throne. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

All the projected or jutting parts should be very moderate, especially the corners of the lower orders. Wotton.

The land, if not restrain'd, had met your way,
Projected out a neck and jutting to the sea. Dryden.
Broke by the jutting land on either side;

In double streams the briny waves glide. Dryden.
It seems to jut out of the structure of the poem,
and be independent of it. Brown on the Odyssey.

2. To run against; to but. Barret.
Oft the ram
And jutting steer drive their entangling horns
Through the frail meads. Mason, Eng. Garden, B. 2.

TO JUTTY. v. a. [from jut.] To shoot out beyond.

Then lend the eye a terrible aspect;
Let it pry through the portage of the head,
Like the brass cannon, let the brow n'erwhelm it,
As fearfully, as doth a galled rock
O'erhang and jutty his confounded base, Swill'd with the wild and wasteful ocean. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

TO JUTTY. v. n. To jut. See TO JETTY.
JUTTY. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. That part of a building which shoots forward beyond the rest. See JETTEE.
No jutty, these, buttress, Shakspeare, Macbeth.

2. A kind of pier: a mole projected into the sea. Maintenance of piers, jutties, walls, and banks, against the rage of the sea. Act, 1 Edward VI. c. 14.

JUT-WINDOW. n. s. [jut and window.] A window jutting from a building.

I fancied her like the front of her father's hall;
her eyes were the two jut windows, and her mouth
the great door. Congreve.

JUVENILE. adj. [juvenilis, Lat.] Young; youthful.

Learning hath its infancy when it is almost childish; then its youth, when it is luxuriant and juvenile; then its strength of years when it is solid; and lastly, its old age, when it waxes dry and exhaust. Bacon, Essays.

JUVENILITY. n. s. [from juvenile.]

1. Youthfulness. The restoration of grey hairs to juvility, and renewing exhausted marrow, may be effected without a miracle. Glanville.

2. Light and careless manner. Customary strains and abstracted juvilities have made it difficult to commend and speak credibly in dedications. Glanville.

JUXTAPOSITION. n. s. [juxtaposition, French; juxta and positio, Latin.] Ap-position; the act of placing together;
the state of being placed by each other.

Nor can it be a difference that the parts of solid bodies are held together by hooks, since the coherence of these will be of difficult conception; and we must either suppose an infinite number of them holding together, or at last come to parts that are united by a mere juxtaposition. Glanville.
By the abduction and juxtaposition of parallels,
universally glanced both from his poetry and prose, to ascertain his favourite words. Warren, Pref. to Milton's Sm. Form.

The man who first invented the word aloud, must not only have distinguished, in some measure, the relation of superiority from the objects which were so related, but he must also have distinguished this relation from other relations, such as, from the relation of inferiority denoted by the word below, from the relation of juxtaposition, expressed by the word beside, and the like. A. Smith, Formation of Languages.

JVY. n. s. [173, 173, Saxon; hedera, Lat.]
A plant.

It is a parasitic plant, sending forth roots or fibres from its branches, by which it is fastened to either trees, walls, or plants which are near it, and from thence receives a great share of its nourishment. Miller.

A gown made of the finest wool —
A belt of sam, and my buds,
With coral clasps and amber studs;
And if these pleasures may thee move,
Then live with me and be my love. Marlowe.

Direct the clasping ire where to climb.

I'VYED. adj. [from ivy.] Overgrown with ivy. A favourite epithet of modern poets.

Underneath the brow
Of ivy'd cliffs, through many a winding path,
Many a low valley, and forsaken lawn,
I stray'd with my conductor. W. Richardson.
I'll seek some lonely church, or dreary hall,
Where fancy paints the glimmering taper blue,
Where lamps hang mouldering on the ivy'd wall,
And shewed ghosts drink up the midnight dew. Smollett.

Repeated objects of his view,
The gloomy battlements, and ivy'd spires;
That crown the solitary dome, arise.

Warren, Pleasures of Melancholy.

JY'MOLD. adj. See GIMMAL.

K.

K

K, A letter borrowed by the English from the Greek alphabet. It has before all the vowels one invariable sound: as, keen, ken, kill. It is used after c at the end of words: as, knock,
clock, crack, brack, brick, stick, pluck, check,
which were written anciently with c:
final: as, clocke, checke, tricke. It is also
VOL. II.

K

in use between a vowel and the silent e
final: as, clocke, broke, brake, pike, duke, eke. It likewise ends a word after a diphthong: as, look, brack, shook, leek.
The English [should] never use c at the end of a word. K is silent in the present pronunciation before n: as, kniff,
knee, knell.

TO KAO'S. See TO CAROB.
KAIL. n. s. [cap, Saxon; caul, old Fr.; kal, Icel. and Su. Goth. See also
COLE.]

1. A kind of cabbage. It was sold at Aberdeen, that the people loaned from Cromwell's soldiers to make shoes and to plant kail. Johnson, Journ. Western Islands.

2. A kind of broth; pottage. A northern term. Grose, Coven. Dial. and Brockett. See KELL.

KA'LENDAR. n. s. [now written calendar.] An account of time.
Let the pernicious hour
Stand aye accused in the calendar.

To KA'LENDAR. v. a. [from the noun.] See TO CALENDAR.] To enter in the calendar.

We are generally more apt to calendar saints than sinners' days.
Hooker, Ecc. Pol. v. 72.
KA'LENDER. n. s. A sort of dervise. See CALENDER.

KA'LI. n. s. [An arabick word.] Sea-weed, of the ashes of which glass was made; whence the word saltili.

The ashes of the weed kali are sold to the Venetians for their glass works.
Bacon.

KA'LLIGRAPHY. n. s. Beautiful writing. See CALLIGRAPHY.

My heliography, a fair hand,
Fit for a secretary.
B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

KA'LMIA. n. s. An elegant ever green plant, of which one kind has been called, the dwarf laurel, with a tinus leaf. The leaf of another sort is larger. Mason.

KA'LOYER. n. s. A monk of the Greek church. See CALOYER. Dr. Shaw calls the Presbyters of the monastery of St. Catherine at Mount Sinai kalories, Trav. p. 390. Ricaut writes the word in the same manner. Others write it calogor, as Churchhill, Tournefort, &c. The doctor, Mr. Pegge observes, derives the word from καλός, a good old man; but Mr. Pegge prefers καλόγρις, one who performs good works. See Anon. ix. 93. It is probably from καλός, without any adjunct.

The second are habited like Greek kalories of that order.

Ricaut, State of the Greek Church, p. 324.

KAM.† adj. [Kam, in Erse, is squint-eyed, and applied to any thing awry: clean kam signifies crooked, athwart, awry, cross from the purpose. A-schembo, Italian; hence our English a-kimbo. Clean kam is, by vulgar pronunciation, brought to kim kam. Dr. Johnson.—kamm, or camm, Welsh, crooked. See CAMOUS.] Crooked.

Scin. This is clean kam.

Bru. Merely awry.
The wrong way, clean contrary, quite kam.

Caugnive, in F. Contrepoint.

All goes topsy turvy; all kim kam.

Tranal. of Guernsey de Affluence.

KANGAROO. n. s. An animal of South Wales.

The head, neck and shoulders are very small in proportion; the tail is nearly as long as the body, thick near the rump, and tapering towards the end: the fore legs of this were only eight inches long, the hind ones two-and-twenty; its progress is by successive leaps of great length in an erect posture. The skin is covered by a short fur, mouse colour. This animal is called by the natives Kangaroo.

Hawkesworth's Collect. of Voyages.

To KAW.† v. n. [from the sound. Dr. Johnson.—Hence the bird's name, kae, Teut. ceo, Saxon, cawci, Welsh; and much the same in several other languages.] To cry as a raven, crow, or rook.

Jack-daws having and fluttering about the nests, set all their young ones a-gaping; but having nothing in their moults but air, leave them as hungry as before.

KAW. n. s. [from the verb.] The cry of a raven or crow.

The dastard crow that to the wood made wing,
With her loud kaes her craven-kind doth bring.
Who, safe in numbers, cuff the noble bird. Dryden.

KAYLES. n. s. pl. [quille, French.]

1. Nipples; kettlepills, of which skittles seems a corruption.

And now at kaes they try a harmless chance,
And now their cur they teach to fetch and dance.

The residue of the time they wear out at coits, kaes, or the like idle exercises.

Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

2. A kind of play still retained in Scotland, in which nine holes ranged in three's are made in the ground, and an iron bullet rolled in among them.

KA'ZARDY. adj. Unlucky; liable to accident. A northern word. Mr. Wilbraham, in his Cheshire Glossary, considers it a corruption of hazardly. Ray thus defines kazardy cattle, "cattle subject to casualties, hazardous, &c."

To KECK.† v. n. [kecken, Dutch. Dr. Johnson.—From the Iceland, keok, the throat; keola, "gula niti." Sorenus. So, in Berkshire, kecker is used for the gullet.] To heave the stomach; to reach at vomiting.

All those diets do dry up humours and rheums, which they first attenuate, and while the humour is attenuated it troubleth the body a great deal more; and therefore patients must not keck at them at the first.

The faction is it not notorious?
Keck at the memory of glorious.

KE'CKER. n. s. The gullet. A provincial term. See the etymology of To KECK.

To KE'CKLE.† v. a. [perhaps from kughlen, Teut. rotundare.] To defend a cable round with rope.

KE'CKSY. n. s. [commonly kez, cigue, French; cicuta, Latin. Skinner.] Skinner seems to think kecksey or kez the same as hemlock. It is used in Staffordshire both for hemlock, and any other hollow-jointed plant.

Nothing tears
But hateful docks, rough distles, kecksies, burs,
Losing both beauty and utility.

Shakespeare, Hen. F.

KE'CKY. adj. [from kez.] Resembling a kez.

An Indian sceptre, made of a sort of cane, without any joint, and perfectly round, consisteth of hard and blackish cylinders, mixed with a soft kecky body; so as at the end cut transversely, it looks as a bundle of wires.

To KECK.† v. a. [keghe, a small vessel, Dutch.]

1. In bringing a ship up or down a narrow river, when the wind is contrary to the tide, they set the foresail, or fore-top-sail and mizzen, and so let her drive with the tide. The sails are to flat her about, if she comes too near the shore. They also carry out an anchor in the head of the boat, with a hawser that comes from the ship; which anchor, if the ship comes too near the shore, they let fall in the stream, and so wind her head about it; then weigh the anchor again when she is about, which is called kegging, and from this use the anchor a kegger.

TO KEEP, † v. a. [cepan, kepan, Saxon; kepen, old Dutch. "In the English language we have two words, which add the idea of care or diligence to that of holding or possessing. These words are keep and save, which we perceive are the same words under different forms. On the word keep our etymologists supply us with a set of terms belonging to the same element, (C. B. whence the Latin capiō, to take hold, to contain, &c.) which may be found in Skinner; cepan, capere (per), kepen, coop.

—Keft signifies in Persia and Arabic a coop or cage for birds. Under coop, in Junius, we find a Dutch expression, 'kuppe der stad, kepa urbis; and coop or coup, vas, dolium. Hence is derived coop, doliarius. Keep is sometimes used in the sense of restrain, confine; as, in the phrases, keep in, to keep a person to any business, &c. The commentators on Shakspeare will supply us with examples, in which keep is used in the sense of care for; and there is another signification of this word, still preserved in the phraseology of our university, [Cambridge], in which it recurs to a different sense of the element, and has reference to an enclosure for the purpose of rest, habitation, &c." White, Etymolog. Maga. p. 43.]

1. To retain; not to lose.

I kept the field with the death of some, and flight of others.

A pleasant mixture be prepar'd before, Of wine and water mix'd, with added rose, Of opium; to his keeper this be brought, Who swallowed unaware the sleepy draught. Dryden.

4. One who has the care of parks, or beasts of chase.

There is an old tale goes, that Herne the hunter, Some time a keeper here in Windsor forest, Doth all the winter-time, at still of midnight, Walk round about an oak with ragged horns. Shakespeare.

The first full buck of all the season's sent, And keeper takes no less to complement. Dryden.

5. One that has the superintendence or care of any thing.

Hilkiah went unto Hilkiah, keeper of the wardrobe. 8 Kings, xlii. 14.

KEEPER of the great seal. [custos magni sigilli, Lat.] is a lord by his office, and called lord keeper of the great seal of England, and is of the king's privy.

council, under whose hands pass all charters, commissions, and grants of the king. This lord keeper, by the statute of 5 Eliz. c. 18. hath the like jurisdiction, and all other advantages, as hath the lord chancellor of England. Cowel.

KE'PERSHIP. n. s. [from keeper.] Office of a keeper.

The goal of the shire is kept at Launceston; this kepership is annexed to the constabulary of the castle. Curcus.

KE'PING. n. s. [from keep.]

1. Charge; custody.

Let them that suffer according to the will of God, commit the keeping of their souls to him to well doing as unto a faithful Creator.

A wise and a good man shall be satisfied from himself; his happiness is in his own keeping. South, Sermon, iv. 360.

2. Care to preserve; preservation.

If God bestows upon us a blessing, we may be confident, that he looks upon it as worth our keeping. South, Sermon, iv. 402.

3. Guard.

Therefore henceforth be to your keeping well, And ever ready for your foeman fell.

KE'PSAKE. n. s. [keep and sake.] A gift in token of remembrance; to be kept for the sake of the giver.

KEVE. n. s. [Cyff, cyfe, Sax. dolium, cadus, a tun or barrel. Somner. Jamieson in V. KEVE.] A large vessel to ferment liquors in. Devonshire. Grose. A large tub or vessel used in brewing; a mashing-tub is sometimes called a keve. Jennings's W. Country Words. See also KIVE.

TO KEVE. v. a.

1. To put the wort in a keve for some time to ferment. Jennings, W. C. Words.

2. To overturn or lift up a cart, so as to unload it all at once. Cheshire. Ray, and Wilbraham.

KEG. n. s. [caque, French. Mr. Tooke bequeaths our word to be the past participle of the Saxon, cægan, observe. He would, of course, disdain to notice the Welsh ceag, a basin; or the Su. Goth. kagge, the same as our keg.] A small barrel, commonly used for a fish barrel.

KELK. n. s.

1. A blow. Grose, Craven Dial. and Brockett's N. C. Words.

2. Large detached stones. Craven Dial. TO KELK. v. a. To beat heartily. Brockett's N. C. Words.

KELL. n. s. [Dr. Johnson offers no etymology; the Welsh caul, (probably, however, borrowed from our own caul), is the first meaning. Serenius notices also the Icel. kil, "saccus, pera, scrotum."] ]

1. The omentum; that which wraps the guts.

The very weight of bowels and kell, in fat people, is the occasion of a rupture. Fleming, Surgery.

2. A child's caul. See the fourth meaning of CAUL. Barret.

A silly jealous fellow — seeing his child new born included in a kell, thought sure a Franciscan, that used to come to his house, was the father of it, it was so like a friar's caul; and thereupon threatened the friar to kill him.

Barton, Anat. of Med. p. 617.

3. The chrysalis of a caterpillar.

Caterpillars' kells,

And knotty colowens. R. Jonson, Sid. Shepherd.

KELL. n. s. A sort of pottage. Ainsworth. It is so called in Scotland, being a soup made of shredded greens. Dr. Johnson. I do not find this Scottish soup written otherwise than kail or kale. The Welsh, however, have caul for broth or pottage: our northern counties, kale-pot.

KELP. n. s. A sea-plant; a salt produced from calcined sea-weed.

In making alum, the workmen use the ashes of a sea-weed called kelp, and urine.

Their rocks showed with kelp, a sea-plant, of which the ashes are melted into glass. They burn kelp in great quantities, and then send it away in ships, which come regularly to purchase them. Johnson, Journ. Western Islands.

KELPY. n. s. A supposed spirit of the waters in Scotland; of the origin of which term, Dr. Jamieson says, he can form no idea, unless it be originally the same with Alem. chalp, Germ. kalb, a calf; kelpy being described as a quadruped, and as making a loud bellowing noise; yet at the same time believed to have the form of a horse. He is here noticed, on account of the resemblance of his character to our own demon of the waters, Old Nick, famous for drowning not only men but ships. See NICK.

KELSON. n. s. [more properly kelsaon.] The wood next the keel.

We have added close pillars in the royal ships, which being fastened from the kelsaon to the beams of the second deck, keep them from settling, or giving way. Balagh.

KELTER. n. s. [keltter, to gird, Danish: "He is not in keltter; that is, he is not ready." Skinner. Upkitta, to tuss, to tuck up, Su. Goth. lhre. "Upkitta kona, colligatis vestibus mulier, quo paratio officiis obeundis fiat; et hinc verisimile est hoc Angli. keltter usurpatione de eo, qui est in promptu." Serenius.] Order; ready or proper state. So, in the north of England, in good keltter, that is, in good condition.

If the organs of prayer are out of keltter, — how can we pray? Barnes, Words, l. 71.

TO KEM. v. a. [cumban, Saxon; kam-men, German; now written, perhaps less properly, to comb.] To separate or disentangle by a denticulated instrument.

Yet are the men more loose than they, More kem'd and bath'd, and rubb'd and trim'd, More sleek. B. Jonson.

Thy head and hair are sleek;

And then thou kem'st the tuzzes on thy cheek. Dryden.

KEMBO. See KIMBO.

KEMELIN. n. s. [kemelin, Gr. any household implement.] A brewer's vessel; a tub. Cockeram. In the north of England a kimlin.

A kneading trough, or elles a kemelyn.

TO KEN. v. a. [cennan, Saxon; kennan, Dutch, to know; kennan, Su. Goth. to instruct, and also to know.]

1. To see at a distance; to descry.

The shepherd's swayne you cannot well ken, But it be by his pride, from other men.

Sperner, Shep. Cal. Sept.

If thou thinkest it from far,

Among the Pricies, a new-kinded star;

'Tis she that shines in that propitious light. Dryden.

We ken them from afar, the setting sun Plays on their shining arms. Addison.

2. To know. Obsolete. Dr. Johnson says. Both in this and in the preceding sense, ken is still used in the north of England.

'Tis he, I ken the manner of his gait. Shelley.

Now plain I ken whence love his rise began; Sure he was born some bloody brutish son, Hired up in shambles. Gay, Pastoral.

TO KEN. v. n. To look round; to direct the eye to or from any object.

Up she gets, out she looks, listens and enquires, bearkens, ken; every man afar off is sure he, every stirring in the street!

Barton, Anat. of Med. p. 515.

At once, as far as angels ken, he views

The dismal situation, waste and wild. Milton, P. L.

KEN. n. s. [from the verb.] View; reach of sight.

Lo! within a ken our army lies. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

When from the mountain top Pissino shew'd thee,

Thou wast within a ken. Shakespeare, Cymb.

It was a hill

Of paradise the highest; from whose top

The hemisphere of earth, in clearest ken,

Stretch'd out to the amplest reach of prospect, lay. Milton, P. L.

He soon

Saw within ken a glorious angel stand.

Milton, P. L.

Rude, as their ships, was navigation then;

No useful compass or meridian known;

Coasting they kept the land within their ken,

And knew the north but when the pole-star shone. Dryden.

When we consider the reasons we have to think, that what lies within our ken is but a small part of the universe, we shall discover an huge abyss of ignorance.

Locke.

KENDAL-GREEN. n. s. A kind of green cloth, made at Kendal in Westmoreland; a place long distinguished for dyeing cloths with several bright colours. This sort of stuff is mentioned in a statute of king Richard the Second. See Warton's Hist. of Eng. Poetry, vol. iv. p. 40.

Three misbegotten knaves, in Kendal-green, came at my back, and let drive at me.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV. P. I.

Now doth he only scorn his Kendal-green,

And his patch'd cockers own despised beene.

Rp. Hall, Sat. l. v.

KEN'MARKED. n. s. [from ken, to KEN'SPECKED. } know, to distinguish, add mark, and speck.] Marked, or branded, so as to be known; blemished. A northern expression. Ray, Grose, and Craven Dial.

KENNEL. n. s. [chenin, Fr. Dr. Johnson. — From chien, Fr. a dog; canis, Latin. And our old word, for a kennel of hounds, is accordingly cannel. See Huloot's Dictionary.]

1. A dog for dogs.

A dog sure, if he could speak, had wit enough to describe his kennel. Sidney
From forth the kennel of thy womb hath crept
A hell-bound, that doth hunt us all to death.

The soldiers remain within their station, which by reason of the nastiness of the beastly multitude might be more fitly termed a kennel than a camp. Hayward

2. A number of dogs kept in a kennel.

A little herd of England's timorous deer,
Maid with a yelping kennel of French curs.

3. The hole of a fox, or other beast.

[Kennel, Dutch; chenal, Fr. canalis, Lat.] The watercourse of a street.
A scavenger working in the cannet.

Bp. Hall, Decus. Medii. § 105.
The crosses aloud of certain brethren — they overture and lead the with the cannet.
A. Wood, Ann. Univ. Ox. under the year 1554.
Bad humours gather to a bile; or, as divers kennels flow to one sink, so in short time their numbers increase. Heywood
He always came in to dirty, as if he had been dragged through the kennel at a boarding-school. Arbutnot

K'ENNEL Coal.* See CANAL Coal.

To K'ENNEL. v. n. [from kennel.] To lie; to dwell: used of beasts, and of man in contempt.

Yet, when they list, would creep,
If aught disturb'd their noise, into her womb,
And kenneled there; yet there still bark'd and howl'd Within, unseen. Milton, P. L.
The dog kenneled in a hollow tree, and the cock roosted under the boughs. E. Estrenge

To K'ENNEL. v. a. To keep in a kennel.
Tomper, a tall bound, kenneled in a covert in France; and knows a rich soil. Tatler, No. 62.
From their slumbers shook, the kenneled hounds
Mix in the music of the day again. Thomson, Autumn

K'ENNING. n. s. [from ken.] View. Apparently a sea term.

The next day about evening we saw, within a kenning, thick clouds, which did put us in some hope of land. Bacon
His ships were past a kenning from the shore.

Trag. of Sidiham and Perseus, (1599.)

To K'ER. v. a. [ceapan, Saxon, captare, Lat.] To catch. A northern word. Grose, Craven Dial. and Brockett. "To kep a ball, is to catch it; to keep it from falling." Ray

K'ERT. pret. and part. pass. of kep.

K'ERB. n. s. [ceapan, Sax. to cut; kerbe, Germ. notch, indent.] Any edging of strong solid stuff, which serves as a guard to something else. Thus the edging of the stone footways in London streets is called the kerb-stone.

(Elm) scarce has any superior for herbs of coppers. Evelyn, b. i. ch. 4. § 15.

K'ERCHIEF. n. s. [coverchief; Chaucer; coverre, to cover, and chief, the head; and hence a handkerchief to wipe the face or hands. Dr. Johnson. — It should seem, from the following citation, that Chaucer's word was not what Dr. Johnson states it to be, but coverchief, "Among Latin and Greek words, by common usage taken for English, as sewe, &c. he mentions cephe, whereof cometh Chaucer's covercepe in the Roman of the Rose, written and pronounced commonly kerchief in the South, and courchief in the North." Caius's Counsaile against the Sweate, 1552. fol. 10.]

1. A head dress of a woman.
I see howe thine eye would emulate the diamond; thou hast the right arched bent of the brow, that becomes the tire vaillant.

— A plain kerchief, Sir John; my brows become nothing else. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor
O! what a time have you chose out, brave Caius,

To wear a kerchief, Shakspeare, Jul. Cæsar
The proudost kerchief of the court shall rest
Well satisfy'd of what they love the best. Dryden

2. Any loose cloth used in dress.

Every man had a large kerchief folded about the neck. Hayward

K'ERCHIEFED. adj. [from kerchief.]
K'ERCHIEFT. Dressed; hooded.

Sickness with his kerchief d'head upmound.
G. Fletcher, Clod's Vici, P. 1. st. 12.

Thus, Night, old seeme in thy pale career,
Till child-suited Morn appear,
Not trick'd and froun'd as she was wont
With the Atick boy to launt,
But kerchief in a comely cloud,
While rocking winds are piping loud.

Milton, Il Pens.

K'ERF. n. s. [ceoppan, Saxon, to cut.] The sawn-away slit between two pieces of stuff is called a kerf. Mazon, Mech. Ex.

K'ERMES. n. s. [hermes, old Fr. But see ALKERMES.]

Kermes is a roundish body, of the bigness of a pea, and of a brownish red colour. It contains a multitude of little distinct granules, soft, and when crushed yield a scarlet juice. It till lately was understood to be a vegetable excrescence; but we now know it to be the extended body of an animal part, filled with a numerous offspring, which are the little red granules. Hill

K'ERN. n. s. [Neither Sir James Ware in his remarks on Ireland, nor Dr. Johnson in his notice of this word, offer any etymology. Stanishurst, in his old description of Ireland, has given the following: "Kerne (highyren) signifieth a shower of hell; because they are taken for no better than rake-hells, or the dread's black garrie." ch. 8. fol. 28. The Irish foot-soldier will not consider himself very highly obliged to master Stanishurst.

Let him console himself, however, first, with honest Fuller's admirable remark on the Irish soldiery, in his account of the Holy War, made not long after that of Stanishurst: "All the cohort of Christendom in this war could have made no music, if the Irish harp had been wanting." Hist. of the Holy War, 1639. p. 269. Let him next apply this observation to the warfare of our own times, and then laugh at the fiery etymology ascribed to the name of his predecessors. Kelham, it may be added, notices the Norman Fr. kernes as meaning idle persons, vagabonds. Dr. Jamieson states the opinion of others, that kernes were formerly called cateranes; and that the true name is keathern, which signifies a company of keathernach or soldiers." An Irish foot-soldier; an Irish boot.

Out of the fry of these rake-hell horseboys, growing up in leavary and villainy, are their kernes supplied. Spenser on Ireland

Justice had with valour arm'd,
Compell'd these skipping kernes to trust their heels.

If in good plight those Northern kernes arrive,
Then does fortune promise fair. Philips, Briton

KERN. n. s. [guerne, Teut. "hand-molen." Kilian.]

1. A hand-mill consisting of two pieces of stone by which corn is ground. It is written likewise guern. It is still used in some parts of Scotland.

2. A churn. See CHURN. "Kern-milk," Yorkshire; butter-milk.

3. KERN Baby. An image dressed up with corn, carried before the reapers to their harvest home; perhaps not yet discontinued in the northern parts of England. A corruption of corn-baby. See TO KERN.

To KERN. v. n. [probably from kernel, or, by change of a vowel, corrupted from corn.]

1. To harden as ripened corn.
When the price of corn falleth, men break no more ground than will supply their own turn, whereabout it falleth out that an ill kernel or saved harvest soon emptieth their old store.

2. To take the form of grains; to granulate.
Curves, Surv. of Cornwall

The principal knack is in making the juice, when sufficiently boiled, to kern or granulate. Grec.

K'ERNEL. n. s. [cypnel, a gland, Saxon; kerne, Teut. cernus, Fr.]

1. The edible substance contained in a shell.

As brown in hue
As hazle nuts, and sweeter than the kernels. Shakspeare

There can be no kernel in this light nut; the soul of this man is his clothes. Shakspeare, All's well

The kernel of the nut serves them for bread and meat, and the shells for cups. Merr.

2. Any thing included in a husk or integument.

The kernel of a grape, the g's small grain, Can clothe a mountain, and o'rhedge a plain. Denham

Oats are ripe when the straw turns yellow and the kernel hard. Mortimer, Husbandry

3. The seeds of pulpy fruits.

I think he will carry this island home in his pocket, and give it his son for an apple.—And sowing the kernels of it in the sea, bring forth more islands. Shakspeare, Tempest

The apple inclosed in wax was as fresh as at the first putting in, and the kernels continued white. Bacon, Nov. Hist.

4. The central part of any thing upon which the ambient strata are concreted.

A solid body in the bladder makes the kernel of a stone. Arbutnot

5. Knobby concretions in children's flesh. To K'ERNEL. v. n. [from the noun.] To ripen to kernels.

In Staffordshire, and garden-rouncials sown in the fields kerret well, and yield a good kerroon.

Mortimer, Hushandry.

KE'RNELLY. † adj. [from kernel.] Full of kernels; having the quality or resemblance of kernels. Shrewsb.

KE'RNELWORT. n. s. [scrofularia.] An herb. Ainsworth.

To KE'RNEN, or KE'RS'EN. * v. a. [keraten, Teut.] To christen. Common in the north of England. And so Keremas for Christmas. Westmoreland and Craven Dialects, and Brockett's N. C. words.

KE'RS'EV. n. s. [karsage, Dutch; carisef, Fr.] The last syllable, Dr. Jamieson observes, seems borrowed from the coarse cloth called say: The origin of the first is quite uncertain. Coarse stuff.

Taffeta phrases, wiken terms precise,
I do forewent them; and I here protest,
Henceforth my wooing mind shall be express
In russet yeas, and honest kersey noes. Shakespeare.

His lackey with a linen stock on one leg, and a kersey boot-lace on the other.

Shakespeare, Tem. of the Shrew.
The same wool one man fits it into a hat, another weaves it into cloth, and another into kersey or serge. Hale.

Thy kersey doublet spreading wide,
Drew Kicly's eye aside. Gay.

To KERVE. * v. a. [ceopan, Saxon.] To cut; to carve.

In that figure Plinius saw him kerred.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 37. b.
That she was like to sterve
Through cruel knife, that her deare hart did kerve.

Spenner, F. Q. v. li. 4.

KE'NVER * n. s. [from kerve. Norm. Fr. kerver. Kelham.] A carver.
No portcullis, nor heron of images.

Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

KE'SAR. * n. s. [anisar, Goth. Cesar, Lat.] An emperor, Obsolete.

Woldest kings and kevers at her feet did them prostrate. Spenner, F. Q. v. li. 39.

KE'SLOP. * n. s. [kerelb, kerelb, Sax. coagulum; kase, Germ. rennet. Kase is cheese, and laben is to help, strengthen, or quicken. Brockett's N. C. Words.] The stomach of a calf prepared for food; the substance used in curdling milk. A northern word. Grose, Cumberland Dialect, and Brockett.

KEST. † The preter tenso of cast. It is still used in Scotland.

The rove mark, which she remembered well
That little infant had, which forth she kest.

Spenner, F. Q. v. li. 15.

Only that noise heav'n's rolling circles kest.
Fairfax.

KE'STREL. * n. s. A little kind of bastard hawk. Hammer.

Kims and kestrels have a resemblance with hawks. Bacon.

KE'STREL. * adj. Like a kestrel; base. Obsolete.

No thought of honour ever did essay
His tawny breast, but in his kestrel kynd
A pleasant vein of glory he did fynd.

Spenner, F. Q. li. ii. 4.

KET. * n. s. [koett, Su. Goth. kæt, Icel. caro; kæt, Teut. sordes.] Carriage; any sort of filth. A Norse derivative of horse-filth. It is a northern word in the former general sense. Craven Dialect, and Brockett.

KETCH. † n. s. [from caicchio, Italian, a barrel.] A heavy ship; as a bomb ketch. Dr. Johnson gives as an example the passage from Shakespeare, which belongs to keech. A ketch is a vessel with two masts, usually from 100 to 250 tons burthen. Formerly perhaps with only one mast, as it should seem in the following example.

We stood in for the channel; about noon we saw a sail having but one mast; judged it to be a ketch; but, drawing nearer, found it was a ship in distress, having lost her main and misen masts.

Randolph's Islands in the Archipel. (1687); p. 105.

KE'TTLE. † n. s. [cecl, Saxon; ketel, Dutch; katila, Gothick.] A vessel in which liquor is boiled. In the kitchen the name of pot is given to the boiler that grows narrower towards the top, and of kettle to that which grows wider. In authors they are confounded.

The fire thus form'd, she sets the kettle on;
Like burnish'd gold the little seethen shone.

Dryden.

KE'TTLEDROM. n. s. [kettle and drum.] A drum of which the head is spread over a body of brass, or copper.

As he drains his thoughts of Hecate down,
The ketledrum and trumpet thus bray out
The triumph of his pledge. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

KE'TTLEPINS. * Nipineps; skittles. See KATLE.

Billiards, kettle-pins, noddie boards, tables, trucks, shovel boards, fox and geese, or the like. Gayton on D. Quir. p. 340.

KE'TTY. * adj. [from ket.] Filthy; dirty; worthless; as, a ketty cur, a ketty fellow. Grose, Craven Dial. and Brockett.

KEZ. * n. s. [See KUCKSY.]

1. Hemlock.

2. A dry stalk. The stem of the tassel.

North. As dry as a kez. [from the Icel. quack, any thing that kindles; fuel.]

I bring with me a book so dry as a kez, word of invention, barren of good phrase.

Shelton, Pref. to Transl. of Don Quixote.
Those sharp and sorry shrubs, those dry and senseless kezes.

Sp. Gauden's Hermap. (1653.) p. 230.

KEY. † n. s. [ex, Sax. from caggian, to shut up. Mr. H. Tooke.]

1. An instrument formed with cavities corresponding to the wards of a lock, by which the bolt of a lock is pushed forward or backward.

If a man were porter of hellgate, he should have old turning the key. Shakespeare, Much.

Fortune, that arrant whore,
Ne'er turns the key to th' poor. Shakespeare, F. Lear.

The glorious standard lost to heav'n's throne spread,
With Peter's keys enrolled and his crown.

Fairfax.

Yet some there be, that by due steps aspire
To lay their just hands on that golden key.

That opens the palace of eternity. Milton, Comus.
Conscience is its own counsellor, the sole master of its own secrets; and it is the privilege of our nature, that every man should keep the key of his own breast.

Swift.

He came, and knocking thrice, without delay,
The longing lady heard, and turn'd the key.

Dryden.

2. An instrument by which something is screwed or turned.

Hide the key of the jack. Swift.
3. An explanation of any thing difficult.

An emblem without a key to it, is no more than a tale of a tub. F. Exterence.

These notions, in the writings of the ancient darkly delivered, receive a clearer light when compared with this theory, which represents every thing plainly, and is a key to their thoughts.

Those who are accustomed to reason have got the true key of books. Lacke.

4. The parts of a musical instrument which are struck with the fingers.

Panels loves to handle the spinnet, and touch the keys. Richardson, Pamela.

5. [In music.] Is a certain tone whereto every composition, whether long or short, ought to be fitted; and this key is said to be either flat or sharp, not in respect of its own nature, but with relation to the flat or sharp third, which is joined with it. Harris.

Hippolita, I won'd thee wish my sword,
And won thy love, doing thee injuries;
But I will wed thee in another key,
With pomp, with triumph, and with revelling.

Shakespeare.

But speak you with a sad brow? Or do you play the flouting Jack? Come, in what key shall a man take you to go in the song?

Shakespeare, Much Ado.
Not know my voice! Oh, time's extremity!

Hast thou not crack'd and splitt'd my poor tongue
In se'n short years, that here my only son
Knows not my feeble key of unio'd cares?

Shakespeare.

6. [Kaye, Dutch; quai, French.] A bank raised perpendicular for the ease of lading and unlading ships.

A key of fire ran along the shore,
And lighted all the river with a blaze. Dryden.

7. [In botany.] The husk containing the seed of an ash.

Ash, elm, oak, poplar, hornbeam, &c. are distinguished by their keys, tongues, &c. small, flat, and husky sails including the seeds. Erstling.

KEY-COLD. * adj. [key and cold.]

1. Lifeless; formerly a common expression; now perhaps obsolete. A key, on account of the coldness of the metal of which it is made, was formerly and even yet is employed to stop a bleeding of the nose.

Such objections as protestants now, &c. key-cold christians do make.

Shelton, Fort. of the Faith. (1565.) fol. 123. b.
Poor key-cold figure of a holy king!

Pale ashes of the house of Lancaster!

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

I am zealous professors transformed to key-cold worldlings. Bp. Hall, Works, li. 323.

Her apostolic virtue is departed from her, and hath left her key-cold.

2. Cold.

'Twist sleep and wake,
I do them take,
And on the key-cold floor then throw.

Old Song of Rob. Goodfellow, Percy's Reliques.

KEY-COLDNESS. * n. s. [from the adjective.]

Want of animation or activity.

The greatest part of your professed virtue we find to consist in a key-coldness, and well-nigh mute silence, when the hottest and most pungent arguments approach your mind.

Unpublished, &c. of Limited Epsic. (1641.) p. 5.

KEY-ABLE. * n. s. [from key.] May paid for lying at the key, or quay. Ainsworth.

KEY-HOLE. * n. s. [key and hole.] The per-oration in the door or lock through which the key is put.

Make doors fast upon a woman's wit, and it will out at the easement; shut that, and 'twill out at the keyhole. Shakespeare.

I looked in at the keyhole, and saw a well-made man. Tuttler.

I keep her in one room; I lock it;

The key, lock here, is in this pocket;

The keyhole is that left? Most certain. Prior.

KEYSTONE. n. s. [key and stone.] The middle stone of an arch.

If you will add a keystone and chaprels to the arch, let the breadth of the upper part of the keystone be the height of the arch. Mason, Mech. Es.

KHANE. n. s. [A Turkish word.] A sort of house or place of general reception.

Here is a spacious vaulted bazar, and a noble khane. — A khane is commonly a square court, colonaded in the manner of Covent Garden; built in charity for the reception of strangers, as there are no inns in these countries. Dressmann, Trav. p. 219.

KIRE. n. s. [from kerb, a cut, German, Skinner; from kibue, Welsh, Minshew.] An ulcerated chilblain; a chap in the heel caused by the cold.

If 'twere a kibe, 'twould put me to my slipper. Shakespeare.

The toe of the peasant comes so near the heel of our courtier, that it galls his kibe. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

One boasted of the cure, calling them a few kibes. Wicman.

KIBED. adj. [from kibe.] Troubled with kibes; as, kibed knees.

KIBY. adj. [from kibe.] Having kibes; sore with kibes.

He hath often that hath a kiby knee. Shakespeare, Twelfth Night.

To KICK† v. a. [Knucken, Germ.; calco, Lat.; Dr. Johnson. — Kukto, Iceland.

Serenius. Chaucer writes our word kike.] To strike with the foot.

He must endure and digest all affronts, adore the foot that kicks him, and kiss the hand that strikes him. South.

It anger'd Turenne once upon a day,
To see a footman kick it that took his pipe. Pope.

Another, whose son had employments at court, valued not, now and then, a kicking or a caning. Swift.

To KICK. v. n. To beat the foot in anger or contempt.

Wherefore kick ye at my sacrifice, which I have commanded? 1 Sam. ii. 29.

Yeshurun wased fed and tickled. Deut. xxxiii. 15.
The doctrines of the Holy Scriptures are terrible enemies to wicked men, and this is that which makes them kick against religion, and spurn at the doctrines of that holy book. Tillotson.

KICK. n. s. [from the verb.] A blow with the foot.

What, are you dumb? Quick, with your answer, quick.

Before my foot salutes you with a kick. Dryden, Juv.

KICKER.† n. s. [from kick.]

1. One who strikes with his foot.

2. A winning horse. Huloet.

KICKHAW.† n. s. [This word is supposed, I think with truth, to be only a corruption of quelque chose, some thing; yet Milton seems to have understood it otherwise; for he writes it kickshoe, as if he thought it used in contempt of dancing. Dr. Johnson. — Milton's word, in the passage cited from the original edition of his Treatise on Education, is kickshoe; probably intended for kickshoe, agreeably to the pronunciation of the French choue, as it had been used by Featley, a little before Milton: + I make bold to set on the board kickshoes, and variety of strange fruits. Dippers Dipt, 1645. p. 159.

1. Something uncommon; fantastical; something ridiculous.

Not shall we then need the monasteries of Paris to take our youth into their slight and prodigal custodies, and send them over back again transformed into mimicks, apes, and kickshoes. Milton.

2. A dish so changed by the cookery that it can scarcely be known.

Some pigeons, a joint of mutton, and any pretty little troy kickshoes. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

In wit, as well as war, they give us vigour;
Creasy was lost by kickshoes and soup-magroes. Freeman.

KICKY-WICKSEY. n. s. [from kick and Wick.] A made word in ridicule and disdain of a wife. Hannmer.

He wears his honour in a box, unseen,
That hugs his kicky-wicksey here at home,
Spending his manly marrow in her arms. Shaks.

KID. n. s. [kid, Danish.]

1. The young of a goat.

Leaping like wanton kids in pleasant spring. Spenser, F. Q.

There was a herd of goats with their young ones, upon which sight Sir Richard Graham tells, he would snap one of the kids, and carry him close to their lodging.

Spurring the lion ramp'd, and in his paw

So kids and whelps their sires and dams express;
And so the great I measure'd by the less. Dryden, Virg.

2. [From cidwels, Welsh, a faggot.] A bundle of heath or furze.

To KID† v. n. [from the noun.] To bring forth kids. Colgrave, and Sherwood.

To KID.† v. a. [cydan, Saxon; to declare, to make known; kil, Teut. known.] To discover; to sliew; to make known.

The fame, which made might be hid,
Throughout the loode is none kid. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 6.

The softness, that now is hid,
Without censure shall be kid. Chaucer, Rom. R. 2172.

But, ah! unwise and willens Colin Cloute,
That kyd the hidden kinds of many a weede,
Yet kyd not one to cure thy sore heart-roote. Spenser, Shep. Cal. Dec.

KIDDED.† adj. [from the noun.] Fallen as a young kid. Colgrave, and Sherwood.

KIDDER.† n. s.

1. An engrosser of corn to enhance its price. Ainsworth.

2. A badger, or carrier of goods on horseback. Ray. A travelling vendor of small wares. Moore's Suffolk Words.

KIDDL.† n. s. [Norman Fr. kiden, kid, kidell, low Latin. The word is in Magna Charta.] A kind of wear in a river, to catch fish. Corruptly called, in some places, kittle, or kettle.

Fishes love not old kydles, as they do the new. Old Poem in Malone's Thes. Chm. (1652.) p. 71.

KIDDOV.† n. s. The most common English name of the Lomvia, a web-footed bird, common on our shores, and called in different places the guillemot or guillem, and the sea-hen, and skout. Chambers.

KIDLING.† n. s. [from kid.] A young kid.
Mountains where the wanton kidling dallies. W. Browne.

Like kidlings blithe and merry. Gay.

To KIDNAP† v. a. [from kind, Dutch, a child, and nep.] To steal children; to steal human beings.

This poor child was kidnapped by the Jews. Dressmann, Trav. (Lett. dat. 1744.) p. 18.

The offence of kidnapping (being the stealing away) man, woman, or child, from their own country, and selling them into another, was capital by the Jewish law. Blackstone.

KIDNAPPER. n. s. [from kidnap.] One who steals human beings; a manstealer.

The man compounded with the merchant, upon condition that he might have his child again; for he had smelt it out, that the merchant himself was the kidnapper. L'Estrange.

These people lie in wait for our children, and may be considered as a kind of kidnappers within the law. Speotator.

KIDNEY.† n. s. [Etymology unknown. Dr. Johnson. — There is great probability in Serenius's derivation of our word from the Icel. quidr. So. Goth. qued, the belly; and nigh. Our word might at first be quidney.]

1. These are two in number, one on each side; they have the same figure as kidneybeans: their length is four or five fingers, their breadth is two, and their thickness two; the right is under the liver, and the left under the spleen. The use of the kidneys is to separate the urine from the blood, which, by the motion of the heart and arteries, is thrust into the emulgent branches, which carry it to the little glands, by which the serosity being separated, is received by the orifice of the little tubes, which go from the glands to the pelvis, and from thence it runs by the ureters into the bladder.

Quincy.
A youth laboured under a complication of diseases, from his menacery and kidneys. Wicman, Surgery.

2. Sort; kind; in ludicrous language.

Think of that, a man of my kidney; think of that, am as subject to heat as butter; a man of continual dissolution and thaw. Wicman, Surgery.

There are millions in the world of this man's kidney, that take up the same resolution without noise. L'Estrange.

KIDNEYBEAN. n. s. [phaeolus.] So named from its shape.] A leguminous plant.

Kidneybeans are a sort of cod ware, that are very pleasant wholesome food. Mortimer, Husbandry.

KIDNEYVETCH. [anthyllis.] n. s. Plants.

KIDNEWORTH. [cotyledon.] n. s. Ainsworth.

KIE.† n. s. Kine. Our northern word. See also Kee, and Ky.

KIDDERKIN.† n. s. [Dutch, kindelen, a baby; "vasculum, dolium; octava pars cadi; quod candem habet rationem ad integrum dolium, quam infantulus ad hominem perfectum." Junius. Skinner accordingly denominates it the great cask's baby, "filiosus vasis majoris."]

Bishop Parker, who was Dryden's contemporary, writes our word, nearer to the Dutch, kinderkin. A small barrel.

Make in the kinderkin a great bug-bale of purpose. Bacon.

A tun of man in thy large bulk is writ;
But sure thou'rt but a kinderkin of wit. Dryden.
Many vessels of authority, some kinderkins, some hogheads, some tuns.

By Parker, Rep. of Bechers. Transp. p. 11.
To KILL, v. a. [anciently quell; cpellan, Saxon; velen, Dutch.]

1. To deprive of life; to put to death, as an agent.

Da'at thou resolve to kill a friend of mine?
— Please you, I'd rather kill two enemies. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

Ye have brought us forth into this wilderness, to kill this whole assembly with hunger. Exod. xvi. 3.

There was killing of young and old, making away of men, women, and children. 2 Macc. v. 13.

2. To destroy animals for food.

We're mere usurpers, tyrants, and what's worse,
To fright the animals, and to kill them up
In their assign'd and native dwelling place. Shaks.

Shall I take my bread, and my flesh that I have killed for my sheaves? 1 Sam. xrv. 11.

3. To deprive of life, as a cause or instrument.

The medicines, if they were used inwards, would kill those that use them; and therefore they work potently, though outwards. Bacon.

4. To deprive of vegetative or other motion, or active qualities.

Try with oil, or balm of drink, so they be such things as will not be bought. Bacon, Nat. Hist.
Catharticks of mercurials mix with all animal acids, as appears by killing it with nitre.

Floyer on the Humours.
KILLER, n. s. [from kill.] One that deprives of life.

What sorrow, what amazement, what shame was in Amphialus, when he saw his dear foster-father and him the killer of his only son. Sidney.

With thou for the old lion hunt, or fill
His hungry whelps? and for the killer kill,
When couch'd in dreadful den? Sandys.

So rude a time,
Where love was held so capital a crime,
That a crown'd head could no compassion find,
But died, because the killer had been kind. Waller.

KILLER, n. s. [This seems a corruption of coal and loss, a flame, as soot is thereby produced.]

As earth of a blackish or deep blue colour, and doubtless had its name from below, by which came, in the north, the smut or grime on the backs of chimneys is called. Woodward.

KILN, n. s. [Latin, Saxon.] A stove; a fabric formed for admitting heat, in order to dry or burn things contained in it.

I'll creep up into the chimney. — There they always use to discharge their birding pieces; creep into the kiln hole. Shaks. M. Wives of Windsor.

After the putting forth in sprouts, and the drying upon the kiln, there will be gained a bushel
in eight of malt. Bacon.

Physicians chase lime which is newly drawn out of the kiln, and not slacked. Maron, Mech. Et.

To KILNDRY, v. a. [kiln and dry.] To dry by means of a kiln.

The best way is to kilndry them. Mortimer, Hubsandry.

KILT, † Used by Spenser for killed; not in the phrase of the Irish, for merely hurt, or wounded, but deprived of life.

It is also thus used in the Westmoreland and Lancashire dialects.

But what art thou, that tell'st of nephews kill?
Spenser, F. Q. l. v. 196.

A horse, please you honour, that this man here sold me at the fair of Gurishannon, last Shrove fare — lay down three times with myself, and kill me! Castle Rackrent, p. 306.

This word frequently occurs in the preceding pages, where it means not killed, but much hurt.

In Ireland, not only cowards, but the brave, die many times before their death! Ibid. Gloss.

To KILT, v. a. [kilte-op, Dan. Brockett.]
To tuck up; to tuck up the clothes: as, she kilts her gown. Craven Dialect, and Brockett's N. C. Words.

KIMBO, † adj. [aschembo, Italian. Dr.
Johnson. — See KAM. Serenius considers the Icel. kime, kimpell, ansa, the handle of a pool or jug, as likely to have suggested our word; and, in our old lexicography, the word is kembol, which Sherwood renders, in the following phrase, conformably to this etymon,
"with arms set on kembol, les bras courbez en anse." Others write our word
kembol.] Crooked; bent; arched.

The kimbles handle seen with bear-foot cars'd,
And never yet to table have been serv'd. Dryden, Virg.

He observed them edging towards one another to whisper; so that John was forced to sit with his arms a kimbol, to keep them under. Arbuthnot, John Bull.

KIMMEL. — See KEMELIN.

KIN, n. s. [cygn, Sax. lyn, Icel. kun, Gothick. Wicliffe writes our word lyn.]

1. Relation either of consanguinity or affinity.

You must use them with fit respects, according to the bonds of nature; but you are of kin, and so a friend to their persons, not to their errors.

The unhappy Palamons
Whom Theseus holds in bonds, and will not free,
Without a crime, except his kin to me. Dryden.

2. Relatives; those who are of the same race.

Tumultuous wars
Shall kin with kin, and kind with kind, confound. Shakespeare.

The father, mother, and the kin beside,
Were overcome by fury of the tide. Dryden.

3. A relation; once related.

Theo is the soul from God; so pagans say,
Which saw by nature's light her heavenly kind,
Naming her kin to God, and God's bright ray,
A citizen of heav'n, to earth confin'd. Daniels.

4. The same general class, though perhaps not the same species; thing related.

The burst,
And the ear-deafening voice of the oracle,
kin to Jove's thunder, so surpris'd my senses.

The odour of the fixed nitre is very languid;
but that which it discovers, being dissolved in a little hot water, is altogether differing from the slink of the other, being of kin to that of other alkalicate salts. Boyle.

5. A diminutive termination from kind, a child, Dutch; as, manikin, minikin,
thamkin, wilkin.

KIS, † adj. Of the same nature; congenial;
kindred.

Some kin afrey,
Cavie, or pride, or passion, or offence.

Chaucer, Ser. of Low's Tale.

KIND, adj. [from cynne, relation, Saxon.]

1. Benevolent; filled with general good-will.

By the kind gods, 'tis most ignobly done
To pluck me by the beard. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Some of the ancients, like kind-hearted men, have talked much of annual refrigeriums, or iotervals of punishment to the damned, as particularly on the great festivals of the resurrection and ascension. South.

2. Favourable; beneficent.

He is kind to the unthankful and evil.

St. Luke, vi. 35.

KIND-HEARTED, † adj. [kind and heart.]
Having great benevolence; a frequent colloquial expression; as, a kind-hearted man.

The sea at last from Colchian mountains seen,
Kind-hearted transport round their captain threw
The soldiers' fond embrace; o'erflow'd their eyes
With tender floods, and loo'd the general voice
To cries resounding loud — The sea, the sea!
Thomson, Liberty, P. II.

KIND, n. s. [kund, Gothick; from kun.
See KIN.]

1. Race; general class. Kind in Teutonic English answers to genus, and sort to species; though this distinction, in popular language, is not always observed.

Thus far we have endeavour'd to point to open of what nature and force laws are, according to their kind. Hobbes.

As when the total kind
Of birds, in orderly array on wing,
Came summon'd o'er Eden, to receive Their names of thee. Milton, P. L.

That both are animals,
I grant; but not rationalia;
For though they do agree in kind,
Specific difference we find. Hudibras.

God and nature do not principally concern themselves in the preservation of particulars, but kinds and companies. South, Serm.

He with his wife were only left behind
Of periah'd man; they two were human kind. Dryden.

Some acts of virtue are common to Heathens and Christians; but I suppose them to be performed by Christians, after a more sublime manner than among the Heathens; and even when they do not differ in kind from moral virtues, yet differ in the degrees of perfection. Arbuthnot.

He, with a hundred arts refin'd,
Shall stretch thy conquests o'er half the kind. Pope.

2. Particular nature.

No human laws are exempt from faults, since those that have been looked upon as most perfect to their kind, have been found to have so many.

Baker.

3. Natural state.

He did give the goods of all the prisoners unto those that had taken them, either to take them in kind, or compound for them. Bacon, Hen. VII.

The sea upon tillage was often levied in kind upon corn, and called decuma, or tithes.

Arbuthnot on Coins.

4. Nature; natural determination.

A monstrous cruelty 'gainst course of kind.

The skilful shepherd pr'd 'em certain wands,
And, in the doing of the deed of kind,
Ho stuck them up before the fuscous ewes.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.
Some of you, on pure instinct of nature,
Are led by kind 't admire your fellow creature.

Dryden.

5. Manner; way.

Send me your prisoners with the speediest means,
Or you shall hear in such a kind from me
As will displease you. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

This will encourage industrious improvements, because many will rather venture in that kind than take five in the hundred. Bacon, Ess.

6. Sort. It has a slight and unimportant sense.

Diogenes was asked, in a kind of scorn, What was the matter that philosophers haunted rich men, and not rich men philosophers? He answered, Because the one knew what they wanted, the other did not. Bacon.

K'INDED.* part. adj. [Cennan, Sax. to beget: from kind.] Begotten.

Though she still have worse
Her days are still, yet (weet thou) was not borne
Of bears and tygres, nor so salvage-mynded
As that, all the live men she scorned.
She yet forgets that she of men was kindred. Spenser, F. Q.

To K'INDLE.† v. a. [Probably from the Welsh cynne, or cynneu, to light, to set on fire; Serenian notices also the Goth. kinda, accendere, kyndell, candel. But our old word was without the d, as in Gower's Conf. Am. B. 7. "Fire kened." Then it became kindle, as in Barret's Alveary; and lastly kind.]

1. To set on fire; to light; to make to burn.

He will take thereof, and warm himself; yea, be kindled it and basketh himself. Is. xiv. 15.
I was not forgetful of those sparks, which some men's distempers formerly studied to kindle in parliaments. King Charles.

If the fire burns vigorously, it is no matter by what means it was at first kindled; there is the same force and the same reforming virtue in it, kindled by a spark from a flint, as if it were kindled from the sun. Smith.

2. To inflame the passions; to exasperate; to animate; to heat; to fire the mind.
I've been to you a true and humble wife;
At all times to your will conformable;
Ever in face to kindle your dislike. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

He hath kindled his wrath against me, and cometh out as one of his enemies. Job, xiv. 11.
Thus one by one kindling each other's fire,
Till all inflam'd, they all in one agree. Daniel.
Each was a cause alone, and all combin'd
To kindle vengeance in her haughty mind. Dryden.

3. [from cennan, Saxon.] To bring forth. It is used of some particular animals.
Are you native of this place?

— As the coney that you see dwells where she is kindled. Shakespeare.

To K'INDLE. v. n. To catch fire.
When thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burnt, neither shall the flame kindle upon thee. Is. xlii. 2.

K'INDLER.† n. s. [from kindle.] One that lights; one who inflames.

By what equity is a public rebellion commended in the kindlers of it, that it may be punished in the furtherers? Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Brenning of the Peace of Germany, (1635), p. 47.
Now is the time that rakes their revells keep,
Kindlers of riot, enemies of sleep. Gay.

K'INDLESS.* adj. [kind and less.] Unnatural.

Remorseless, treacherous, lecherous, kindless villain! Shakespeare, Hamlet.

K'INDLINESS.* n. s. [from kindly.]
1. Favour; affection; good will.
In kinde a father, but not kindness. Sackville's Gorboduc, (1561).

2. Natural disposition; natural course.
That mate kindness among the birds and flocks. Milton, Teirechordon.

Fruits and corn are much advanced by temper of the air and kindness of seasons.

Whitlock, Memoirs of the Engl. p. 457.
K'INDLY.† adj. [from kind; probably from the kind substantive.]

1. Homogeneous; congenial; kindred; of the same nature.

This competency I beseech God I may be able to digest into kindly juice, that I may grow thereby. Hammond.

These soft fires
Not only enlighten, but with kindly heat,
Of various influence, fount and warm,
Temper or nourish. Milton, P. L.

2. Natural; fit; proper.
The earth shall sooner leave her kindly skill. Spenser, F. Q.

The kindly fruits of the earth. Lutwyche.

3. The foregoing senses seem to have been originally implied by this word; but following writers, inattentive to its etymology, confounded it with kind.

4. Bland; mild; softening.
Through all the living regions dost thou move,
And scatter'st where thou goest, the kindly seeds of love. Dryden.

To heavens, from high the dewy nectar pour,
And in soft silence abase the kindly shower! Pope.

K'INDLY.† adv. [from kind.]

1. Benevolently; favourably; with good will.

Sir Thurio borrows his wit from your ladyship's looks, and spends what he borrows kindly in your company. Shakespeare.

— sometimes lay here in Corioli,
At a poor man's house: he us'd me kindly. Shakespeare, Coriol.

Be kindly affectioned to one another, with brotherly love, in honour preferring one another. Rom. xii. 10.

His griefs some pity, others blame;
The fatal cause all kindly cease. Prior.

Who, with less designing ends,
Kindler entertain their friends;
With good words, and countenance sprightly,
Serve to trust them all politely. Swift.

2. Naturally; fitly. [from kind, the substantive.]

Like as men sow, such corn needs must they reap;
And nature planted so in each degree,
That crabs like crabs will kindly crawl and creep. Mir. for Mag. p. 464.

This do, and do it kindly, gentle sire;
It will be pastime passing excellent. Shakespeare, Tim. of Shrew.

Examine how kindly the Hebrew manners of speech mix and incorporate with the English language. Adelman, Spec. No. 405.

K'INDNESS.† n. s. [from kind.]

1. Benevolence; beneficence; good will; favour, love.

If there be kindness, meekness, or comfort in her tongue, then is not her husband like other men. Eccles. xxxv. 25.

Old Letius professes he had an extraordinary kindness for several young people. Calver of Friendship.

Ever blest be Cytherea's shrine,
Since thy dear breast has felt an equal wound,
Since in thy kindness my desires are crown'd. Prior.

Love and inclination can be produced only by an experience or opinion of kindness to us. Rogers, Sermon.

2. Benefit conferred.

K'INDRED.† n. s. [from kin; cypnen, Saxon. Accordingly our old word was kinred. So Chaucer writes it; so our old lexicography gives it; and it continued to be used till late in the 17th century. "The boy is brought in by his father and kinred, in his new vest and turbant." Smith, Manners of the Turks, p. 40.]

1. Relation by birth or marriage; cognation; consanguinity; affinity.

Like her, of equal kindred to the throne,
You keep her conquests, and extend your own. Dryden.

2. Relation; suit.
An old mothy saddle, and the stirrups of no kindred. Shakespeare.

3. Relatives.
I think there is no man secure
But the queen's kindred. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

Nor needs thy juster title the foul guilt
Of eastern kings, who, to secure their reign,
Must have their brothers, sons, and kindred slain. Denham.

K'INDRED.† adj. Congenial; related; cognate.

From Tuscan Corium he claim'd his birth;
But after, when exempt from mortal earth,
From thence ascended to his kindred skies. Dryden.

A god.
KINE.† n. s. plur. from cow, that is, cowen.

To milk the kine,
E'er the milk-maid fine
Hath open'd her eye. B. Jonson.

A field I went amid the morning dew,
To milk my kine. Gay.

KING. n. s. [A contraction of the Teutonic word king, or cuning, the name of sovereign dignity. In the primitive tongue it signifies stout or valiant, the kings of most nations being, in the beginning, chosen by the people on account of their valour and strength. Veretegan.]

1. Monarch; supreme governor.
The great King of kings,
Hath in the table of his law commanded,
That thou shalt do no murder. Stark, Rich. III.

A substitute shines brightly as a king,
Until a king be by; and then his state
Empties itself, as doth an inland brook
Into the main of waters. Shakespeare, Merch. Ven.
True hope is swift, and flies with king's wings.
Kings it makes good, and meaner creatures kings. Shakespeare.

The king becoming grace,
At justice, verity, temperance, stability,
Honesty, perseverance, mercy, lawfulness,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no relieth of them. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Thus states were form'd; the name of king unknown.

Till common interest plac'd the sway in one;
'Twas virtue only, or in arms or arms,
Diffusing blessings, or averting harms,
The same which in a sire the sons obey'd,
A prince the father of a people made. Pope.

2. It is taken by Bacon in the feminine; as prince also is.

Ferdinand and Isabella, *king*s of Spain, recovered the great rich kingdom of Granada from the Moors.

3. A card with the picture of a king.

The king unseen
Lurk'd in her hand, and murr'd his captive queen. Pope.

4. KING at Arms, a principal officer at arms, that has the pre-eminence of the society; of whom there are three in number, viz. Garter, Norroy, and Cla. Philips.

A letter under his own hand was lately shewed me by sir William Dugdale, king of arms. Walton.
To KING. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To supply with a king. A word rather huddious.

England is so idly king'd,
Her sceptre so fantastically borne,
That four attenders her not. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

2. To make royal; to raise to royalty.
Sometimes am I a king;

Then treason makes me with myself a beggar,
And so I am; then crushing poverty
Persuades me, I was better when a king;
Then am I king'd again. Shakespeare, Rich. II.

KINGAPPLE. n. s. [king and apple.]
The kingapple is preferred before the jetting.

KINGCRAFT. n. s. [king and craft.] The art of governing. A word commonly used by king James.

KINGCROW. n. s. [king and crow.] The name is properly, according to Gerard, king-cob. A flower; crowfoot.

June is drawn in a mantle of dark grass green,
And upon his head a garland of berries, kingcrops,
and maidenhair. Peacock.
Fair is the kingcrop that in meadow blows,
Fair is the daisy that beside her grows. Gay.

KINGDOM. n. s. [king and dom.]
1. The dominion of a king; the territories subject to a monarch.

You're welcome,
Most learned, reverend air, into our kingdom.

Shakespeare.
Moses gave unto them the kingdom of Sihon,
king of the Amorites, and the kingdom of Og,
king of Bashan. Numb. xxiii. 33.

2. A different class or order of beings. A word chiefly used among naturalists.
The animal and vegetable kingdoms are so nearly joined, that if you take the lowest of one, and the highest of the other, there will scarce be perceived any difference. Locke.

3. A region; a tract.
The wat'ry kingdom is so bar

To stop the foreign spirits; but they come,
And o'er a brook, to see fair Portia. Shakespeare.

KINGDOMEN.* adj. [from kingdom.] Proud of kingly power. Not in use.
Kingdom'd Achilles in comotion rages,
And batters down himself.

Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

KINGLIKE.† adj. [from king.]
KINGLY.

1. Royal; sovereign; monarchical.
There we'll sit,
Bailing in large and ample empery,
O'er France and all her almost kingly dukedoms.

Shakespeare.
I, kinglike, sat, with armed troops inelod'd.

Shelley, Job. p. 42.
Yet this place
Had been thy kingly seat, and here thy race,
From all the ends of peopled earth, had come
To reverence thee. Dryden, State of Innocence.

In Spain, a kingly government, though the people were perfectly free, the administration was in the two kings and the señor.

The cities of Greece, when they drove out their tyrannical kings, either chose others from a new family, or abolished the kingly government, and became free states. Swift.

2. Belonging to a king; suitable to a king.
Why leest thou with the vile
In loathsome beds, and leav'st the kingly couch
A watch-case to a common larum bell?

Shakespeare.
Then shalt thou give me with thy kingly hand,
What husband to thy power I will command.

Shakespeare.
3. Noble; august; magnificent.
He was not born to live a subject life, each action of his bearing in it majesty, such a kingly au-tumentation, such a kingly magnificence, such a kingly heart for enterprises. Sidney.

I am far better born than the king;
More like a king, more kingly in thy thoughts.

Shakespeare.
KINGLY. adv. With an air of royalty;
with superiour dignity.

Adam bow'd low; he, kingly, from his state Laid 'd not. Milton, P. L.

His hat, which never rail'd to human pride;
Walker with rev'rence touch, and laid aside;
Low bow'd the rest, he, kingly, did but nod.

Pope, Dunciad.
KINGSCIVIL. n. s. [king and civil.] A scrofulous distemper, in which the glands are ulcerated, commonly believed to be cured by the touch of the king.

Some eyes are frequently a species of the kingscivil, and take their beginning from vicious humors inflaming the tunica adnata. Wiernan, Surgery.

KINGSHIP. n. s. [from king.] Royalty;
monarchy.

They designed and proposed to me the ow-modelling of sovereignty and kingship, without any reality of power, or without any necessity of subjection and obedience. King Charles.

We know how successful the late usurper was, while his army believed him real to his soul against kingship; but when they found out the imposture, upon his aspiring to the same himself, he was presently deserted and opposed by them, and overable to crown his usurped greatness with the addition of that title which he passionately thirsted after. South.

KINGSPEAR. n. s. [asphodelus.] A plant.
KINGSTONE. n. s. [squatinia.] A fish.

Ainsworth.
To KINK.* v. n. [kichen, kinchen, Teut.
difficulus spirare.] To labour for breath, as in the hooping-cough. A northern word. Ray, Grose, and Brockett.

KINK.* n. s. A fit of coughing, or a convulsive fit of laughter. Grose, and Brockett's N. C. Words. Hence KINK-COUGH, or CHICKCOUGH; and KINKHAUST, which see.

those who are of the same family.

Those lords, since their first grants of those lands,
have bestowed them amongst their kinfolks.

Shakespeare on Ireland.
My kinfolk have failed, and my familiar friends forgotten me. Job, xix. 14.

KINSMAN. n. s. [kin and man.] A man of the same race or family.

The jury he made to be chosen out of their nearest kinsmen, and their judges he made of their own fathers. Spenser on Ireland.

Both fair, and both of royal blood they seem'd,
Whom kinsmen to the crown the bairds dream'd.

Dryden.
Let me stand excluded from my right, Robb'd of my kinsman's arms, who first appear'd
in fight. Dryden, Fob.

There is a branch of the Medici in Naples:
the head of it has been owned as a kinsman by the great duke, and 'tis thought will succeed to his dominions. Addison on Italy.

KIN'SWOMAN. n. s. [kin and woman.] A female relation.

A young noble lady, near kinswoman to the fair
Helen, queen of Carthage, was made thither.

The duke was as much in love with wit as he was with his kinswoman. Dennis's Letters.

KINTAL.* See QUINTAL.
KIPPER.* adj. [of unknown etymology.]
A term applied to salmon when unfit to be taken, and to the time when they are so considered.

That no salmon be taken between Graveend and Henley upon Thames in kipper time, viz. between the Inventure of St. Cross (2d May) and the Epiphany. Stat. 1701, 50 Edw. III. Court.

The salmon, after spawning, become very poor and thin; and are called kipper.

Pennant, Zool. iii. 242.
KIRN.* See KERN.

KIRK. n. s. [Cyprae, Saxon; kyrk, Gr.]
An old word for a church, yet retained in Scotland.

Honour they lusten the poets to dignify,
And all the kirk pillars ere day-light,
With Hawthorn buds and sweet eglantine.

Spenser, Shep. Cal.
Nor is it all the nation has these spots,
There is a church as well as kirk of Scotland.

What one party thought to rivet by the Scots, that the other contents, despising the kirk government and discipline of the kirk. King Charles.

KIRKMAN.* n. s. [Kirk and man.] One of the church of Scotland.

It [the king's declaration] in the month of July 1637, was publicly read in the great church of Edinburgh. The kirkmen took fire at it; nor wanted there some in England to fan the flame.

Vindicia Carolinae, (1694,) p. 37.
KIRTLE.† n. s. [Cyprae, Saxon; kiortell, Iceland. Of old we find the same term applied to the gowns worn by the men.

Thus Franco-Goth. "Ung altre lui vestira un kyrtel du rouge tartarin." V.
Du Cange, and Callander's Anc. Scot.
Poems, p. 106. It was indeed the name of the surcoat at the creation of knights of the garter. A gown; a jacket; a petticoat; a mantle; a cloak.

Daniel's text.
Right young, and full of semelyhood,
In kirtle, and none other weeder.

Chaucer, Rom. R. 778.
Yield he was full unal and properly
All to a kirtle of light wight.

Chaucer, Mill. Tale.
All in a kirtle of discoloured ray
He clothed was. Spenser, F. Q.

What stuff will have a kirtle of? I shall receive money on Thursday; thou shalt have a cap tomorrow. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Thy gowns, thy shoes, thy beds of roses,
Thy cap, thy kirtle, and thy posies,
Soon break, soon wither, soon forgotten,
In folly ripe, in reason rotten. Marlow.

KI'RYLED.* adj. [from kirl.] Wearing a kirtle.

The flowery-kirtled Naidens,
Culling their potent herbs and baleful drugs.
Milton, Comus.

To KISS.* v. a. [Saxo, cýran; Su. Goth. kyssa; Welsh, cusan; uau uau, Greek. Thus kiss is kiss, in some parts of the north of England. Chaucer writes it kesa.]

1. To touch with the lips.
But who those ruddy lips can kiss,
Which blessed still themselves do kiss.
Sidney.

He took
The bride about the neck, and kiss'd her lips,
With such a clamorous smack, that at the parting
All the church echoed. Shakspeare, T. of the Shrew.
Their lips were four red roses on a stalk,
And in their summer beauty kiss'd each other. Shakspeare.

2. To treat with fondness.
The hearts of princes kiss obedience,
So much they love it; but to stubborn spirits,
They swell and grow as terrible as storms. Shakspeare.

3. To touch gently.
The moon shines bright: in such a night as this,
When the sweet wind did gently kiss the trees,
And they did make no noise. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

KISS. n. s. [from the verb.] Salute given by joining lips.

What sense had I of her soul's hours or lust?
I found not Cassio's kisses on her lips. Shakspeare, Othello.

Upon my livid lips bestow a kiss:
O'ery not the dead, they feel not bliss! Dryden.

KISSER.* n. s. [from kiss.] One that kisses. Sherwood.

KISSINGCOMFIT.* n. s. [kissing and comfit.] Perfumed sugar-plums, to make the breath sweet.

The gittern and the kit the wandering fiddlers like.
'Tis kept in a case fitted to it, almost like a dancing master's kit. Grove, Mus.

3. A small wooden vessel, in which Newcastle salmon is sent up to town. [kitte, kit, Dutch.]

4. A milking pail, like a churn, with two ears, and a cover. [kitte, Dutch, Ray; kulle, "tonnula scis circiter sextarios continens." Serenius.]

5. A set or company; generally in a contemptuous sense, "the whole kit of them." Wilbraham, Cheshire Gloss. All the whole kit, whether applied to persons or things. Craven Dialect. A tribe: a collection; a gang. Jennings, W. Country Words.

KI'TCAT.* adj.

1. Denoting a club of whigs at the beginning of the last century, of which Addison, Steele, and other distinguished wits were members; so named from Christopher Cat, a pastry cook, who excelled in mutton pies, by whom the club was served with this part of the entertainment.

You have been for some years past laying the foundation of new schemes in your kit-cat club, call'd a head clubs, jantos, and other infernal cabals of this kind.

Acc. of Tom Whig, Esq. (1710.) p. 31.

Our modern celebrated clubs are founded upon eating and drinking.—The kit-cat itself is said to have taken its original from a mutton-pie.

Addison, Spect. No. 9. (1710-11.)

2. Denoting a portrait, somewhat larger than a three quarter's, and less than a half length; so called from the room in which portraits of the kit-cat club at first were placed, being not sufficiently lofty to admit half lengths.

There is a kit-cat size of St. Ignatius holding a crucifix, which is faint, but sweetly done.

Drummonds, Trav. p. 81.

KITCHEN. n. s. [kegin, Welsh; keg, Flemish; cýcene, Sax.; cuisine, French; cucina, Italian; kyshen, Erse.] The room in a house where the provisions are cooked.

These being culpable of this crime, or favourers of the same, which are such by men their kitchens are sometimes amended, will not suffer any such statue to pass. Spenser on Ireland.

Can we judge it a thing seemingly any man to go about the building of an house to the God of heaven, with no other appearance than if his end were to rear up a kitchen or a parlour for his own use.

Hooker.
He was taken into service in his court to a base office in his kitchen; so that he turned a branch that had worn a crown.

We see no new-built palaces aspire,
No kitchens emulate the vestal fire. Pope.

To KI'TCHEN.* v. a. [from the noun.] To use thrifly. A northern word. Grose. Still in use as a Scottish expression in the sense of to save, to be sparing of. See Dr. Jamieson's Supplement. in voce.

KITCHENGARDEN. n. s. [kitchen and garden.] Garden in which esculent plants are produced.

Gardens, if planted with such things as are fit for food, are called kitchengardens.

A kitchengarden is a more pleasant sight than the finest orangery. Spectator.

KI'TCHENMAID.* n. s. [kitchen and maid.] A maid under the cookmaid, whose business is to clean the utensils of the kitchen.

Did not her kitchenmaid rail, taunt, and scorn me? Shakspeare, Com. of Err.

KI'TCHENSTUFF. n. s. [kitchen and stuff.] The fat of meat scummed off the pot, or gathered out of the dripping-pan.

As a thrifty wench scrapes kitchenstuff,
And barreling the droppings and the muff
Of wasting candles, which in thirty year,
Religiously kept, perchance buys wedding cheer. Donne.

An instead of kitchenstuff some cry
A gospel preaching ministry. Hudibras.

KI'TCHENWENCH. n. s. [kitchen and wench.] Scullion; maid employed to clean the instruments of cookery.

Laura to his lady was but a kitchenwench. Shakspeare.

Roasting and boiling leave to the kitchenwench. Shakspeare.

KI'TCHENWORK. n. s. [kitchen and work.] Cookery; work done in the kitchen.

KITE. n. s. [cýra, Saxon; milvus.]

1. A bird of prey that infests the farms, and steals the chickens.

More prey that the eagle should be mew'd,
While hies and buzzards prey at liberty. Shakspeare.

The heron, when she soareth high, so as sometimes she is seen to pass over a cloud, sheereth winds; but hies, flying aloft, she wail dry weather.

A leopard and a cat seem to differ just as a kite doth from an eagle. Grove.

2. A name of reproach denoting rapacity. Denoted hies; thus hies. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

3. A fictitious bird made of paper.

A man may have a great estate conveyed to him; but if he will needs burn, or childishly make paper kites of his deeds, he forfeits his title with his evidence. Grove of the Tongue.

KITE.* n. s. [qued, Su. Goth. quidr, Icel. uicr, Gr. the belly. Craven Dialect.] In the north of England, the belly.

KITCHENFOOT. n. s. A plant. Ainsworth.

KYTH.* n. s. [cýte, knowledge, Saxon; cýth, to make known.] Acquaintance. Bullock. Kith and kin, friends and relations. A northern expression. Brockett.

First she made hym the fleece to wyne;
And after that from kith and kyne,
With great treasure with him she staye.

KYTLING.* n. s. [catulus, Lat.] A whelp; the young of all beasts. Barret, Alv. 1580. Now, a young cat or kitten.

Whether go you now?
What, to buy gingerbread, or to draw kiddings? B. Jonson, Fur.

KITTEN. n. s. [kattken, Dutch.] It is probable that the true singular is kit, the diminutive of cat, of which the old plural was kittens, or young cats, which was in time taken for the singular, like chicken. A young cat.

That a mare will scoot down than an horse, is not experience; nor is the maw observed in the drawing of whelps and kittens. Brown, Vulg. Err. It was scratched in playing with a kitten. Witniam.

Helen was just alight into bed;
Her eyebrows on the toilet lay,
Away the kittens with them fled,
As fies belonging to her pée. Prior.

To KI'TTEN.* v. n. [from the noun.] To bring forth young cats.

So it would have done
At the same season, if your mother's cat
Had kitten'd, though yourself had ne'er been born. Shakspeare.

The eagle timbered upon the top of a high oak, and the cat kittened in the hollow trunk of it. I. Estrange.

KITTYWAKE.* n. s. A bird of the gull kind; common among the rocks of Flamborough head.

To KI'TTLE.* v. a. [Irish, Saxon, titillare.] To tickle. Common in the north of England. It is also in Sherwood's old dictionary.

KITTLE.* adj. [keteligh, Teut. [Uncertain; fickle; difficult: unsafe: applied to the weather, to work, to a horse, &c. A northern word. Grose, Craven Dial. and Brockett.

KITTLISH.* adj. [from kittle.] Ticklish. A northern word. Grose.

KIVE.* n. s. The tub-hole is a hollow place in the ground, over which the kive, (marshing-fat) stands. Kelly's Scotch Proverbs, p. 300. cited by Dr. Jamieson, in his Scottish dictionary; who says, "I have not met with this word any where else." It appears, however, to be of English usage, and by an old author of great merit.

Lime, or calke which is strong lime, is used to accelerate the fermentation of the woad, which, by the help of the same pot-ash and warm liquors kept always so, in three or four days will come to work like a kive of beer, and will have a blue or rather greenish froth or flowry upon it; answering to the yeast of the kine.

See W. Petty, Hist. of Dying, Spral's H.R.Soc. p. 301.

TO KIVER.* v. a. To cover. See TO COVER. Mr. Pegge, in his Anecdotes of the English language, gives a catalogue of words, of which the use and pronunciation are deformed by the natives of London. Among these are kiver for cover; which, however, he might have defended by Chaucer's employment of kever, and by Huloet's introduction into his old dictionary of kiver, for the more modern cover.

TO KIZEN, or KIZZEN.* v. a. [gizen, Icel. hisco. Craven Dial.] To parch; to dry up. A northern word. Grose, and Craven Dialect.

TO KICK.† v. n.

1. To make a small sharp noise. [from clack.]
2. In Scotland it denotes to pilfer, or steal away suddenly with a snatch. Dr. Johnson.—It has the sense also of to catch up, to snatch, in the north of England.

TO KNAIB. v. a. [knaepen, Dutch; knaap, Erse.] To bite. Perhaps properly to bite something brittle, that makes a noise when it is broken; so as that knaib and knap may be the same.

I had much rather be knaibing crabs, without fear, in my own hole, than be mistress of the world with cares.

L'Esrange.
As no was wishing, in a hard winter, for a little warm weather, and a mouthful of fresh grass to knaib upon.

TO KNAIBLE. v. n. [from knaib.] To bite idly, or wantonly; to nibble. This word is perhaps found no where else.

Horses will knaib at walls, and rats gnaw iron.

Brown.

KNACK.† n. s. [cnapping, and knick, Saxon. Dr. Johnson.—The word seems to have been formed, as Mr. Tyrwhitt observes, from the knacking or snapping, of the fingers used by jugglers. See Cotgrave in V. Niquet, viz. "a knick, klick, knip with the teeth or fingers; a trifle, bauble, matter of small value, &c."

And in V. MATASSINER des mains, viz. "to move, knack, or waggle the fingers, like a juggler, player, &c."]

1. A little machine; a petty contrivance; a toy.

The more quaint knackers that they make.

These knacks were brought first into England by them.

When I was young, I was woot

To load my she with knacks: I would have runack'd

The pedlar's silken treasury, and have pour'd it To her acceptance.

For thee, fond boy,

If I may ever know thou do'st but sigh

That thou no more shalt see this knack, as never I mean thou shalt, we'll bar thee from success.

Shakespeare.

This cap was moulded on a porrieger,

A velvet dish; &c, fir, 'tis lewd and filthy;

Why 'tis a cockle, or a walnut shell,

A knack, a toy, a trick, a baby's cap.

But 't is not presumption to write verse to thee.

Who make the better poems of the two?

For all these pretty knacks that you compose,

Alas! what are they but poems to please! Denham.

He expounded both his pockets,

And found a watch, with rings and lockets;

A copper-plate, with almanacs;

Eograid upon't, with other knacks.

Hudibras.

2. A readiness; an habitual facility; a lucky dexterity.

I'll teach you the knacks

Of eating of flax,

And out of their noses

Draw ribbands and ponies.

The knack of fast and loose passes with foolish people for a turn of wit; but they are not aware of all this while of the desperate consequences of an ill bias.

There is a certain knack in conversation that gives a good grace by the manner and address.

L'Esrange.

Knaves, who in full assemblies have the knack Of turning truth to lies, and white to black.

Dejden.

My author has a great knack at remarks: in the end he makes another, about our refining in controversy, and coming nearer and nearer to the church of Rome.

The dean was furious in his time,

And had a kind of knack at rhyme.

Swift.

3. A nice trick.

For how should equal colours do the knack?

Cameleons who can paint in white and black?

Pope.

TO KNACK.† v. n. [knacken, Teut. frangere. And Barret defines our knack, "to break a nut." Alv. 1580.]

1. To make a sharp quick noise, as when a stick breaks, or a nut is cracked; to clink.

If they can hear their heads knack upon each other.

Sp. Hall, Quo Vadis.

2. To speak finely or affectingly.

North.

Grose.

KNACKER.† n. s. [from knack.]

Barret, and Sherwood.

TO KNAPPLE.† v. n. [from knapp.] To break off with a sharp quick noise. Dr. Johnson from Ainsworth. Cotgrave defines it "to nibble or eat like a squirrel; to gnaw." V. GRIGNOTER.

KNAPPRY.* adj. [from knapp.] Full of knaps or hillocks.

Huvel.

KNA'PSACK.† n. s. [from knappen, Germ. to eat. But see SNAPSACK.] The bag which a soldier carries on his back; a bag of provisions.

The constitutions of this church shall not be repealed, till I see more religious motives than soldiers carry in their knapsacks. King Charles.

If you are for a merry jaunt, I'll try for once who can foot it farthest: there are bedges in summer, and barns in winter: I with my knapsack, and you with your bottle at your back; we'll leave honour to madmen, and riches to knaves, and travel till we come to the ridge of the world. Dryden.

KNA'PWEED. n. s. [jacca, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

KNAR.† n. s. [knor, German; but our word is more frequently written knur; though the adjective knarry, hitherto unnoticed, is very old. See KNUR. "A bunch or knor in a tree," is noticed in our lexicography. See Wythall's Dict. 1568.] A hard knot.

A cake of scurf lies baked on the ground, And prickly stings instead of trees are found; Or words with knots and knars deform'd and odd, Headless the most, and hideous to behold, Dryden.

KNA'PLED.† adj. [from knar.] Knotted. See GNARLED. It should be knarled.

KNA'RRY.† adj. [from knar.] Knotty; stubby. Cockeram, and Bullokar.

Knotty knarry barks trees old Of stubble sharpe, and hideous to behold. Chancer, An. Tale.

This knarry club — the which no hand shall ever tame. Transl. of Seneca, (1581), fol. 213.

KNA'VE.† n. s. [knava, Saxon, knave, German; knave, knape, Icelandic. All these have reference both to child and servant, which our word originally denoted. Mr. Tooke's opinion that the Saxon knapa, knave, was probable napa, i. e. ne-napa, genapa, qui nihil habet, (who has nothing), the third person singular of nabhan, i. e. ne-habban, is not likely to be received.]

1. A boy; a male or man-child. Wicliffe, Rev. xii. 5.

Sche bare a knave-child. Wicliffe, Rev. xii. 5. He had of children young two; Fixus the first was of tho, A knave-child, right faine withall! A daughter eke, the whiche men call Hele. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.

2. A servant. Both these are obsolete. For lord and knave is all one way, When they be bore and when they dey. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.

For as the moon the eye doth please With gentle beams not hurting sight, Yet hath sir sun the greater praise, Because from him doth come her light: So if my man must praise have, What then must I that keep the knave? Sidney.

He eats and drinks with his domestic slaves; A verrier busy than any of his knave. Dryden.

3. A petty rascal; a scoundrel; a dishonest fellow.

Most men rather brooke their being reputed knaves, than thus for honesty be accounted fools; knave, in the mean time, passing for a name of credit. Soph.

When both plaintiff and defendant happen to be crafty knaves, their equity against both. L'Entrague.

An honest man may take a knave's advice; But idiots only may be cozen'd twice. Dryden.

See all our fools aspiring to be knaves. Pope.

4. A card with a soldier painted on it. For 'twill return, and turn 't account, If we are brought in play upon 't, Or but by casting knave get in, What pow'r can hinder us to win! Hudibras.

KNA'VERY. n. s. [from knave.] 1. Dishonesty; tricks; petty villany.

Here's no knavery! See, to beguile the old folks, how the young folks lay their heads together. Shakespeare.

If I thought it were not a piece of honesty to acquaint the king withal, I would do't: I hold it the more knavery to conceal it. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

The cunning courtier should be slighted too, Who with dull knavery makes so much ado; Till the shrewd fool, by thriving too too fast, Like Æsop's fox, becomes a prey at last. Dryden.

2. Mischievous tricks or practices. In the following passage it seems a general term for any thing put to an ill use, or perhaps for trifling things of more cost than use.

We'll revel it as bravely as the best, With amber bracelets, beads, and all this knave's Shakespeare.

KNA'VISH. adj. [from knave.] 1. Dishonest; wicked; fraudulent.

The foolish to conceal it at all, and knaveish to do so with dalliance. Pope, Let.

2. Waggish; mischievous. Here she comes curst and sad; Cupid is a knaveish lad, Thus to make poor females mad. Shakespeare.

KNA'VISHLY.† adv. [from knaveish.] 1. Dishonestly; fraudulently.

2. Waggishly; mischievously. Huloet, and Sherrwood.

It is ordinary for hosts to be knaveishly witty. Gayton, on D. Quix. p. 8.

KNA'VISHNESS.† n. s. [from knaveish.] State or quality of being knaveish.

Sherrwood. To KNAW.† Sometimes written for gnaw. See also To BEKNAW.

KNED.† v. a. [kneden, Saxon; kneden, Dutch. "Ab antiq. knēt, mass. Wachter. Potius autem id deductum iverim ab knæa, vel naeda, factitare, movere." Serenius. The Saxon gnan also is to knead, as well as carban.] To beat or mangle any stuff or substance. It is seldom applied in popular language but to the act of making bread.

Here's yet in the word hereafter, the knœding, the making of the cakes, and the beating of the oven. Shakespeare.

It is a lump, where all beasts kneaded be. Wisdom makes him an ark where all agree. Dennis.

Thus kneaded up with milk the new-made man His kingdom o'er his kindred world began; Till knowledge misapp'd, misunderstood, And pride of empire, sour'd his balmy blood. Dryden.

One paste of flesh on all degrees bestow'd, And kneaded up alike with moist'ning blood. Dryden.

Prometheus, in the kneading up of the heart, seasoned it with some furious particles of the lion. Addison, Spect.

No man ever reapt his corn, Or from the oven drew his bread, Ere kinds and bakers yet were born, That taught them both to sow and knead. Prior.

The cake she kneaded was the savory meat. Prior.

KNE'ADER.† n. s. [from knœd.] A baker. Huloet, and Sherrwood.

KNE'ADINGTROUGH.† n. s. [from knœd and trough.] A trough in which the paste of bread is worked together.

Progs shall come into thy knœdingtroughs. Ezod. viii. 3.

KNEE.† n. s. [knim, Goth. cnœp, Sax. knœ, Dutch. Mr. Home Tooke believes the Saxon hnan, and the Gothic hneian, to be same verb, meaning to bow, to bend; and the substantives to have been thence formed. A similar opinion appears to have long before been entertained by Serenius, who notices the Gothic verb in his illustration of our substantive; adding, however, the Icel. hnie, hneia, the knee, "vox antiquissima."]

1. The joint of the leg where the leg is joined to the thigh. The royal father

Was a most staid king: the queen that bore these Offspring upon her knees than on her feet, Died every day she lived. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Scotch knies is a kind of strong nourishment, made of the knees and sinews of beef long boiled. Bacon.

I beg and clasps thy knees. Milton, P. L. Wornied with length of ways, worn out with toil,

To lay down, and leaning on her knees, Invok'd the cause of all her miseries; And cast her languishing regards above, For help from heaven, and her ungrateful Jove. Dryden.

2. A knee is a piece of timber growing crooked, and so cut that the trunk and branch make an angle. Morson, Mech. Exercises.

Such dispositions are the fittest timber to make great politicians of: like to knœ timber, that is good for ships that are to be tossed, but not for building houses, that shall stand firm. Bacon.

To KNÉE.† v. a. [from the noun.] To supplicate by kneeling.

Go, you that banish'd him, A mile before his tent, fall down and knœ The way into his mercy. Shakespeare, Coriol.

Return with her! Why, the blood-blooded French, that downless took Our young born: I could as well be brought To knœ his throne, and, squire-like, pension beg. Shakespeare.

KNEED.† adj. [from knœ.] 1. Having knees: as, in-kneed, or out-kneed.

2. Having joints: as, kneed grass. KNEED'EP.† adj. [knœ and deep.] 1. Rising to the knees.

The ground in fourteen days is dry, and grass knœdeep within a month. Milton, Brief Hist. of Masscus.

2. Sunk to the knees. Gone already; Inch thick, knœdeep! Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

The country peasant mediates no harm, When clad with skins of beasts to keep him warm; In winter weather unconcern'd he goes, Almost knœdeep through mire in clumy shoes. Dryden.

KNEE-CROOKING.† adj. [knœ and crook.] Obsequious.

Many a dutcons and knee-crooking knave.

KNEEDGRASE. n. s. [graven geniculatum.] Shakespeare, Othello.

An herb.

KNEEHOLM.† n. s. [agapifolium.] The name of a plant, called also kneeholly.
To KNEEL. v. n. [from knee.] To perform the act of genuflection; to bend the knee.

When thou dost ask me blessing, I'll kneel down.

And ask of thee forgiveness. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
Ere I was risen from the place that stew'd down,
My duty kneeling, came a reeking post
Stew'd in his haste, half breathing, panting forth
From Goneril, his mistress, salutation.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.
A certain man kneeling down to him, said,
Lord, have mercy upon my son; for he is lunatick.
St. Matt. xviii. 14.

As soon as you are dressed, kneel and say the Lord's prayer. Bp. Taylor, Guide to Devotion.

KNEELER.* n. s. [from kneel.] One who shows obeisance by kneeling.

In this part of the church,—stood the class of the penitents, who were called kneelers, because at their going out, they fell down upon their knees before the bishop, who laid his hands upon them.
Levis, Consecration of Churches, p. 95.

KNEEPAN. n. s. [knee and pan.] A little round bone about two inches broad, pretty thick, a little convex on both sides, and covered with a smooth cartilage on its fore side. It is soft in children, but very hard in those of riper years: it is called patella or mola. Over it passes the tendon of the muscles which extend the leg, to which it serves as a pulley.
Quincy.

The kneepan must be shewn, with the knitting thereof, by a fine shadow underneath the joint.
Freeman on Drawing.

KNEETIMBER.* n. s. See the second sense of KNEE.

We see how the shipwright doth make use of kneetimber, and other cross-grained pieces, as well as of straight and even, for framing a goodly vessel to ride on Neptune's back. Hemans, Lett. iv. 4.

KNEETIMBURY. n. s. [knee and tribune.] Genuflection; worship or obeisance shewn by kneeling.

Receive from us
Kneetimber, yet unpaid prostration vile.
Milton, P. L.

KNELL.† n. s. [cnill, cnell, Welsh, the ringing of bells, a passing-bell; cnill, Sax. from cnyllan, to strike a bell, to ring a bell. Some refer these words, as well as knoll, to the Latin nola, a little bell, which had its name from Nola, a town in Campania, in which they are pretended to have first been invented, or to have been first used for pious purposes.] The sound of a bell rung at a funeral.

I would not wish thee to a fairer death,
And so his knell is knell'd. Shakspeare.

Sea-nymphs hourly ring his knell:
Hark, now I hear them. Shakspeare, Temp.
When he was brought again to the bar, he heard
His knell rung out, his judgement, he was stir'd
With such an agony, he went extremely.

All those motions, which we saw,
As but as ice, which crackles at a flame:
Or as a lute, which in moist weather rings
Her knell alone, by cracking of her strings.
Dennie.

Unhappy slave, and pupil to a bell,
Which his hours work, as well as hours do tell;
Unhappy till the last, the kind releasing knell.
Cowley.

At dawn poor Stella danc'd and sung;
The amorous youth around her bow'd:
At night her fatal knell was rung;
I saw and kindl'd her in her shroud. Prior.

KNOW. The preterite of know.

KNICK-KNACK.* A colloquial term, meaning any trifle or toy. See the first sense of KNACK.

KNIFE.† n. s. plur. knives. [Comp. Saxon: knif, Su. kniv, Dan. knif, Fr. knif, old Teut. both a knife and a sword, Kilian; knif, Icel. knepa, to cut. Serenius. Some cite the Greek ἐπίς, a sword. It is to the Celtic cnif, to shear, however, that we may trace these words.]

1. An instrument edged and pointed, wherewith meat is cut, and animals killed.

Blind pow'rs, forbid thy tender life
Should bleed upon a barbarous knife. Crusoe.

The sacred priests with ready knives berave
The beast of life, and in full bowls receive
The streaming blood. Dryden, En.

Ev'n in his sleep he starts, and fears the knife,
And, trembling, in his arms takes his accomplice Dryden.

Pain is not in the knife that cuts us; but we call it cutting in the knife, and pain only in ourselves. Watts.

2. A sword or dagger.

The time appointed comes Approached is, when knife
Of manly knight must ride him fame,
And end the deadly strife.

Elblen, Hist. of Paint. and Carven, b. I. M. 6.
The red-cross knight was slain with paynim knife. Spenser, F. Q.

Come, thick night,
And pall thee in the dunest smoke of hell,
That my keen knife see not the wound it makes. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

KNIGHT.† n. s. [cnicht, Sax. knecht, Germ. a servant or pupil, Dr. Johnson.—The Saxon word originally means a boy, cnilt, and cnecht; cniltcub; cniltcub, childhood. Wachter and Hre consider it as from the same stock with cnapa, or cnapa, a little boy. See KNAVE. Dr. Jamieson refers it to cneo, generation, which cnecht nearly resembles. The word next signified a servant, like knave; and often a military one, "I am a man ordeynid under power, and have knights under me," Wicliffe, St. Matt. viii. Mr. H. Tooke considers it as the participle cnjrt, from cnjrtan, to bind, un attached.]

1. A man advanced to a certain degree of military rank. It was anciently the custom to knight every man of rank or fortune, that he might be qualified to give challenges to fight in the lists, and to perform feats of arms. In England knighthood confers the title of sir: as, sir Thomas, sir Richard. When the name was not known, it was usual to say sir knight.

The same knight's own sword this is of yore.
Which Merlin made. Spenser, F. Q.

Sir knight, if knight thou be,
Abandon this forestalled place. Spenser, F. Q.

When every case in law is right,
No squire in debt, and no poor knight.

This knight; but yet why should I call him knight,
To give imperty to this reverent site?

No squire with knight did better fit
In parts, in manners, and in wit. Hudibras.

2. Shakspeare uses it of a female, and it must therefore be understood in its original meaning, pupil or follower.

Pardon, goddess of the night,
Those that slew thy virgin knight;
For the which, with songs of woe,
Round about her tomb they go. Shakspeare.

3. A champion.

He suddenly uttered the poke,
Which out of it sent such a smoke,
As ready was them all to choke,
So grievous was the poller;
So that the knights each other lost,
And stood as still as any post. Dryden.

Did I for this my country being
To help their knight against their king,
And raise the first sedition? Dryden.

KNIGHT ERRANT. [chivalier errant, Fr.] A wandering knight: one who went about in quest of adventures.

Like a bold knight errant did proclaim Combat to all, and bore away the dame. Dennie.

The ancient errant knights
Won all their mistresses in lights;
They cut whole glants into fritters,
To put them into am'rous twitters. Hudibras.

KNIGHT ERANTRY. [from knight errant.] The character or manners of wandering knights.

That which with the vulgar passes for courage
Is a brutish sort of knight errantry, seeking out Needless encounters. Norris.

KNIGHT OF THE POST.† A hireling evidence: a knight dubbed at the whipping-post, or pillory.

I may not term them men, if there be such as I Have heard to be, who will not let to swear upon a booke, and that before any judge, being byed thurranto for money. And such are called by the names of knights of the post, more fit for the gallows than to live in a commonwealth where Christ is professed. Knight's Test of Truth, (1580.) fol. 29. b.

There are knights of the post, and holy cheats enough, to swear the truth of the broadest contradictions, where pious frauds shall give them an extraordinary call. South.

KNIGHT OF THE SHIRE. One of the representatives of a county in parliament: he formerly was a military knight, but now any man having an estate in land of six hundred pounds a year is qualified.

To KNIGHT. v. a. [from the noun.] To create one a knight, which is done by the king, who gives the person kneeling a blow with a sword, and bids him rise up sir.

Favours came thick upon him: the next St. George's day he was knighted. Wotton.

The lord protector knighted the king; and immediately the king stood up, took the sword from the lord protector, and dubbed the Lord mayor of London knight. Hayward.

The hero William, and the martyr Charles,
One knighted Blackmore, and one pension'd Quaries. Pope.

KNIGHTHOOD. n. s. [from knight.] The character or dignity of a knight.

The sword which Merlin made,
For that his nourling, when he knighthood swore,
Therewith to don his foon eternal smart.

Spenser, F. Q.
Speak truly on thy knighthood, and thine oath,
And so defend thee Heaven and thy valour.

Shakespeare.
Is this the air, whose waste wife to win,
A knighthood bought, to go a wooing in?

B. Jonson.
If you needs must write, write Camar's praise,
You'll gain at least a knighthood, or the bays.

Pope.
KNIGHTLESS. adj. [from knigh.] Unbecoming a knight. Obsolete.

Arise, thou cursed mercant,
That hast with knights guile, and treacherous trains,

Fair knighthood foully shamed. Spenser, F. Q.

KNIGHTLINESS. n. s. [from knighthly.]
Duties of a knight.

The prince did wonder much, yet could not glance

The cause of that his sorrowful constraint;
Yet would by secret signs of maninece,
Which close appear'd in that rude brutishness,
That to whilome some gentle swains had been,
Train'd up in feasts of arms and knighthood.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. vii. 45.
KNIGHTLY. adj. [from knigh.] Besitting
a knight; becoming a knight.

Let us take care of your wound, upon condition that a more knighthly combat shall be performed between us. Sidney.

How darest thou pride presume against my laws?

As in a listad field to fight your cause;
Unus'd the royal grant, no marshal by,
As knighthly rites require, nor judge to try.

Dryden.
KNIGHTLY. ade. In a manner becoming a knight. Sherwood.

TO KNIT. v. a. preter. knit or knitted.
[knitan, Saxon.]

1. To make or unite by texture without a loom.

Sleep, that knits up the ravel'd sleeve of care,
The birth of each day's life, nor labour's bath,
Balm of hurt minds. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
A thousand Cupids in those curls do sit;
Those curious nets thy slender fingers knit.

Waller.
2. To tie.

Send for the county; go tell him of this;
I'll have this knot knit up to-morrow mornng.

Shakespeare.
3. To join; to unite. This was formerly a word of extensive use; it is now less frequent.

His gall did grate for grief and good disdain,
And, knitting all his force, got one band free.

Spenser, F. Q.
These, mine enemies, are all knit up
In their distractions: they are in my power.

Shakespeare.
O let the vile world end,
And the premised fancies of the last day
Knit earth and heaven together!

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
Lay your highest
Command upon me; to the which my duties
Are with a most indissoluble tie

For ever knit. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
This royal hand and mine are newly knit,
And the conjunction of our inward souls
Married in league.

Shakespeare, K. John.
By the simplicity of Venus' doves,
By that which knits souls, and prospers loves.

Shakespeare.
If ye become peaceably, mine hand shall be knit unto you.

1 Chron. xii. 17.

VOL. II.

That their hearts might be comforted, being knt together in love. Col. ii. 2.

Pride and impudence, in faction knit,
Under the chair of wit! B. Jonson, New Fun.
Ye knit my heart to you by asking this question.

Bacon.
These two princes were agreeable to be joined in marriage, and thereby knit both realms into one.

Heyward.
Come, knit hands, and beat the ground
In a light fantastic round.

Milten, Comus.
God gave several abilities to several persons,
that each might help to supply the public needs, and, by joining to fill up all wants, they be knit together by justice, as the parts of the world are by nature.

Jay, Tappan, Rule of Living Holy.
Nature cannot knit the bones while the parts are under a discharge.

Wiemann, Surgery.

4. To contract.
What are the thoughts that knit thy brow in frowns,
And turn thy eyes so coldly on thy prince?

Addison, Cato.

5. To tie up.
He saw heaven opened, and a certain vessel descending unto him as it had been a great sheet;
knit at the four corners, and let down to the earth.

Acts, x. 11.

TO KNIT. v. n.

1. To weave without a loom.

A young shepherdess knitting and singing: her voice comforted her hands to work, and her hands kept time to her voice's music.

Make the world distinguish Julia's son
From the vile offspring of a trull, that sits
By the town-wall, and for her living knits.

Dryden.

2. To join; to close; to unite. Not used.
Our sewer'd navy too
Have knit again, and float, threat'ning most unlike.

Shakespeare.
KNIT. n. s. [from the verb.] Texture.
Let their heads be sleekly com'd, their blue coats brush'd, and their garters of an indiffere<sup>t</sup> knit.

Shakespeare.
KNITCH. n. s. [probably from knit; what

L

L,† A liquid consonant, which pre-serves always the same sound in English. In the Saxon it was aspirated; as, lhap, lof; hlæp, ladv.

At the end of a monosyllable it is always doubled; as, shall; still; full, except after a diphthong; as, fail; feel; veal; cool. In a word of more syllables it is usually written single; as, channel; canal; tendril. It is sometimes put before, and sounded feebly after it; as Bible; title.

Originally this letter, at the end of a monosyllable, was not doubled; al, ful, shal, &c. being the form of our old English.

It is sometimes mute; as, in alms, calf, chalk, and some other words.

LA.† interj. [Corrupted by an effeminate pronunciation from lo, unless it be the French la. Dr. Johnson. — This is not the case; the expression is pure Saxon; la nu, lo now! " la hu opt, lo!

how oft." Ps. lxxvii. 45.] See; look; behold.

La you! if you speak ill of the devil, how he takes it at heart. Shalp. The Night.
LAB. * n. s. A blab; a great talker; one that cannot keep a secret. One of our oldest words; and yet preserved in the Exmouth dialect. Chaucer uses also labbing for blabbing.

I am no labbe,
No though I say it, I'm not left to gabble.

Chaucer, Mill. Tale.

LAB'DANUM. n. s. A resin, of a strong but not unpleasant smell, and an aromatick, but not an agreeable taste. This juice exudes from a low spreading shrub in Crete.

Hill.
To LAB'RY. v. a. [labefacio, Lat.] To weaken; to impair. Dict.

LAB'EL. n. s. [labelum, Lat.]

1. The earliest sense seems to be that of a small slip of silk, or other materials; a kind of tassel; as, "a label hanging on each side of a mitre; labels hanging down on garlands or crowns; also jesses hanging at hawks' legs." Barret's Alveary 1580. Thus Ainsworth translates "infula" a label hanging on each side of a mitre.

2. A small slip or scrap of writing.
When wak'd, I found
This label on my bosom; whose containing
Is so from sense in hardness, that I can Make no collection of it. Shalpewer, Cymb.

3. Anything appendant to a larger writing.

On the label of lead, the heads of St. Peter and St. Paul are impressed from the papal seal.
Ayliffe, Evergreen.

4. [In law.] A narrow slip of paper or parchment affixed to a deed or writing, in order to hold the appending seal. So also any paper, annexed by way of addition or explication to any will or testament, is called a label or codicil.

Harris.
God join'd my heart to Romeo's; thus our hands;
And one side hand by side to Romeo seal'd,
Shall be the label to another deed;
Or my true heart with treacherous revolt
Turn to another, this shall slay them both.

Shalpewer.

To LAB'EL. * v. a. [from the noun.] To affix a label on any thing, in order to distinguish it.

LAB'ENT. adj. [labens, Lat.] Sliding; gliding; slipping. Dict.

LAB'IAL. adj. [labialis, Lat.] Uttered by the lips.

The Hebrews have assigned which letters are labial, which dental, and which guttural.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Some particular affection of sound in its passage to the lips, will seem to make some composition in any word which is labial.

Holder, Elem. of Speech.

LAB'iated. adj. [labium, Lat.] Formed with lips.

LABIOD'NTAL' adj. [labium and dentalis] Formed or pronounced by the co-operation of the lips and teeth.

P and B are labial; F and Bk. or F and V, are labiodental.

Holder, Elem. of Speech.

LABORANT. n. s. [laborans, Lat.] A chemist. Not in use.

I can show you a sort of fix sulphur made by an industrious laborant. Boyle.

LABORATORY. n. s. [laboratoire, Fr.] A chemist's work-room.

They had forged this new doctrine in the laboratories at Rome.

Bp. Taylor, Diss. from Popery, ch. 1. § 4.

It would contribute to the history of colours, if chemists would in their laboratory take a gentle notice, and give us a faithful account, of the colours observed in the steam of bodies, either sublimed or distilled. Boyle.

The flames of love will perform those miracles they are famous for, would they employ themselves in this laboratory. Doody of Chr. Piety.

LABORIOUS. adj. [laboricus, French; laboriosus, Lat.]

1. Diligent in work; assiduous.

That which makes the clergy glorious, is to be knowing in their professions, unspotted in their lives, active and laborious in their charges, bold and resolute in opposing seducers, and daring to look vice in the face; and lastly, to be gentle, courteous, and compassionate to all. South.

A spacious cave within its furthest part, Was hew'd and fashion'd by laborious art,
Through the hill's hollow sides. Dryden.

"O laborious youth consum'd in war,
And lasting age, when'd and crown'd with peace."
Prior.

2. Requiring labour; tiresome; not easy.

Do't thou lose watchings, abstinence, and toil,
Laborious virtues all! learn them from Cato. Johnson.

LABORIOUSLY. adv. [from laborious.]

With labour; with toil.
The folly of him who pumps very laboriously in a ship yet neglects to stop the leak.

Decay of Chr. Piety.

I clause laboriously to bear
A weight of woes, and breathe the vital air. Pope.

LABORIOUSNESS. n. s. [from laborious.]

1. Toilsomeness; difficulty.

The parallel holds in the guliveness, as well as the laboriousness of the work; these wretched creatures, buried in earth, and darkness, were never the richer for all the one they digged; no more is the insatiate miser. Decay of Chr. Piety.

2. Diligence; assiduity.

Idleness is the emptiness, and business the fullness of the soul; and we all know that we may infuse what we will into an empty vessel, but in a full one, idleness is that which sets all the capacities of the soul wide open, to let in evil spirits, and to give both him, and all the villainies he can bring along with him, a free reception, and a full possession; whereas, on the contrary, laboriousness shuts the doors and stops all the avenues of the mind, whereby a temptation would enter, and (which is yet more) leaves no void room for it to dwell there, if by any accident it should chance to creep in. South, Sermon, vi. 372.

LAB'OUR. n. s. [abeur, French; labor, Lat.]

1. The act of doing what requires a painful exertion of strength, or wearisome perseverance; pains; toil; travail; work.
If I find her honest, I lose not my labour;
If she be otherwise, it is labour well bestowed. Shalpewer.

I sent to know your faith, lest the tempter have tempted you, and our labour be in vain.

1 Thess. iii. 5.

2. Work to be done.

Being a labour of so great difficulty, the exact performance thereof we may rather wish than look for. Hooker.

If you had been the wife of Hercules
Six of his labours you'd have done, and so'd
Your husband so much waste. Shalpewer, Coriol.

3. Work done; performance.

4. Exercise; motion with some degree of violence.

Moderate labour of the body conduces to the preservation of health, and curing many initial diseases; but the toil of the mind destroys health, and generates maladies. Harvey.

5. Childbirth; travail.

Sith of women's labours thou hast charge,
And generation goodly dost enlarge,
Incline thy will to affect our woful yearner.
Not knowing 'twas my labour, I complain
Of sudden shootings, and of grinding pain;
My throes come thicker, and my cries encrease'd,
Which with her hand the conscious nurse suppress'd.

Dryden.

Not one woman of two hundred dies in labour.

Grout.

His heart is in continual labour; it even travails with the obligation, and is in pangs till it be delivered.

South, Sermon.

To LAB'OUR. v. n. [laboro, Lat.]

1. To toil; to act with painful effort.

When shall I come to the top of that same hill?
— You do climb up it now; look how we labour.

Shalpewer.

For your highness' good I ever labour;
More than mine own. Shalpewer, Hen. VIII.

Who is with him?

— None but the fool, who labour to out-jest
His heart-thrust injuries. Shalpewer, C. Lear.
Let more work be laid upon the men, that they may labour therein.

South, v. 8.

He is so touched with the memory of her benevolence and protection, that his soul labours for an expression to represent it. Notes on Pope's Odyssey.
Epigenus labours you, always labouring fervently for you in prayer, that ye may stand perfect.

Cat. iv. 12.

2. To do work; to take pains.

A labouring man that is given to drunkenness, shall not be rich. Ecclesi. xiv. 1.

That in the night they may be a guard to us, and labour on the day. Nich. iv. 22.

As a man had a right to all he could employ his labour upon, so he had no temptation to labour for more than he could make use of. Lodge.

3. To move with difficulty.

The stone that labours up the hill,
Mocking the labourers toil, returning still,
Is love. Granville.

4. To be diseased with. [morbo laborare, Lat.] Not in use.

They abound with horns,
Of which one want our camp doth only labour.

R. Jonson.

I was called to another, who in childhood laboured of an ulcer in her left hip. Wrieman.

5. To be in distress; to be pressed.

To this infernal lake the fury flies,
Here hides her hated head, and frowns the labouring skies.

Dryden.

Trumpets and drums shall fright her from the throne,
As sounding cymbals aid the labouring moon. •

Dryden, Aeneas.

This exercise will call down the favour of Heaven upon you, to remove those afflictions you now labour under from you.

Wake, Prep. for Death.

6. To be in child-birth; to be in travail.

There thy a leg unlighted on the earth,
When she was labouring in the throes of birth;
For the unborn chief the fatal sisters came,
And rais'd it up, and tore'd it on the flame.

Dryden, Ovid.

Here, like some furious prophet, Pindar rode,
And seem'd to labour with his inspiring gods.

Pope.

7. In naval language, spoken of a ship, when every timber is put to the test, and the whole constitution of her architecture is in the full play of all its powers.

To LA'BOUR. v. a.

1. To work at; to move with difficulty; to work with labour; to prosecute with effort.

To use brevity, and avoid much labouring of the work is to be granted to him that will make an abridgement. 2 Mac.

Had you requir'd my helpful hand,
The artificer and you might compass.

To labour arms for Troy. Dryden, Æn.
An eager desire to know something concerning him, has occasioned mankind to labour the point, under these disadvantages, and turn on all hands to see if there were any thing left, which might have the least appearance of information.

Pope, Æn. on Homer.

2. To beat; to belabour.

Take, shepherd, take a plant of stubborn oak,
And labour him with many a sturdy stroke.

Dryden.

LA'BOURER. n. s. [labourer, French.]

1. One who is employed in coarse and toilsome work.

If a state run must to noblemen and gentlemen, and that the husbandmen be but as their work-folks and labourers, you may have a good cavalry, but never good stable foot. Bacon.

The sun but seem'd the labourer of the year,
Each waxing moon supply'd her wat'ry store,
To swell those tides, which from the line did bear

Their brist'ling vessels to the Belgian shore.

Dryden.

Labourers and idle persons, children and striplings, old men and young men, must have divers diets. Arbuthnot.

Not bolmy sleep to labourers faint with pain,
Not showers to larks, or sun-shine to the bee.

Are half so charming as thy sight to me. Pope.
Yet hence the poor are cloth'd, the hungry fed,
Health to himself, and to his infants bear'd.

The price cannot say to the merchant, I have no need of thee; nor the merchant to the labourer, I have no need of thee. Swift.

2. One who takes pains in any employment.

Sir, I am a true labourer; I earn that I eat; get that I wear; owe no man here any man's happiness. Shakespeare.

The stone that labours up the hill,
Mocking the labourers toil, returning still,
Is love. Granville.

LA'BOURLESS. * adj. [labour and less.] Not laborious.

They intend not your precise abstinence from any light and labourous work.

LABURNUM. * n. s. A shrub [of the cyttus kind] that grows to the size of a tree.

The pale laburnum grac'd with yellow plumes.

Anon.

LAC. n. s.

Lac is usually distinguished by the name of a gum, but improperly, because it is inflammable and not soluble in water.

We have three sorts of it, which are all the product of the same tree. 1. The stick lac. The seed lac. 3. The shell lac. Authors leave us uncertain whether this drug belongs to the animal or the vegetable kingdom.

Hill.

LACE.† n. s. [lacet, French; laqueus, Latin. Dr. Johnson. — From the Sax. laccan, laccan, laccan, prehendere, apprehendere, to take hold of: Mr. H. Tooke.]

1. A string; a cord.

There the fond fly entangled, struggled long,
Himself to free thereout; but all in vain;

For striving more, the more in laces strong
Himself he tied, and wrapt his wings therein.

In liny snares, the subtil loops among.

Spenser, Melpomene.

2. A snare; a gin.

The king had snared been in love's strong lacer.

Fletcher.

3. A platted string, with which women fasten their clothes.

O, cut my lace, lest my heart cracking, it Break too. Shakespeare.

Doll ne'er was call'd to cut her lace,
Or throw cold water in her face.

Swift.
4. Ornaments of fine thread curiously woven.

Our English dances are much given to the wearing of costly lace, and, if they be brought from Italy, they are in great esteem.

Decon.
5. Textures of thread, with gold or silver.

It is but a night-gown in respect of yours;
Cloth of gold and costs, and lac'd with silver.

Shakespeare.
4. To embellish with variegations.

Look, love, what curious textures
Do lace the covering clouds in yonder east;

Night's candles are burnt out, and junc'd day
Stands tip-toe on the misty mountains' tops.

Shakespeare.
Then clap four slices of plaster on't,
That, lac'd with bits of rust, makes a front.

Pope.
5. To beat; whether from the form which L'Étrange uses, or by corruption of lash. Dr. Johnson. — It is no doubt from the sense of lace as a cord, a rope's end; and no corruption of lash.

L'Étrange's phrase is still in use among the common people.

I do not love to be laced in, when I go to lace a rascal. Two Angry Women of Abington, (1599.)

Go you, and find me out a man that has no curiosity at all, or I'll lace your coat for ye.

L'Étrange.

To LACKEY. v. a. [from the noun.] To attend servilely. I know not whether Milton has used this word very properly.

This common body, Like to a vagabond jail upon the stream, Goes to, and back, latching the varying tide, To rot itself with mortification. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

So dear to heaven is saultry chastity, That when a soul is loved sincerely so, A thousand liveried angels lackey her, Driving far off each thing of sin and guilt. Milton, Comus.

To LACKEY. v. n. To act as a foot-boy; to pay servile attendance.

To be made an ordinary process, to lackey up and down for fees. Bacon, on the Edif. of the Ch. of Engl.

Oh have I ever seen so mean a side, The free and noble lackey by their side. Saunders.

Our Italian translator of the Æneis is a foot poet: he lackey by the side of Virgil, but never mounts behind him. Dryden.

LACKLINEN. adj. [lack and linen.] Wanting shirts.

You poor, base, rascally, cheating, lacklinen mate; away, you mouldy rogue, away. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

LACKLUSTRE. adj. [lack and lustre.] Wanting brightness.

And then he drew a dial from his poke, And looking on it with lacklustre eyes, Says very wisely, It is ten o'clock. Shakespeare.

LACONICAL. adj. [laconicus, Latin, laconique, Fr.] This word is old in our

Your fortune,

Or rather your husband's industry, advance'd you
To the rank of merchant's wife: He made a knight,
And your sweet mistressship lady's, you were Satin on solemn days, a chain of gold,
A velvet hood.

Messager, City Madam.

LAD'ING. n.s. [from lade.] Weight; burthen.

Some we made prize, while others burst and rent
With their rich lading to the bottom went.

The storm grows higher and higher, and threatens
The utter loss of the ship; there is but one way
To save it, which is, by throwing its rich lading Overboard.

South.

It happened to be foul weather, so that the mariners cast their whole lading overboard to save themselves.

L'Estrange.

Why should he sink where nothing seem'd to press?

His lading little, and his ballast less.

Swift.

LAD'IN. n.s. [from lad.] A youth.

Tharion, that young ladin high,
He pray'd this aged sire for to reveal
What way — we may escape.

Merr., Life of the Soul, iii. 31.

LAD'LE. n.s. [hlaele, Sax. from hladan;
leugh, Erse.]

1. A large spoon; a vessel with a long handle, used in throwing out any liquid from the vessel containing it.

Some stir'd the molten ore with ladles great.

Spenser.

When the materials of glass have been kept long in fusion, the mixture casts on the superfluous salt, which the workmen take off with ladles.

Dryden.

A ladle for our silver dish

Is what I want, is what I wish.

Prior.

2. The receptacles of a mill wheel, into which the water falling turns it.

LAD'LE-FUL. n.s. [ladle and ful.]

'Tis a footman be going up with a dish of soup, let the cook with a ladle-ful drizzle his livery all the way up stairs.

Swift.

LADY. n.s. [hlæp, hlæp, hlaþa, Sax.
Saxon; supposed by Verstegan and others to be from hlaf, Sax. Maif, Goth.
bread, and dian, to serve or distribute;

because the mistress of the family used to distribute the bread to the domestics and guests; the laford or lord allowing the food, the lafian or lady seeing that it was duly served. To this Mr. H.

Tooke opposes hlaf as the past participle of hlupan, to raise; and thence pronounces hlæp or lord, a woman compounded of hlaf, raised, and oph, origin or birth, meaning therefore "high-born, of an exalted origin;" and hlæp, lady, as merely lofty, that is, raised or exalted; her birth being out of the question, as the wife follows the condition of the husband. Serenius, however, notices the Gothic lafda or lafid,
a mistress, "hera, domina;" and Dr.
Jamieson, from an old Icelandic work,
the following words of the serpent to Eve: "Thú erst lafda myn, en Adam er lafardr min: Thou art my lady, and Adam is my lord." See also LORD.]

1. A woman of high birth; the title of lady properly belongs to the wives of knights, of all degrees above them, and to the daughters of earls, and all of higher ranks.

I am much afraid, my lady, his mother, play'd false with a smith.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

VOL. II.

I would thy husband were dead; I would make thee my lady. — I your lady, Sir John? alas, I should be a pitiful lady.

Shakespeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

I am sorry my relation to an deserving a lady,
should be any occasion of her danger and affliction.

King Charles.

2. An illustrious or eminent woman.

O foolish fairy's son, what fury mad
Hath thee incens'd to haste thy doleful fate?

Were it not better I that lady had,

Than that thou hadst repent'd it too late!

Spenser.

Before Homer's time this great lady was scarce heard of.

Halegh.

May every lady an Eradine prove,
That she divert me from Aspasia's love.

Would I shun the dangers of the war,

With scorn the Trojans would't reward my pains,

And their proud ladies with their sweeping trains.

Dryden.

We find on medals the representations of ladies, that have given occasion to whole volumes on the account only of a face.

Addition on Anc. Medals.

3. A word of complaisance used of women.

Say, good Cesar,

That I some lady trifles have receiv'd,

Immunon toys, things of such dignity

As we great modern friends withal.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

I hope I may speak of women without offence to the ladies.

Guardian.

4. Mistress, importing power and dominion;
as, lady of the manor.

Of all these bounds, even from this line to this,
With shadowy forests, and with champaign rich'd,
With plement rivers, and wide-skirted meads,

We make thee lady.

Shakespeare, R. Lear.

5. LADY in the Straw. An expression used to signify the woman who is brought to bed; derived from the circumstance that all beds were anciently stuffed with straw; so that it is synonymous with saying "the lady in bed," or that is confined to her bed. Brand, Popular Antiq. Hence perhaps the name of the herb "lady-bedstraw."

LADY-BEDSTRAW. n.s. [Gallium.] A plant of the stellate kind.

Miller.

Botanists — show a very particular regard to the fair sex — as we may well conclude from so many names they give to plants; lady's fingers, lady's laces, lady's liver, maiden herb, lady's bedstraw,
lady's slipper, &c.

LADY-BIRD. n.s. A small red insect

LADY-BUG. n.s. A small red insect

LADY-COW. n.s. vaginopennious.

LADY-FLY.

Fly lady-bird, north, south, or east or west,

Fly where the man is found that I love best.

This lady-fly I take from off the grass,

Whose spotted back might scarlet red surpass.

Gay.

It is extremely unlucky to kill a cricket, a ladybird, a swallow, &c.

Crane, Popular Superstitions.

LADY-DAY. n.s. [lady and day.] The day on which the annunciation of the blessed virgin is celebrated.

LADY-LIKE. adj. [lady and like.]

1. Soft; delicate; elegant.

With fingers lady-like.

Warner, Abbot's Engl. ch. 9.

Her tender constitution did declare,
Too lady-like a long fatigue to bear.

Dryden.

2. Affecting; effeminate.

Some of these so rigid, yet very spruce and lady-like preachers, think fit to gratify as their own persons, so their kind hearers and spectators.

By. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 179.

LADY-MANTLE. n.s. [Alchimilla.] A plant.

LADYSHIP. n.s. [from lady.]

1. Originally, the state of a lady.

I will do thee such ladyship,

Whereof thou shalt for evermore

Be rich.

Greene, Conf. Am. B. 6.

2. The title of a lady.

Madam, he sends your ladyship this ring.

Shakespeare.

Your ladyship shall cheerer their gravity,

And their reservedness, their many cautions,

Fitting their persons.

B. Jonson, Catiline.

I the wronged pen to please,

Make it my humble thanks express

Unto your ladyship in these.

Waller.

'Tis Galla; let her ladyship but peep.

Dryden, Juv.

LADY'S-SLIPPER. n.s. [Calceolus.] A plant.

LADY'S-SMOCK. n.s. [Cardamine.] A plant.

When daisies pied, and violets blue,
And lady-smocks all silver-white,

Do paint the meadows with delight.

See here a boy cropping culverkes and cowslips,
all to make garlands.

Walter, Angler.

LADY. adj. [læx, Saxon, long; lagg,
Swedish, the end.]

1. Coming behind; falling short.

I could be well content

To entertain the lag end of my life

With quiet hours.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV. P. 1.

The slowest fool who comes last, supply the show of a rearward.

Carry, Scurvy.

I am some twelve or fourteen moonshines
lag of a brother.

Shakespeare, R. Lear.

2. Sluggish; slow; tardy. It is out of use, but retained in Scotland, Dr. Johnson says. It was thus well employed, in his own time, (he might have added to the examples from Shakespeare and Dryden,) by the author of The Grave.
And it is still retained in our colloquial
language.

He, poor man, by your first order died,

And that a widge of Murech was near;

Some tardy cripple had the countermand,

That came too lag to see him buried.

Shakespeare, Rich. II.

We know your thoughts of us, that laymen are lag souls, and rubbish of remaining clay,

Which Heaven, grown weary of more perfect work,

Set together with a little puff of breath,

And bid us pass for men.

Dryden, Den. Sebat.

Rests too in hope of meeting once again

Is better half, never to surrender more:

Not shall it hope in vain.

R. Blair, The Grave.

3. Last; long delayed.

Pack to their old play-fellows; there I take

They may, even presently, wear away.

The lag end of their lewdness, and be laugh'd at.

Shakespeare.

LAD. n.s.

1. The lowest class; the rump; the lag end.

The rest of your foes, O gods, the senators of Athens, together with the common lag of people, what is amiss in them, make suitable for destruction.

Shakespeare.

2. He that comes last, or hangs behind.

The last, the lag of all the race. Dryden, Virg.

What makes my ram the lag of all the flock.

Page.

To LAG, v. n.

1. To loiter; to move slowly.

She passed, with fear and fury wild,
The nurse went lagging after with the child.

Dryden.

The remnant of his days he safely pass,
Nor found they lagged too slow, nor flow'd too fast.

Prior.

2. To stay behind; not to come in.

Behind her far away a dwarf did lag.

Spenser, F. Q.

I shall not lag behind, nor err

Milton, P. L.

The way, thou leading.

The knight himself did after ride,

Lending Crowdero by his side,

And tow'd him, if he lagged behind,

Like tow against the tide and wind.

If he finds a fairy lag in flight,

He drives the wretch before, and lashes into night.

Dryden.

She hourly press'd for something new;

Idea came into her mind

So fast, his lessons lagged behind.

Swift.

To LAG, v. a. To slacken; to move slowly.

The hunter with an arrow wounded him in the leg, which made him to halt and lag his flight.

Heywood, Hist. of Angels, (1635), p. 98.

LA'GAARD, *adj. [from lag-] Backward;

sluggish; slow.

Thy humblest reed could more prevail,

Had more of strength, diviner rage,

Than all which charms this lagged age.

Collier, Ode, xii.

LA'GGER, n. s. [from lag-] A loiterer;

an idler; one that loiters behind.

LA'ICAL, *adj. [laïque, Fr. laïque, Lat. laicus, Græco-barb. from laos, the people-] Belonging to the laity, or people as distinct from the clergy.

In all ages the clerical will flatter as well as the laical. Camden.

It is amazing to see the strange absurdities committed by the clergy of the middle ages, in adopting the laical character.

Watson, Hist. E. P. ii. 345.

LA'ICK, *n. s. [laïque, Fr. laïque] A layman;

one of the people distinct from the clergy.

The words—touch a command for the use of both kinds, as well to laïques as priest.

Sp. Morten, Discharge, &c. (1635), p. 184.

LA'ICK, *adj. Belonging to the laity;

denoting the people as distinct from the clergy.

It reflects to the disrepute of our ministers also,

that—they should be still frequented with such an unprincipled, unrefined, and foolish rabble.

Milton, Areopagitica.

LAID, Preterite participle of lay.

Money laid up for the relief of widows and fatherless children. 2 Mac. iii. 10.

A scheme which was writ some years since,

and laid by to be ready on a fit occasion. Swift.

LA'IDLY, *adj. [Incl. Sax. laïd, Fr. laïd, Su. Goth.] Ugly; loathsome; foul.

North of England.

To LAIK, *See To LAKE.

LAIN,† Preterite participle of lie; and formerly written lien.

Mary went two angels in white, sitting,

one at the head, and the other at the feet, where the body of Jesus had lain. St. John, x. 12.

The parcels had lain by, before they were opened, between four and five years. Bayly.

LAIR,† n. s. [lai, in French, signifies a wild sow, or a forest: the derivation is casy in either sense; or from leger,

Dutch. Dr. Johnson.—The Teutonic laegher is the bed of wild beasts; and is to be referred to the Gothic laeger, and liger, a bed, from liggan, to lie down.]

1. The couch of a boar or wild beast.

Out of the ground uprose,
As from his lair, the wild beast, where he wons in forest wild, in thicket brake, or den.

Milton, P. L.

But range the forest, by the silver side

Of some cool stream, where nature shall provide

Green grass and fat'ning clover for your fairs,

And many caverns for your noon-tide lair.

Dryden, Virg.

2. [From les, Sax. pascuum, campus.]

Pasture; the ground.

More hard for hungry need 't abstain from pleasant lair. Spenser, F. Q. iv. viii. 59.

This grant's sonne that lies there on the lair

An headless heep. Ibid. 51.

To raise and scow, [shall] they have wet

All his driest lairs? W. Browne.

3. Soil; dung. An Essex and Suffolk word, according to Grose, who writes it

laier: a northern word too, in the sense of mire and dirt, and written lair by

Mr. Brockett. [leir, Icel. ler, Su.

Goth.]

LAIRD, n. s. [blarph, Saxon.] The lord of a manor in the Scottish dialect;

which is the definition of Dr. Johnson.

This is its old meaning. Mr. Brockett observes; but it is now a common name in Northumberland and Cumberland for a proprietor of land, without any relation to manorial rights.

Survive but their title, and their money's poise,

A laird and twenty pence pronounce 't with noise,

When contriv'd but for a plain yeoman's go,

And a good sober two pence, and well so.

Cleveland.

LA'ITER, *n. s. [legh-tyd, Teut. the time

LA'WTER, } of laying.] The whole quantity of eggs which a hen lays, before she incubates. Craven Dial.

Brockett's N. C. Words, and Jennings's

W. C. Words. The northern form and pronunciation of the word is lafter, as well as laüter; the western laier is more correct.

LA'ITY, n. s. [laïos.]

1. The people, as distinguished from the clergy.

As humble clergy is a very good one, and an humble laity too, since humility is a virtue that equally adorns every station of life. Swift.

2. The state of a layman.

The more usual cause of this deprivation is a mere laity, or want of holy orders.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

LAKE,† n. s. [lac, laca, Saxon; lac, Fr.

lacs, Lat.]

1. A large diffusion of inland water.

He adds the running springs and standing lakes,

And bounding banks for winding rivers makes.

Dryden.

2. Small splash of water.

3. A middle colour, betwixt ultramarine and vermilion, yet it is rather sweet than harsh. It is made of cochineal.

[lacage, French; ruby or rose colour.]

Dryden.

To LAKE, v. n. [laikan, Gothick and Saxon; and the English word is sometimes written laik. Thus laiker, in the Cumberland dialect, a person engaged in sport. And thus laikings or laikings, playthings for children.] To play.

Used in the north of England.

LA'KY, *adj. [from lake-] Belonging to a lake. Sherwood.

To LAM,† See To LAMB.

LAMB, n. s. [lamb, Gothick and Saxon.]

1. The young of a sheep.

I'm young; but something

You may deserve of him through me, and wisdom,

To offer up a weak, poor, innocent lamb,

To appease an angry god. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

The lamb, thy riot dooms to bleed to day.

Had he thy knowledge would he skip and play?

Pope.

2. Typically, the Saviour of the world.

O Lamb of God, that takest away the sins of the world, have mercy upon us. Common Prayer.

To LAMB, v. n. [from the noun.] To yearn; to bring forth lambs. Sherwood.

LAMB-ABLE, *n. s. A feast at the time of shearing lambs.

Lamb-ick is still used at the village of Kirtlington in Oxfordshire, for an annual feast or celebrity at lamb-shearing. Watson, Hist. E. P. iii. 129.

LA'MBATIVE,† adj. [from lambos, to lick.] Taken by licking.

In affections both of lungs and venery, physicians make use of syrups, and lambative medicines. Brown.

Upon the mantle-tree stood a pot of lambative electuary. Taylor, No. 266.

LA'MBATIVE, n. s. A medicine taken by licking with the tongue.

I stick'd up the wound, and let him blood in the arm, advising a lambative, to be taken as necessity should require. Wiceman, Surgery.

LA'MBIN, n. s. [from lamb.] A little lamb.

'Twist them both they not a lambkin left,

And when lambs fall'd, the old sheeps' lives they reft. Spenser, Faerie Queene.

Pan, thou god of shepherds all,

Which of our tender lambkins takest keep.

Spenser, Shep. Cal.

Clean as young lambkins, or the goose's down,

And like the goldfinch be her Sunday gown.

Gay.

LA'MBLIKE, *adj. [lamb and like.]

Put lamblike mildness to your lion's strength.

Trag. of Solomon and Pereda, (1599.)

2. Resembling the form of a lamb.

What else doth the beast, arising out of the earth portend by his lamblike horns but antichrist?

Sheldon, Hist. of Antichrist, (1616), p. 161.

LAMBS-WOOL,† n. s. [lamb and wool.] Dr.

Johnson.—"The first day of November was dedicated to the angel presiding over fruits, seeds, &c. and was therefore named la mas uhal, that is, the day of the apple fruit; and being pronounced lamswool, the English have corrupted the name to lamb'swool."

Col. Vallancey, Collect. de Reb. Hib.

bern. iii. 441. Lamb'swool is said to have been often met with in Ireland.

See Brand's Popul. Antiq. i. 312.] Ale mixed with sugar, nutmeg, and the pulp of roasted apples.

Those that commend use of apples in this kind of melancholy; lamb'swool some call it.

Dartton, Annal. de Med. p. 404.

A cup of lamb-wool they drank to him there.

Song of the King and the Miller.

LAM'BENT. adj. [lambent, Lat.] Playing about; gliding over without harm.

From young Iulus heard

A lambent flame arise, which gently spread Around his brows, and on his temples fed.

Dryden.

His brows thick fogs, instead of glories, grace,
And lambent dulness played around his face.

Dryden.

LAMBOIDAL. n. s. [λᾰμβοιδᾰλ and ἰδωᾰ.] Having the form of the letter lamda or λ.

The course of the longitudinal suture down through the middle of it, makes it advisable to trepan at the lower part of the os parietale, or at least upon the lamboideal suture. Sharp, Surgery.

LAME. adj. [lam, lama, Saxon; lam, Dutch; lam, leel, fractio.]

1. Crippled; disabled in the limbs.

Who reproves the lame, must go upright.

Daniel.

A greyhound, of a mouse colour, lame of one leg, belongs to a lady. Arbuthnot and Pope.

2. Hobbling; not smooth: alluding to the feet of a verse.

Our authors write,

Whether in prose, or verse, 'tis all the same;
The prose is fustian, and the numbers lame.

Dryden.

3. Imperfect; unsatisfactory.

Shrubs are formed into sundry shapes, by moulding them within, and cutting them without; but they are but lame things, being too small to keep figure. Bacon.

Swift, who could neither fly nor hide,
Came knocking to the chariot side,
And offered many a lame excuse,
He never meant the least abuse.

Swift.

TO LAME. v. a. [from the adjective.] To make lame; to cripple.

I never heard of such another encounter, which lames report to follow it, and undoes description to do it. Shakspeare.

The son and heir

Affronted once a cock of noble kind,
And either lam'd his legs, or struck him blind.

Dryden.

If you happen to let the child fall, and lame it, never confess. Swift.

LAMELLAR. adj. [lamella, Lat.] Composed of such scales or flakes.

Calcareous marl is—sometimes of a compact, sometimes of a lamellar texture; often so thin as to be called paper-marl. Kirwan on Minerals, p. 15.

LAMELLATED. adj. [lamella, Lat.] Covered with films or plates.

The lamellated antennae of some insects are surprisingly beautiful, when viewed through a microscope. Berlamb.

LAMELY. adv. [from lame.]

Those muscles become callous, and, having yielded to the extension, the patient makes shift to go upon it, though *lame*ly. Wieman, Surgery.

2. Imperfectly; without a full or complete exhibition of all the parts.

Look not every liniment to see,
Some will be east in shades, and some will be
So *lame*ly drawn, you scarcely know 'tis she.

Dryden.

3. Weakly; unsteadily; poorly.

LAMENSA. n. s. [from lame.]

1. The state of a cripple; loss or inability of limbs.

Let blindness, lamenta come; are legs and eyes

Of equal value to so great a prize? Dryden, Jew.
Lamenters kept me at home.

2. Imperfection; weakness.

If the story move, or the actor help the lamenta of it with his performance, either of these are sufficient to effect a present liking. Dryden, Span. Frier.

TO LAMENT. v. n. [lamentor, Lat. lamentor, Fr.] To mourn; to wail; to grieve; to express sorrow.

'Tis shall weep and lament, but the world shall rejoice. St. John.

Jeremiah lamented for Josiah, and all the singing-men and women spoke of Josiah in their lamentations. 2 Chron.

For less I now lament for one whole world
Of wretched sons destroy'd, than I rejoice
For one man found so perfect and so just,
That God vouchsafes to raise another world
From him. Milton, P. L.

TO LAMENT. v. a. To bewail; to mourn; to bemoan; to express sorrow for.

As you are weary of this weight,
Rest you, while I lament king Henry's corse. Shakspeare.

The pair of sages praise:
One pities, one condemn'd the woful times,
One laugh'd at follies, one lamented crimes. Dryden.

LAMENT. n. s. [lamentum, Lat. from the verb.]

1. Sorrow audibly expressed; lamentation; grief uttered in complaints or cries.

We, long ere our approaching, heard within Noise, other than the sound of dance, or song!
Torment, and loud lament; and furious rage.

Milton, P. L.

The loud laments arise
Of one distress'd, and mastiffs' mingled cries. Dryden.

2. Expression of sorrow.

To add to your laments,
Wherewith you now bewee king Henry's beane,
I must inform you of a dismal fight. Shakspeare.

LAMENTABLE. adj. [lamentabilis, Lat. lamentable, Fr. from lament.]

Our fortune on the sea is out of breath,
And sinks most lamentably. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

3. Pitifully; despicably.

LAMENTATION. n. s. [lamentatio, Lat.] Expression of sorrow; audible grief.

'Be't lawful that I invoke thy ghost,
To hear the lamentations of poor Anne. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

His sons buried him, and all Israel made great lamentation for him. 1 Mac. ii. 10.

LAMENTER. n. s. [from lament.] One who mourns or laments.

There were a sort of men called lamenters, who had a publick office, as our bearers have, to attend upon funerals, and make doleful lamentations.

Rps. Patrick on Gen. ii. 11.

Such a complaint good company must supply, whether they think the lamenters fit or not.

Spectator.

LAMENTING. n. s. [from lament.] Lamentation; sorrow audibly expressed.

Chimneys were blown down; and, as they say, Lamentings heard 'till the air, strange screams of death. Shakspeare, Macbeth.
Cause your lamentings, Trojans, for a while. Virgil, Aeneid.

LAMENTINE. n. s. A fish called a sea-cow or manatee, which is near twenty feet long, the head resembling that of a cow, and two short feet, with which it creeps on the shallows and rocks to get food; but has no fins: the flesh is commonly eaten. Bailey.

LAMIA. n. s. [Latin.] A kind of demon among the ancients, who, under the form of a beautiful woman, was said to have devoured children; a hag; a witch.

Where's the lamin

That tears my entrails? I'm bewitch'd; seize on her. Shakspeare, Verg. Mortar.

LAMINA. n. s. [Lat.] Thin plate; one coat laid over another.

The head of the snake is covered with twelve principal laminae, besides a number of smaller, irregular in shape.—The central lamina between the eyes is the largest. Russet on Indian Serpents.

LAMINATED. adj. [from lamina.] Plated: used of such bodies whose texture discovers such a disposition as that of plates lying over one another.

From the apposition of different coloured gravel strata, for the most part, the laminated appearance of a stone. Sidney.

LAMINATE. v. [from lame.] Not quite lame; hobbling.

He did, by a false step, sprain a vein in the inside of his leg, which ever after occasioned him to go lamin.

W. Wood, Ath. Ox. 1st ed. v. 2. col. 262.

LAMM. n. s. [lamm, Belg. to strike, to beat. Skinner. leem, to beat.]

To beat soundly with a cudgel.

Lamm'd you shall be ere we leave ye—

You shall be beaten sober.

Benson, and Fl. Beggars' Bush.

LAMMAS. n. s. [This word is used by Bailey, I know not on what authority, to be derived from a custom, by which the tenants of the archbishop of York were obliged, at the time of mass, on the first of August, to bring a lamb to the altar. In Scotland they are said to wean lambs on this day. It may also be corrupted from lattermath. Dr. Johnson.—The following is the account which the learned Hammond gives of the word. "Lamm, in the Saxon hapnapp, lafmass, i. e. loaf-mass, or bread-mass, is so named as a feast of thanksgiving to God for the first fruits of the corn, and seems to have been observed with bread of new wheat; and accordingly 'tis an usage, in some places, for tenants to be bound to bring in wheat of that year to their lord, on or before the first of August." Works, vol. i. p. 660. Somner and Blount record the same derivation. In later times it has been well observed, that lammis day, in the Salisbury Manuals, is called benedictio novorum fructuum; in the Red Book of Derby, lamb-mæsse day; but in the Sax. Chron. lham-mæsse; that mass was a word for festival, whence our Christmas, Candlemas, &c.; and that therefore instead of lammis quasi lamb-mass, from the offering of the tenants at York, we may rather suppose the t to have been left out in course of time of general use, and thus la-mas, or lham-mæsse, appears. See Gent. Mag. Jan. 1799. p. 33. See also the etym. of LAMBS-WOOL. The first of August.

In 1578 was the first lammis day, which buried the reputation of Don John of Austria.

Bacon.

Even or odd, of all days in the year,
Come lammis ere at night, shall be fourteen.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

LAMP. n. s. [lampe, Fr. lamps, Lat.]

1. A light made with oil and a wick.

Olivier's night.

Why shouldst thou, but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lantern thus close up the stars
That nature hung in heaven, and fill'd their lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the misled and lonely traveller! Almon.
In lamp-furnaces I used spits of wine instead
Of oil, and the same flame has melted foliated gold.

Boyle.

2. Any kind of light, in poetical language, real or metaphorical.

Thy gentle eyes send forth a quickening spirit,
And feed the dying lamp of life within me. Rose.
Cynthia, fair regent of the night,
O may thy silver lamp from heaven's high bowers,
Direct my footsteps in the midnight hour. Gay.

LAMPASS. n. s. [lampas, Fr.] A lump of flesh, about the bigness of a nut, in the roof of a horse's mouth, which rises above the teeth.

His horse pestered with the glanders, troubled
With the lampass, infected with the falcons

Shakespeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

LAMPBLACK. n. s. [lamp and black.] It is made by holding a torch under the bottom of a bason, and as it is furled striking it with a feather into some shell, and grinding it with gun water.

Peachment on Draxing.
Being overtaken with liquor one Saturday evening,
I shaved the priot with Spanish blacking for shoes instead of a wash-ball, and with lampblack powdered his periwig.

Arbuthnot and Pope, Memo. of P. P.

LAMPING. adj. [lampante, Ital.] Shining; sparkling. Not used.

Happy lines on which with starry light
Those lamping eyes will deluge sometimes to look.

Spenser, Sonnet.

LAMPON. n. s. [Bailey derives it from lampoon, a drunken song. It imports, let us drink, from the old French lamper, and was repeated at the end of each couplet at carousals. Trévoux.] A personal satire; abuse; censure written not to reform but to vex.

They say my talent is satire; if so, it is a fruitful age: they have shown the dragon's teeth themselves, and it is but just they should reap each other's lampoon.

Drayton.

Make satire a lampoon.

Pope.

To LAMPON. † v. a. [from the noun.]

To abuse with personal satire.

To jeer my prince, or to lampoon my mis.

The Image of the Age, (1676.) p. 63.

LAMPONER. n. s. [from lampoon.] A scribbler of personal satire.

We are naturally displeased with an unknown critic, as the ladies are with a lampooner, because we are bitten in the dark.

Drayton.

The squibs are those who are called libellers,

lampooners, and pamphleteers.

Toutel.

LAMPREY. n. s. [lampryge, Fr.; lamprey, Dutch; lampreba, Saxon.]

Many fish much like the eel frequent both the sea and fresh rivers; as, the lamprel, lamprey, and lampere.

Watson.

LAMPREY. n. s. A kind of sea fish.

These rocks are frequented by lampreys, and greater fishes, that devour the bodies of the drowned.

Broome on the Odyssy.

LANCE. † n. s. [lance, Fr.; lancea, Lat. λάνξ, Greek; lanca, Arm. to brandish a spear, to dart.]

1. A long spear, which, in the heroic ages, seems to have been generally thrown from the hand, as by the Indians at this day. In later times, the combatants thrust them against each other on horseback. Spear; javelin.

He carried his lance, which were wont, to give a lanceably blow.

Sidney.

Plate sin with gold,
And the strong lance of justice hurtless breaks:

Arm in its rags, a pigmy's straw do pierce it.

Shakespeare.

They shall hold the bow and the lance. Joc. 1. 42.

Hector beholds his jav'lin fall in vain,

Nor other lance, nor other hope remain;

He calls Deiphobus, demands a spear

In vain, for no Deiphobus was there.

Pope.

2. Balance. [lance, Italian; "in dubbia lanx."] Obsolete.

Now teach her this lesson hard and rare,

That fortune all in equal lance doth sway.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. vii. 4.

To LANCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To pierce; to cut.

With his prepared word he charges home

My unprepared body, lanc'd my arm.

My unprepared body, lanc'd my arm.

In their cruel worship they lance themselves with knives.

Glavinella, Scyllia.

The infernal minister advanc'd,

Seiz'd the due victim, and with fury lanc'd

Her back, and piercing through her smother heart,

Drew backward.

Drayton.

2. To open chirurgically; to cut in order to a cure.

We do lance

Diseases in our bodies.

Fell sorow's tooth doth never rackle more

Than when it bites, but lanceth not the sore. Shaks.

That differs as far from our usual severities, as the lancings of a physician do from the wounds of an adversary.

Decay of Chr. Piety.

Lance the sore,

And cut the head, for all the core is found

The secret vice is fed.

Drayton.

The shepherd stands,

And when the lancing knife requires his hands,

Vain help, with idle pray'r, from heav'n demands.

Drayton.

LANCELY. adj. [from lance.] Suitable to a lance. Not in use.

He carried his lances, which were strong, to give a lanceably blow.

Sidney.

LANCEPESADE. n. s. [lance spezate, Fr.; Dr. Johnson. — Formerly lancepesado, and by corruption lancepesado.] It is originally Italian: lancia spezata.] The officer under the corporal; not now in use among us, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the example from Cleveland. Perhaps lance-corporal is now the term for such officer. Properly the lance-pesado signifies a reduced officer.

Since fathers were cashier'd,

The ribbands have been to some officer rear'd;

'Tis hard to meet a lancepesado, where

Some elixir of favour do not straight appear.

The Soldier's Academy, p. 10.

The lowest rank and meanest office in an army is called lancepedano or prezido; who is the leader or governor of half a file; and therefore is commonly called a middle man, or captain over four.

To th' Indies of her arm he flies,

Fraught both with east and western price,

Which, when he had in vain essay'd,

Arm'd like a dapper lancepedano,

With Spanish pike, he lancepedano a peer. Cleveland.

LANCEPESADE. n. s. [from lance; French, lancier.]

1. One that carries a lance; one armed with a lance.

Each lancepess will his weighty lance did wield.

Mir. for Mag. p. 822.

They passed with all speed through the vauntguard of some seven hundred lancers.

Sir R. Williams, Act of the L. Convent. [1618.] p. 21.

Such the bold leaders of these lancers were.

Devenant, Gentleman.

2. A lancet. Not now in use.

They cut themselves, after their fashion, with knives and lancers.

I Amos, xviii. 28.

He provoked Belial's prophets to cut themselves with knives and lancers.

Shedder's Learned Discoveries, p. 265.

LANCEPESADE. n. s. [lancette, French.]

1. A small pointed, chirurgic instrument.

I gave vent to it by an operation with a lancet, and discharged white matter. Wiemen, Surgery.

A vein, in an apparent blue runnel along the body, and if dexterously pricked with a lancet, emitteth a red drop. Wiemen, Surgery.

Hippocrates, on blood-letting should be done with broad lancets or swords, in order to make a large orifice: the manner of opening a vein then was by stabbing or perfusion, as in horses.

Arbuthnot.

2. A pointed window.

Here have been dug up, pieces of the mouldings of lancet windows, and other fragments of antique masonry in situ.

Wotton, Hist. of Kildington, p. 17.

To LANCHE. v. a. [lancer, Fr. This word is too often written launceh; it is only a vocal corruption of lance.] See LANCE, and To LAUNCH.] To dart; to cast as a lance; to throw; to let fly.

See whose arm can lance the surer bolt,

And who's the better bow.

Drayton and Lee, Edgiva.

Me, only me, the hand of fortune here,

Unbless'd to tread that interdicted shore:

When Jove tremendous in the subtle deeps,

Launceh's his red light'ning at our scatter'd ships.

Pope.

To LAUNCH. v. n. See To LAUNCH.

LANCH. n. s. See LAUNCH.

To LANCINATE. † v. a. [lancino, Lat.]

To tear; to rend; to lacerate.

The stitch [is] a sharp lancinating pain.

Johnson, in F. Stich.

LANCINATION. n. s. [from lancino, Lat.] Tearing; laceration.

LAND.† n. s. [land, Goth. land, Saxon; and so all the Teutonic dialects. "Vox antiquissima." Serenius.]

1. A country; a region; distinct from other countries.

The nations of Scythia, like a mountain flood, did overflow all Spain, and quite washed away people: there were left of the land-levied people.

Spenser on Ireland.

Thy ambition, Those scarlet sin, rob'd this bewailing land, Of noble Buckingham. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII. What had he done to make him fly the land?

Shakespeare.

The chief men of the land had great authority; though the government was monarchical, it was not despotical. Broom on the Odyssey.

2. Earth; distinct from water.

By land they found that huge and mighty country. Albot.

Yet, if thou go'st by land, tho' grief possess me My soul 'ere I then, my fears would be the less: But ah! 't will be wam'd to waste the way's way.

Dryden.

They turn their heads to sea, their sterns to land, And greet with greedy joy the Italian strand.

Dryden.

3. It is often used in composition, as opposed to sea.

The princes delighting their conceits with confirming their knowledge, seeing wherein the discipline differed from the land-service, they had pleasing certainties. Sidney. He to-night hath boarded a land-carriage! If it prove lawful prize, he's made for ever.

Shakespeare.

With eleven thousand land-soldiers, and twenty-six ships of war, we within two months have won one town. Bacon.

Necessity makes men ingenious and hardy; and if they have but land-room or sea-room, they find supplies for their hunger. Hale, Orig. of Menkin. I write not always in the proper terms of navigation, or land-service. Dryden, Æn.

The French are to pay the same duties at the dry ports through which they pass by land carriage, as we pay upon importation or exportation by sea. Adamson, Freuchholder.

The Phenicians carried on a land-trade to Syria and Mesopotamia, and stooped out skirt, without pushing their trade to the Indies. Arbuthnot on Cæna.

The species brought by land-carriage were much better than those which came to Egypt by sea. Arbuthnot.

4. Ground; surface of the place. Unusual.

Beneath his steely casque he felt the blow, And roll'd, with limbs relax'd, along the land.

Pope.

5. An estate real and immovable.

To forfeit all your goods, lands, and tenements, Cattle, and goods whatsoever, and to be Out of the klog's protection. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

He kept himself within the bounds of loyalty, and enjoyed certain lands and towers in the borders of Polonia. Kudlak.

This man is freed from servile hands, Of hope to rise, or fear to fall: Lord of himself, though not of lands, And having nothing, yet hath all. Watson.

6. Nation; people; the inhabitants of the land.

These answers in the silent night receiv'd, The king himself divulg'd, the land believ'd.

Dryden.

7. Urine. [hlanb, Saxon.]

Probably land-damn was a coarse expression in the cant strain, formerly in common use, but since laid aside and forgotten, which meant the taking away a man's life. For land or lant is an old word for urine, and to stop the common passages and functions of nature is to kill.

Hammer.

You are abused, and by some putter on That will be damn'd for't; would I knew the villain,

I would land-damn him. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

The preceding example is a very doubtful one of this sense of land, and the passage, in which it occurs, has perplexed all the commentators on the poet. Land or lant is, however, in this sense used in Lancashire. Editor.

TO LAND. V. a. [from the noun.] To set on shore.

The legions, now in Gallie, sooner landed In Britain. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

He who rules the raging wind, To thee, O sacred ship, be kind, Thy committed pledge restore, And land him safely on the shore.

Dryden, Horace.

Another Typhis shall new seas explore, Another Argo land the chiefs upon th' Iberian shore.

Dryden.

TO LAND. V. n. To come to shore.

Let him land, And so: 'y see him set on to London. Shakespeare, La. none of you, and provide to be gone from this coast within sixteen days.

Bacon, New Atlantis.

I land, with luckless omens; then arose Their gods. Dryden, Æn.

LANDA'U. * n. s. [probably from a vehicle of this kind used in the town of Landau in Bavaria.] A coach, of which the top may be occasionally open.

LA'NDED. adj. [from land.] Having a fortune, not in money but in land; having a real estate.

A landless knight makes thee a landed squire.

Shakespeare, A. John.

Men, whose living lyeth together in one shire, are commonly counted greater landed than those whose livings are dispersed. Bacon.

Cromwell's officers, who were for levelling lands while they had none, when they grew landed fell to crying up magna charta. Temple.

A house of commons must consist, for the most part, of landed men. Adamson, Freuchholder.

LA'NDALL.† n. s. [land and fall.]

1. A sudden translation of property in land by the death of a rich man.

2. In naval language, the first land discovered after a sea-voyage.

LA'NDFLOOD. n. s. [land and flood.] Inundation.

Apprehensions of the affections of Kent, and all other places, looked like a landflood, that might roll they knew not how far. Clarendon.

LAND-POWERS. n. s. [land and force.] Warlike powers not naval; soldiers that serve on land.

We behold in France the greatest land-force that have ever been known under any christian prince. Temple.

LA'NDGRAVE. n. s. [land and grave, or graf, a count, German.] A German title of dominion.

LA'NDHOLDER. n. s. [land and holder.] One who holds lands.

Money, as necessary to trade, may be considered as in his hands that pays the labourer and landholder; and if this man waste money, the manufacture is not made, and so the trade is lost. Locke.

LA'NDING.† } n. s. [from land.]
LA'NDING-PLACE. }

1. The top of stairs. Let the stairs to the upper rooms be upon a fair, open newel, and a fair landing-place at the top. Bacon.

The landing-place is the uppermost step of a pair of stairs, viz. the floor of the rooms you ascend upon. Mason.

There is a stair-case that strangers are generally carried to see, where the easiness of the ascent, the disposition of the lights, and the convenient landing, are admirably well contrived. Adamson on Italy.

What the Romans called vestibulum was no part of the house, but the court and landing-place between it and the street. Arbuthnot on Cæna.

2. The act of coming on shore.

Agriola — sent his navy to hover on the coast, and with sundry and uncertain landings to divert and disunite the Britons. Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 2.

LA'NDJOBBER. n. s. [land and job.] One who buys and sells lands for other men.

If your master be a minister of state, let him be at home to none but land-jobbers, or inventors of new lands. Sayl.

LA'NLADY. n. s. [land and lady.]

1. A woman who has tenants holding from her.

2. The mistress of an inn. If a soldier drinks his pial, and offers payment to Wood's halpence, the landlady may be under some difficulty. Sayl.

LA'NDDLES.† adj. [from land, Sax. lanh-leaf.] Without property; without fortune.

Young Fortinbras.

Hath in the skirts of Norway, here and there, Shark'd up a list of landless resolute.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

A landless knight makes thee a landed squire. Shakespeare, A. John.

LA'NDDLOCKED.† adj. [land and lock.] Shut in, or enclosed with land.

The haves before the town is land-locked.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 100.

There are few natural parts better landlocked, and closed on all sides, than this seems to have been. Adamson on Italy.

LA'NDLOPER.† n. s. [land and loopen.] Dutch.] A landman; a term of reproach used by seamen of those who pass their lives on shore.

Such travellers as these may be termed landlopers, in the Dutchman's style, rather than travellers. Howell, Instructions for Trav. (1642) p. 187.

LA'NDLORD.† n. s. [land and lord. Sax. lanthlarpob.]

1. One who owns land or houses, and has tenants under him.

This regard shall be had, that in no place, under any landlord, there shall be many of these placed together but dispersed. Spenser on Ireland.

It is a generous pleasure in a landlord, to love to see all his tenants look fit, sleek, and contented. Richardson, Clarissa.

2. The master of an inn. Upon your arrival at the inn, my companion fetched out the jolly landlord, who knew him by his whistle. Adamson.

LA'NDLORDRY. * n. s. [from landlord.] State of a landlord.

Filtering slips of petty landlordry. By. Hall, Sat. v. i.

LANDMAN.* n. s. [land and man. Sax. lanbman.] One who lives or serves on land; opposed to seaman; a countryman.

Soldier.
Our navy thrives, I have an absolute hope
Our landmen will stand up.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.
The ships being so filled with landmen, there was a great want of water.

Burnet, Hist. of his own Time, (an. 1708.)
It often antichases a landman to observe with what precision a sailor can distinguish, in the offing, not only the appearance of a ship, which is altogether invisible to the landman, but the number of her masts, the direction of her course, and the rate of her sailing.

A. Smith, on the External Senses.

LANDMARK.† n. s. [land and mark. Sax. lanbmaerik.] Any thing set up to preserve the boundaries of lands.

It's the midst, an altar, as the land-mark, stood, Rustic, of grassy soil. Milton, P. L.
The land-marks by which places in the church had been known, were removed. Clerodan.

Then land-marks limited to each his right;
For all before was common as the light. Dryden.
Though they are not self-evident principles, yet if they have been made out from them by a wary and unquestonable deduction, they may serve as land-marks, to show what lies in the direct way of truth, or is quite besides it. Locke.

LANDSCAPE.† n. s. [landscape, Dutch. Dr. Johnson. — Landscipe, Saxon; and our old authors write the word landscape; though Dr. Johnson has unjustly exhibited landscape as the form used by Milton. The word has been also written landscap, as if it were from the Greek verb sképomai (sképomai), to look over; and in later times, rather affectedly, landscape. It is probably from the Saxon reapian, to shape, and land, q. d. the shape of the land or country. It appears to have been a word newly introduced, when Drayton published his Polyolbion early in the reign of James the first; for, using it in his eighteenth song, p. 284, he has thought it expedient thus to explain his "landscape" in the margin, viz. "the natural expressing of the surface of a country in painting."]

1. A region, the prospect of a country.
The pleasant varieties of these earthly landscapes.
Sp. Hall, Free Friarism, § 9.
Straight mine eyes had caught new pleasures,
Whilst the landscape round it measures
Russet lawns and fallows grey,
Where the sibilant flock do stray. Milton, L'Al.

Lovely seen'd,
That landscape; and of pure, now purer air,
Meets his approach. Milton, P. L.

The sun scarce uprisen,
Shot parallel to'th' earth his dewy ray,
Discovering in wide landscape all the east
Of paradise, and Eden's happy plains. Milton, P. L.

We are like men entertained with the view of a spacious landscape, where the eye passes over one pleasing prospect into another. Addison.

2. A picture representing an extent of space, with the various objects in it.

The Jews indeed saw Christ presented in a landscape, and beheld him through the perspective of faith.

Fuller, Sermon of Reformation, (Oz. 1645.) p. 8.

As good a poet as you are, you cannot make finer landscapes than those about the king's house. Addison.

On in her glass the musing shepherd spies
The watery landscape of the pendant woods,
And absent trees, that tremble in the floods. Pope.
The Scenians of Thomson have been very instrumental in diffusing a general taste for the beauties of nature and landscape.

Sp. Warren, Ess. on Pope.
To LANDSCAPE.* v. a. To represent in landscape. Not in use.

As weary traveller that climbs a hill,
Looks back, sits down, and off it hand have skill,
Landscapist the valley with pencil; placing here
Meadow, there arable, &c.
Archd. Halyday, Serv. of the World, 1661, Pref.

LANDSTREIGHT.* n. s. [land and straight. See the substantive STRAIT.] A narrow passage, or slip of land.

A city — seated upon seven hills, at or near unto the sea; indeed in a foreland or landstreight, where two seas meet.

Montague, App. to Cox, (1625.) p. 158.
LAND-TAX. n. s. [land and tax.] Tax laid upon land and houses.

If mortgages were registered, land-taxes might reach the lender to pay his proportion. Locke.

LAND-WAITER. n. s. [land and waiter.] An officer of the customs, who is to watch what goods are landed.

Give a guinea to a knavish land-waiter, and he shall connive at the merchant for cheating the queen of an hundred. Swift, Examiner.

LANDWARD. adv. [from land.] Towards the land.

They are invincible by reason of the overpowering mountains that back the one, and slender fortification of the other to landward.

Sandys, Trav.

LAND-WIND.* n. s. [land and wind.] A gale or wind from the land.

A sudden stiff land-wind in that self hour
To seaward for'd this bird. Dennis, Poems, p. 304.

LAND-WORKER.* n. s. [land and worker.]

One who tills the ground.
The latter state, that of the land-worker, is represented as under a curse, and is made the punishment of his disobeying a positive command. Journal on Antiq. p. 140.

LANE. n. s. [laen, Dutch; lana, Saxon.]

1. A narrow way between edges.

All flying
Through a straight lane, the enemy full-bearded Struck down some mortally. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.
I know each lane, and every alley green,
Dingle or bushy dell, of this wild wood,
And every booky bourn. Milton, Comus.
Through a close lane as I pursue my journey.

A peck-home is driven constantly in a narrow lane and dirty road. Locke.

2. A narrow street; an alley.
There is no street, not many lanes, where there does not live one that has relation to the church. Spens, Sermon.

3. A passage between men standing on each side.

The earl's servants stood ranged on both sides, and made the king a lane. Bacon, Hen. VII.

LANG.* adj. [lagg, M. Goth. which in the pronunciation is lang; langrum, Saxon. See LONG, and LONGORNE.] Long — our northern word. Thus also langsome for longsome, tedious; and langsettle for longsettle.

LANGREL Skot.* n. s. A kind of chain-shot.

LANGSETTLE.* n. s. [lang and settle.] A long bench to sit on. Praise of Yorksh. Ale, 1697. Common throughout the north of England.

LANGTERALO.* n. s. A game at cards; in some places called lanterloo; and in some langtra, which Pegge takes to be French, viz. langtrais, it being often long, he says, before three cards of one suit come into a hand. But langtra seems to be an abbreviation only of langterloo; of which name, however, I know not the origin.

An old nonsense bet both ways by Lilly the almanack-maker for luck at langterloo.

Tatler, No. 945.

LANGUAGE.† n. s. [language, French; lingua, Latin.]

1. Human speech.
We may define language, if we consider it more materially, to be letters, forming and joining words and sentences; but if we consider it according to the design thereof, then language is apt signs for communication of thoughts. Holder.

2. The tongue of one nation as distinct from others.

It's good my lord, no Latin;
I am not such a truant since my coming.
As not to know the language I have liv'd in. Shakespeare.

He not from Rome alone, but Greece,
Like Jason, brought the golden fleece;
To him that language, though to none
Of 'th' others, as his own was known. Dehman.

3. Style; manner of expression.
Though his language should not be refin'd,
It must not be obscure and impudent. Racine.

Others for language all their care express,
And value books; as women, men, for dress:
Their praise is still — the style is excellent;
The scene, they humbly take upon content. Pope.

4. A nation distinguished by their language.

To you it is commanded, O people, nations, and languages, that at what time ye hear the sound of the cornet, &c. ye fall down and worship the golden image that Nebuchadnezzar the king hath set up. Den. iii. 4, 5.

To LANGUAGE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To give language to; to express. Not now in use.

A new dispute there lately rose Betwixt the Greeks and Latines, whose Temples should be bound with glory

In best language this story. Locke, Sermon, p. 82.

LANGUED.† adj. [from the noun.]

1. Knowing language; using language properly or gracefully.

Not eloquent, nor well-langued, (indiscreet). Barnet on F. Eloquent.

They are the only knowing men in Europe,
The only langued men of all the world. Dr. Johnson, Fas.

2. Having various languages.

He wand'ring long a wide circle made,
And many langued nations has survey'd. Pope.

LANGUAGE-MASTER. n. s. [language and master.] One whose profession is to teach languages.

The third is a sort of language-master, who is to instruct them in the style proper for a minister. Spenser.

LANGUET. n. s. [langnette, French.] Any thing cut in the form of a tongue.

LA'NGUID. adj. [languidus, Latin.]

1. Faint; weak; feeble.

Whatever renders the motion of the blood languid, disposeth to an acid acrimony; what accelerates the motion of the blood, disposeth to an alkaline acrimony. Arbuthnot.

No space can be assigned so vast, but still a larger may be imagined; no motion so swift or languid, but a greater velocity or slowness may still be conceived. Bentley.

2. Dull; heartless.

I'll hasten to my troops,
And fire their languid souls with Cato's virtue. Addison.

LA'NGUIDLY. adv. [from languid.] Weakly; feebly.

The menstruum would's as languidly upon the coral, as it did before. Boyle.

LA'NGUIDNESS. f. n. [from languid.] Weakness; feebleness; want of strength.

Many sick, and keep up; could without coughing or running at the nose; only a languidness and faintness. Life of A. Wood, (an 1678), p. 273.

To LA'NGUISH. v. n. [languis, French; languere, Latin; from the Greek λῆγνυμι, to be weary.]

1. To grow feeble; to pine away; to lose strength.

Let her languish
A drop of blood a-day; and, being aged,
Die of this folly. Shakespeare, Cymb.
We and our fathers do languish of such diseases. Y. Ender.

2. To be no longer vigorous in motion; not to be vivid in appearance.

3. To sink or pine under sorrow, or any slow passion.

The land shall mourn, and every one that dwelleth therein shall languish. Hosea, ii. 3.
I have been talking with a squire here,
A man that languishes in your displeasure. Shakespeare, Othello.

I was about fifteen when I took the liberty to chase for myself, and have ever since languished under the displeasure of an inexorable father. Addison, Spect.

Let Leonora consider, that, at the very time in which the languisher for the loss of her deceased lover, there are persons just perishing in a shipwreck. Addison, Spect.

4. To look with softness or tenderness.

What poems think you soft, and to be read
With languishing regards, and bending head? Dryden.

To LA'NGUISH. v. a. To make feeble; to cause to droop; to depress; to wear out.

What man who knows
What woman is, yet, what she cannot choose
But must be, will his few hours languish out
For some'd bondage? Shakespeare, Cymbeline.
That he might satisfy, or languish, that burning flame. Florio, Tr. of Montaigne, (1613), p. 495.

How leaden sleep had seal'd up all his eyes;
Then, silent, with his magic rod he strokes
Their languish'd lights, which sadder sleep provokes. Sandys, Oct's. Met. B. 1.

The languish'd mother's womb
Was not long a living tomb. Milton, Epit. March. of Winchester.

Like a neglected rose,
It withers on the stalk with languish'd head. Milton, Comus.

His words their drooping cheer

The troops with hate inspir'd,
Their darts and clamour at a distance drive,
And only keep the languish'd war alive. Dryden.

LA'NGUISH. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Act or state of pining.

One desperate grief comes with another's languish. Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

2. Soft appearance.

And the blue languish of soft Allia's eye. Pope.
Then forth he walks,
Beneath the trembling languish of her beam,
With soften'd soul. Thomson, Spring.

LA'NGUISHER. n. s. [from languish.] One who pines or languishes.

These unhappy languishers in obscurity should be furnished with such accounts of the employments of people of the world, as may engage them in their several remote corners to a laudable imitation. Mrs. E. Carter, in Dr. Johnson's Rambler, No. 100.

LA'NGUISHING. n. s. [from languish.] Feebleness; loss of strength.

There is a remedy approv'd, set down
To cure the desperate languishings, whereof
The king is render'd lost. Shakespeare, All's Well.

What can we expect, but that her languishings should end in death? Deacy of Chr. Party.

LA'NGUISHINGLY. adv. [from languish.] 1. Weakly; feebly; with feeble softness.

Leave such to tune their own dull rhymes, and know
What's roundly smooth, or languishingly slow. Pope.

2. Dully; tediously.

Alas! my Dorus, thou seest how long and languishingly the weeks are past over since our last talking. Swif.

3. With soft appearance.

Not Titian's pencil e'er could so array,
So sweet with clouds the pure ethereal space;
As could it e'er such melting forms display,
No less on flowery beds all languishingly lay. Thomson, Castle of Indolence, C. 1.

LA'NGUISHMENT. n. s. [from languish, French; from languish.] 1. State of pining.

By that count, which lovers' books invent,
The sphere of Cupid forty years contains;
Which I have wasted in long languishment,
That seem'd the longer for my greater pains. Spenser.

2. Softness of mien.

Humility it expresses, by the stooping or bending of the head; languishment, when we hang it on one side. Dryden.

LA'NGUOR. f. n. [languor, Latin; languere, French.] The easy use of our word is in the sense of disease.

Wildfire renders, what in the present version is "taken with divers diseases and torments." St. Matt. vi. 24. "taken with diverse languores and torments."

1. Faintness; wearisomeness.

Well hop'd I, and fair beginnings had,
That he my captive languor should redeem. Spenser.

For these, those tribunes, in the dust I write
My heart's deep languor, and my soul's sad tears. Shakespeare.

2. Listlessness; inattention.

Academical disputation gives vigour and relieves the languor of private study and meditation. Watts, Impr. of the Mind.

3. Softness; laxity.

To isles of fragrance, lily-silver'd vales
Diffusing languor in the pining gales. Pope, Dunciad.

4. [In physics.]

Languor and lassitude signifies a faintness, which may arise from want or decay of spirits, through indigestion, or too much exercise; or from an additional weight of fluids, from a diminution of secretion by the common discharges. Quincy.

LA'NGUOROUS. adj. [languoreus, Fr.] Tedious; melancholy. Not in use.

Dear lady, how shall I declare thy case,
When late I left in languorous constraint? Spenser.

To LA'NGUOR. v. n. [from languere, Lat.] To languish. "Languering in care, sorrow, or thought." Hueto. Not now in use.

Now will I speak of woful Damian,
That languish'd for love. Chaucer, March. Tale.

The most breedeth upon cloth and other lanifices, especially if they be laid up dankish and wet. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

LA'NIGEROUS. adj. [laniger, Latin.] Bearing wool.

LANK. adj. [lancke, Dutch.]

1. Loose; not filled up; not stiffened out; not fat; not plump; slender.

The commons hast thou rack'd; the clergy's bags
Are lank and lean with thy extortions. Shakespeare.

Name not Winterface, whose skin's slack,
Lean, as an unstruck's purse. Denham.

We let down into the receiver a great bladder well tied at the neck, but very lank, as not containing above a pint of air, but capable of containing ten times as much. Boyle.

Moist earth produces corn and grass, but both too rank and too luxuriant in their growth. Let not my land so large a promise boast,
Lost the least ears in length of time be lost. Dryden.

Now, now my bearded harvest gilds the plain.
Thus dreams the wretch, and vainly thus dreams on,
Till his lean purse declares his money gone. Dryden.

Maggie and lank with fasting grown,
And nothing left but skin and bone;
They just keep life and soul together. Swift.

2. Milton seems to use this word for faint; languid.

He piteous of her woes, rear'd her lank head,
And gave her to his daughters to imbath
In nectar'd lavers strew'd with asphodel. Milton, Comus.

To LANK. v. n. [from the adjective.] To become lank; to fall away.

Was borne so like a soldier, that thy cheek
So much as lank'd not. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

LA'NKLY. adv. [from lank.] Loosely; thinly.

When forty winters more
Have furrow'd deep my pallid brow;
When the wilder'd head, a scanty store,
Lonely the wither'd tresson flour. Sir J. Hall, Song.

LA'NKNESS. n. s. [from lank.] Want of plumpness.

Thou shalt eat, but thou shalt not thrive with it: there shall be a kind of languor and depression within thy belly for very famine.

Stokes on the Proph. (1659.) p. 399.

LANKY,* adj. [from lank.] A vulgar expression to denote a tall thin person.

LANNERET,* n. s. [lanner, Fr. lannarius, Lat.] A species of hawk.

'Tis well if among them you can clearly make out a lanner, a sparrow-hawk, and a kestrel.

Here are—sundry other birds; as godawks, lanners, hobbies. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 393.

LANNERET,* n. s. A little hawk.

Of lanner, eagle, &c. are formed lanner, eagle.

Bulwer, Eng. Gram. (1633.)

LANSQUENET,* n. s. [Fr. from lance and knecht, Dutch.]

1. A common foot-soldier.

2. A game at cards.

LANTERN,* n. s. [lanterne, French; lanterna, Latin: it is by mistake often written lanthorn. Dr. Johnson—Lanthorn seems to have been written, from a confused notion that the name had some reference to the thin lamine of horn of which it is frequently formed; quasi, lamp-horn. This etymology would infallibly be admitted, were the right one less known; and may serve as an instance of the fallacious nature of etymology. What could persuade an etymologist to give up such a derivation? especially if he recollected that a candle and lantern is called by Plautus "Ulcus in cornu conclusus" Nares, Elem. of Orthoep. p. 295.]

1. A transparent case for a candle.

God shall be my hope.

My stay, my guide, my lantern to my feet.

Shakespeare.

Thou art our admiral; thou bearest the lantern in the poop, but 'tis in the nose of thee; thou art the knight of the burning lamp.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

A candle lasteth longer in a lanthorn than at large.

Bacon.

Amongst the excellent acts of that king, none hath the pre-eminence, the erection and institution of a society, which we call Solomon's house; the noblest foundation that ever was, and the lanthorn of this kingdom.

Bacon, Atlantica.

O thirish night,

Why should'st thou, but for some felonious end,

In thy dark lantern thus close up the stars.

That nature hung in beads, and fill'd their lamps

With everlasting oil?

Milton, Comus.

Vice is like a dark lanthorn, which turns its bright side only to him that bears it, but looks black and dismal in another's hand.

Bacon, Atlantica.

O thirish night,

Why should'st thou, but for some felonious end,

In thy dark lantern thus close up the stars.

That nature hung in beads, and fill'd their lamps

With everlasting oil?

Milton, Comus.

Vice is like a dark lanthorn, which turns its bright side only to him that bears it, but looks black and dismal in another's hand.

Bacon, Atlantica.

O thirish night,

Why should'st thou, but for some felonious end,

In thy dark lantern thus close up the stars.

That nature hung in beads, and fill'd their lamps

With everlasting oil?

Milton, Comus.

Vice is like a dark lanthorn, which turns its bright side only to him that bears it, but looks black and dismal in another's hand.

Bacon, Atlantica.

O thirish night,

Why should'st thou, but for some felonious end,

In thy dark lantern thus close up the stars.

That nature hung in beads, and fill'd their lamps

With everlasting oil?

Milton, Comus.

Vice is like a dark lanthorn, which turns its bright side only to him that bears it, but looks black and dismal in another's hand.

Bacon, Atlantica.

2. A lighthouse; a light hung out to guide ships.

Caprea, where the lanthorn fix'd on high,
Shines like a beam through the benighted sky,
While by its moans the weary sailor steers. Addis.

3. In architecture, a kind of little dome raised over a large one, or over the roof of a building; a sort of turret full of windows, by means of which the building is illuminated. [lanternium, low Latin.]

It [the saint's bell] was usually placed where it might be heard farthest, in a lantern at the springing of the steeple.

Watson, Hist. of Kidlington. p. 8.

LANTERN JAW. A term used of a thin visage, such as if a candle were burning in the mouth, might transmit the light.

Being very lucky in a pair of long lanthorn-jaws, he wrung his face into a hideous grimace.

Addison, Spect.

LANTERNING. adj. [lanuginosus, Latin.] Downy; covered with soft hair.

LANYARDS.* n. s. pl. In naval language, small ropes or short pieces of cord, fastened to several machines in a ship; and serving to secure them in a particular place.

Call all hands to clear the wreck.

Quick the lanyards cut to pieces.

G. A. Stevens, The Storm.

LAP,* n. s. [læppe, lappa, Saxon; lappe, German; lapp, pannus, Su. Goth.]

1. The loose part of a garment, which may be doubled at pleasure.

He can so lightly catch him in his lappes,

Till that a man be best right by the lappes.

Chaucer, Sec. Nonne's Tale.

If a joint of meat falls on the ground, take it up gently, wipe it with the lap of your coat, and then put it into the dish.

Swift, Direct. to a Footman.

2. The part of the clothes that is spread horizontally over the knees, as one sits down, so as any thing may lie in it.

It feeds each living plant with liquid sap.

And fills with flowers fair Flora's painted lap.

Spenser.

Upon a day, as love lay sweetly slumbering

All in his mother's lap,

A gentle breeze, with his loud trumpet murmuring,

Came first to blow by his lap.

I'll make my haven in a lady's lap.

And with sweet ladies with my words and looks.

Shakespeare.

She bids you

All on the wanton rubies lay you down.

And rest your gentle head upon her lap.

And she will sing the song that pleases you.

Shakespeare.

Our stirring

Can from the lap of Egypt's widow pluck

The oo'er-lust-wearied Antony.

Shakespeare.

Heaven's almighty sire,

Melts on the bosom of his love, and pours

Himself into her lap in fruitful showers.

Men expect that religion should cost them no pains, and that happiness should drop into their laps.

Tillotson.

He struggles into breath, and cries for aid;

Then, helpless, in his mother's lap is laid.

He creeps, he walks, and hastens into man.

Grudges their life from whence his own began:

Reckless of laws, affects to rule alone.

Anxious to reign, and restless on the throne.

Dryden.

TO LAP,* v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To wrap or twist round any thing.

13

When the body was taken, Joseph lapped it in a clean linen. Wartley, St. Matt. xxvii.

He hath a long tail, which, as he descends from a tree, he laps round about the boughs to keep himself from falling. Green, Aescum.

About the paper, whose two halves were painted with red and blue, and which was stiff like thin pasteboard, I lapped several times a slender thread of very black silk.

Newson.

2. To involve in any thing.

As through the flowering forest rash she fled,
To her rude hairs sweet flowers themselves did shed,
And flourishing fresh leaves and blossoms did en-wrap.

Spenser.

The thane of Cawder 'gan a dismal complaint,
Till that Bellina's bridegroom, lapt in proof Confronted him. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

When we both lay in the saddle,
Frozen almost to death, how did lap me,
Ev'n to his garments, and did give himself,
All thin and naked to the numb cold night.

Shakespeare.

Ever against eating cars,
Lap me in soft Lydian airs. Milton, El. Para.

Indulgent fortune does her rare employ,
And smiling broods upon the naked boy;
Her garment spreads, and laps him in the folds,
And covers with her wings from nightly colds.

Dryden.

Here was the repository of all the wise contentions for power between the nobles and commons, lapt up safely in the bosom of a Nero and a Caligula.

Swift.

TO LAP,* v. n. To be spread or turned over any thing.

The upper wings are opaque; at their hinder ends, where they lap over, transparent, like the wing of a fly.

Green.

TO LAP,* v. n. [lappian, Saxon; lappen, Dutch.] To feed by quick reciprocations of the tongue.

The dogs by the river Nilus' side being thirsty, lap hastily as they run along the shore.

Dryden.

They had soups served up in broad dishes, and so the fast fell to lapping himself, and bade his guests heartily welcome.

L'Estrange.

The tongue serves not only for tasting, but for mastication and deglutition, in man, by licking; in the dog and cat kind by lapping.

Ray on Creation.

TO LAP,* v. o. To lick up.

For all the rest

They'll take suggestion as a cat laps milk.

Shakespeare.

Every one that lapped of the water with his tongue, as a dog lapped, him shall thou set by himself.

Judges, vii. 5.

Upon a bull

Two horrid Lyons ramped, and seiz'd, and tugg'd off, bellowing still,

Both men and dogs came; y yet they tore the hide and lap their fill.

Chapman, Iliad.

LAPDOG,* n. s. [lap and dog.] A little dog, fondled by ladies in the lap.

One of them made his court to the lap-dog, to improve his interest with the lady.

Collier.

These, if the laws did that exchange afford,
Would save their lap-dogs sooner than their lord.

Dryden.

Lap-dogs give themselves the rowing shake, And sleepless lovers just at twelve awake.

Pope.

LAPFUL,* n. s. [from lap.] That part of the coat which laps over; the facing. A modern word.

LAPFUL,* n. s. [lap and full.] As much as can be contained in the lap.

One found a wild vine, and gathered thereof wild gourds his lapful, and shred them into the pot of pottage.

2 Kings.

Will four per cent. increase the number of lenders? If it will not, then all the plenty of money these conjurers bestow upon us, is but like the gold and silver which old women believe other conjurers bestow by whole bagfuls on poor credulous girls.

L'APICIDE. n. s. [lapicida, Latin.] A stonecutter.

L'APIDARY. n. s. [lapidaria, Fr.] One who deals in stones or gems.

A false diamond is not set in a ring without a subtil felony, in such wise as the deceit of the discover may hardly be discovered without the help of an expert lapidary.

Knights, Trial of Truth, (1580.) fol. 92.
As a cock was turning up a dunghill, he espied a diamond: Well (says he) this sparkling foliote now to a lapidary would have been the making of him; but, as to any use of value, a barley-corn had been worth forty on't.

Of all the many sorts of the gem kind reckoned up by the lapidaries, there are not above three or four that are original.

L'APIDARY. adj. Monumental; inscribed on stone.

Two sermons preached on occasion of bishop Gunning's death, and in Dr. Jenkin's lapidary verses prefixed to those sermons.

Life of Dr. Barwick, (1794.) Note, p. 40.
A nobler eulogium than all the lapidary adulation of modern epitaphs.

To L'APIDATE. v. a. [lapido, Latin.] To stone; to kill by stoning.

LAPIDATION. n. s. [lapidatio, Latin; lapidation, Fr.] A stoning.

All adulterers should be executed by lapidation; the ancient punishment was burning; death always, though in divers forms.

LAPIDESCENS. n. s. [lapidesco, Latin.] Stony; of the nature of stone.

There might fall down into the lapidescent matter before it was concentered into a stone, some small toad, which might remain there imprisoned till the matter about it was condensed.

LAPIDESCENT. n. s. [lapidesco, Latin.] Stony concretion.

Of lapis carities, or cornu fossilis, in subterraneous cavities, there are many to be found in Germany, which are but the lapidescentes, and putrefactive mutations of hard bodies.

LAPIDESCENT. adj. [lapidesco, Latin.] Growing or turning to stone.

Hardened by the air, or a certain lapidescent succus or spirit, which it meets with.

LAPIDIFICATION. n. s. [lapidification, Fr.] The act of forming stones.

Induration or lapidification of substances more soft is another degree of condensation.

LAPIDIFIQUE. adj. [lapidifique, French.] Forming stones.

The atoms of the lapidifical, as well as saline principle, being regular, do concur in producing regular stones.

L'APIDIST. n. s. (from lapides, Latin.) A dealer in stones or gems.

Hardness, wherein some stones exceed all other bodies, being cradled to that degree, that art in vain endeavours to counterfeits it, the facitious stones of chemists in imitation being easily detected by an ordinary lapidist.

L'APIS. n. s. [Latin.] A stone.

The lapis lazuli, or azure stone, is a copper ore, very compact and hard, so as to take a high polish, and is worked into a great variety of toys. It is found in detached lumps, of an elegant blue colour, variegated with clouds of white, and veins of a shining gold colour; to it the painters are indebted for their beautiful ultra-marine colour, which is only a calcination of lapis lazuli.

L'APLING. n. s. (from lap.) A term of contempt for one wrapped up in sensual delights.

You must stream out your youth in wine, and live a lapping to the silk and dainties.

Henry, Scrm. (1658.) p. 7.
L'APPER. n. s. (from lap.)

1. One who wraps up.
They may be lappers of linen, and bailiffs of the manor.

2. One who laps or licks.

L'APPET. n. s. [diminutive of lap.] The parts of a head dress that hang loose.

How naturally do you apply your hands to each others lapets, and ruffles, and mantuas!

LAPSE. n. s. [lapsus, Latin.]

1. Flow; fall; glide; smooth course.
Round I saw
Hill, dale, and shady woods, and sunny plains,
And liquid lapses of murmuring streams.

Notions of the mind are pressed in the memory, notwithstanding lapse of time.

2. Petty error; small mistake; slight offence; little fault.

These are petty errors and minor lapses, not considerably injurious unto truth.

The weakness of human understanding all will confess; yet the confidence of most greatly discovers it; and it is easier to persuade them of it from others' lapses than their own.

This scripture may be usefully applied as a caution to guard against those lapses and fallings, to which our infirmities daily expose us.

It hath been my constant business to examine whether I could find the smallest lapse in style or propriety through my whole collection, that I might send it abroad as the most finished piece.

3. Translation of right from one to another.

In a presentation in a vacant church, a layman ought to present within four months, and a clergyman within six, otherwise a devolution, or lapse of right, happens.

To LAPSE. v. n. (from the noun.)

1. To glide slowly; to fall by degrees.

This disposition to shorten our words, by retrenching the vowels, is nothing else but a tendency to lapse into the barbarity of those northern nations from whom we are descended, and whose languages labour all under the same defect.

2. To fall in any thing; to slip; to commit a fault.

I have ever verified my friends,
Of whom he's chief, with all the size that verity
Would without lapsing suffer.

It is ever then to lie for need; and falsehood is worse in kings than beggars.

3. To slip as by inadvertency or mistake.

Home, in his character of Vulcan and Thersites, has lapsed into the burlesque character, and departed from that serious air essential to an epic poem.

4. To fall by the negligence of one proprietor to another.

If the archbishop shall not fill it up within six months ensuing, it lapses to the king.

5. To fall from perfection, truth or faith.

All publick forms suppose it the most principal, universal, and daily requisite to the laying state of human corruption.

To LAPSE. v. a.

1. To suffer to slip; to suffer to fall or be vacant.

I returned a present answer — that I would either give, or lapse the benefice, as his majesty's gracious letters required of me.

2. To accuse; to convict of a fault.

Johnson places the following example from Shakspeare under the verb venere, with the definition of "to lose the proper time;" under which definition also he includes the preceding example from Ayilife; but the verb in both is clearly active, and with different meanings.

The offences are not of such a bloody nature — I might have since been answer'd it in repaying. What we took from them; which, for traffick's sake, Most of our city did; only myself stood out: For which, if I be lapsed in this place I shall pay dear.

3. Fallen by event.

If the legatee dies before the testator, the legacy is a lost or lapsed legacy.

4. Fallen from perfection, truth, or faith; ruined; lost.

Once more I will renew
His lapsed powers, though forfeit, and entrain'd
By sin to foul apostatous desires.

A sprout of that fig tree which was the bane of the nakedness of lapsed Adam.

These were looked on as lapsed persons, and great severities of penance were prescribed them, as appears by the customs of Ancyra.

5. Omitted or let slip by mistake or inadvertency.

Let there be no wilful perversion of another's meaning; no sudden seizure of a lapsed syllable to play upon it.

L'APATON. n. s. A cobbler's stone, on which he hammers his leather.

Brockett's N. C. Words.

L'APWING. n. s. [lap and wing. Dr. Johnson.] The word was at first lapwink.

So Hulo calls it, in his old dictionary. And so Gower, long before. "A lapwink made he was."

Conf. Am. B. 5. And thus the Saxon leppence, A clamorous bird with long wings.

The lapping runs away with the shell on his head.

Ah! but I think him better than I say, And yet would heretic others eyes were woe's:

Far from her nest the lapping cries away; My bent prays for him, though my tongue do curse.

And how in fields the lapping Tereus reigns, The warbling nightingale in woods complains.

L'APWORK. n. s. [lap and work.] Work in which one part is interchangeably wrapped over the other.

A basket made of porcupine quills; the ground is a pack-thread call woven, into which the Indian wares, are wrought, by a kind of lap-work, the quills of porcupine, not split, but of shag one entire; mixed with white and black in even and indented wavy.

Geo. Museum.

LAR. * n. s. [Latin.] An household god.
Nor will she bear Lar forget.
Victorious by his benefit. Lovaceo, Luc. Post. p. 48.
On the holy hearth.
The Lars and Lectures moon with midnight plaint.
Milton, Ode Nativ.

LARBOARD. n. s.

The left hand side of a ship, when you stand with your face to the head: opposed to the starboard. Harris.
Or when Ulysses on the larboard shunn'd.
Charybdis, and by the other whirlpool steer'd.
Milton, P. L.

Tack to the larboard, and stand off to sea,
Veer starboard sea and land. Dryden.
LAR'CENT. * n. s. [Latin, Fr.; latrocinium, Lat.]

Theft; robbery: and it is twofold, viz. grand and petit, i.e. great and small; that, when what is stolen exceeds, this when it exceeds not, twelve pence in value. Bullocker.

Larciny, or theft, is distinguished by the law into two sorts; the one called simple larciny, unaccompanied with any other atrocious circumstance; and mixt or compound larciny, which also includes in it the aggravation of taking from one's house or person. Simple larciny, when it is the stealing of goods above the value of twelve pence is called grand larciny; when of goods to that value, or under, petty larciny. Blackstone.

These laws would be very unjust, that should chastise murder and petty larciny with the same punishment. Speculator.

LARCH. n. s. [larix, Lat.] A tree.
Some metaphysical critics tell us, the poets have not rightly followed the traditions of antiquity, in metamorphosing the sisters of Phaeton into poplars, who ought to have been turned into larch trees; for that it is this kind of tree which sheds a gum, and is commonly found on the banks of the Po. Addison on Italy.

LARD. * n. s. [lardum, Lat.; lard, Fr.]

1. The grease of swine.
So may thy pastures with their flow'ry flocks,
As suddenly as lard fat thy lean beasts. Dante.

2. Bacon; the flesh of swine; salted pork. Barrett.
By this boiling kettle had prepar'd,
And to the table sent their lard;
On which with eager appetite they dine,
A savoury bit, that serv'd 't to relish wine.
Dryden, Ovid.

The sacrifice they sped,
Chopp'd off their nervous thighs, and next prepar'd
To involve the lean in cauls, and mend with lard.
Dryden.

To LARD. * v. a. [larder, French; from the noun.]

1. To stuff with bacon.
The *lard*ed thighs on loaded sires laid.
Dryden, Homer.
No man *lard*s salt pork with orange peel,
Or garnishes his lamb with spitch-cooked eel. King.

2. To fatten.
And with his nuts *lard*ed many swine.
Sprenger, Ship. Cal. Feb.
Now Falstaff swears to die,
And lards the lean earth as he walks along.
Shakespeare.

Brave soldier, doth he lie
Larding the plain? Shakespeare, Hen. V.
Thirsting to revenge his naval ruins, that have lard'd our seas.
Milton, Of Ref. B. 2.

3. To mix with something else by way of improvement.

An exact command,
Larded with many several sorts of reasons.
Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Let no alien interpose,
To lard with wit thy hungry Epos prose. Dryden.
He lards with flourishes his long harangue,
'Tis fine, sayst thou.
Sweating by harvest; the poets think this nothing, their plays are so much *lard*ed with it.
Collier, View of the Stage.

To LARD. * v. n. To grow fat.
In the furrow by, where Ceres lies his mill's plough,
The unwieldy larding swine his maw then having fill'd,
Lies wallowing in the mire.
Dryden, Polioth. S. 14.

LARDER. n. s. [lardier, old French; from lard.] The room where meat is kept or salted.
This similitude is not borrowed of the larder house, but out of the school house.
Acham, Schooldmaster.

Flesh is ill kept in a room that is not cool;
whereas in a cool and wet larder it will keep longer.
Bacon.

So have I seen in larder dark,
Of real a lucid loinc.
Dorset.

Old age,
Morose, perverse in humour, diffident
The more he still abounds, the less content:
His larder and his kitchen too observes,
And now, lest he should want hereafter, starves.
King.

LARDERER. n. s. [from larder.] One who has the charge of the larder.

LARDON. n. s. [French.] A bit of bacon.

LARDRY. * n. s. [from larder.] Place in which victuals are kept.
I have sweet wench, a piece of cheese, as good as teeth may chew,
And bread—and therewith all did draw
His lardry. Warner, Albion's England, (1602).

LARE. * n. s. [Sax. lape, lepe.] Learning; scholarship. North of England. See LERE.

LARGE. * adj. [large, Fr.; largus, Lat.]

1. Big; bulky.
Charles II. asked me, What could be the reason, that in mountainous countries the men were commonly larger, and yet the cattle of all sorts smaller?
Temple.

Great Theron, large of limbs, of giant height.
Dryden.
Warwick, Leicester, and Buckingham, bear a large board sheep of the best shape and deepest staple.
Mortimer.

2. Wide; extensive.
Their former large peopling was no effect of the country's impoverishing. Cicero, Surv. of Cornwall.
Let them dwell in the land, and trade therein;
for it is large enough for them. Gen. xxi. 21.
There he conquered a thousand miles wide and large.
Abbot, Descrip. of the World.

3. Liberal; abundant; plentiful.
Thou shalt drink of thy sister's cup deep and large.
Book.
Vernal suns and showers
Diffuse their warmest, largest influence. Thomson.

4. Comprehensive; great.
Large bounds derive
This pent hypocrisy.
Mere, Song of the Soul.
That uxorious king, whose heart, though large,
Beguil'd by fair idolatresses, fell
To idols love.
Milton, P. L.

5. Copious; diffuse.
Shippin gave a large testimony upon his band,
that they had carried themselves with great civility.
Clarendon.

I might be very large upon the importance and advantages of education, and say a great many things which have been said before.

Felon on the Classics.
6. At LARGE. Without restraint; without confinement.

If you divide a cane into two, and one speak at the one end, and you lay your ear at the other, it will carry the voice farther than in the air at large.
Bacon.

Thus incorporeal spirits to smallest forms
Reduc'd their shapes immense; and were at large,
Though without number still. Milton, P. 1.
The children are bred up in their father's way; y or so plentifully provided for, that they are left at large.
Sprut.

Your seal becomes importunate;
I've hitherto permitted it to large.
And talk at large; but learn to keep it in.
Least it should take more freedom than I'll give it.
Addison.

7. At LARGE. Diffusely; in the full extent.

Discover more of large what cause that was,
For I am ignorant, and cannot guess. Shakespeare.
It does not belong to this place to have that point debated at large.
Watts.

LARGELY. adv. [from large.]

1. Widely; extensively.
2. Copiously; diffusely; amply.
Where the author treats more largely, it will explain the shorter hints and brief intimations.
Watts on the Mind.

3. Liberally; bounteously.
How he lives and eats:
How largely gives, how splendidly he treats.
Dryden.

Those who in warmer climates complain,
From Phobus' rays they suffer pain,
Must own, that pain is largely paid
By generous wines beneath the shade. Swift.

4. Abundantly; without sparing.
Their they fill of love, and love's disport
Took largely; of their mutual glee the seed.
Milton, P. L.

LARGENESS. * n. s. [from large.]

1. Bigness; bulk.
London excels any other city in the whole world either in largeness, or number of inhabitants.
Sprut.

Not must Barnabas his old honours lose,
In length and largeness like the dugs of cows.
Dryden.

2. Liberality.
Out of courtesy into largeness.
Frut. fol. 27. b.

3. Greatness; comprehension.
There will be occasion for largeness of mind and agreeableness of temper. Collier of Friendship.

4. Extension; amplitude.
They which would do away most from the largeness of this offer, do in most sparing terms acknowledge little less. Hosier.
The simple proposition that hope makes,
In all designs begun on earth below,
Falls in the promised largeness. Shakespeare.

Knowing best the largeness of my own heart toward my people's good and just contentment.
King Charles.
Shall grief contract the largeness of that heart,
In which not fear nor anger has a part.
Man as far transcends the beasts in largeness of desire, as dignity of nature and employment.
Glennville, Apology.

If the largeness of a man's heart carry him beyond prudence, we may reckon it illustrious weakness.
L'Estrange.

5. Widthness.
Supposing that the multitude and largeness of rivers ought to continue as great as now; we can easily prove, that the extent of the ocean could be no less.
Beauly.

LARGHEARTEDNESS. * n. s. Largeness of heart. See the fourth sense of LARGENESS.

In regard of reasonable and spiritual desires, the effects of this affection are large-heartedness, and liberality. Sp. Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 17.

LARGHESS. n. s. [largess, Fr.] A present; a gift; a bounty.

Our coffers with too great a court,
And liberal largess, are grown somewhat light.

Shakspeare.

He assigned two thousand ducats, for a bounty to me and my fellows: they give great largesses where they come. Bacon, New Atlantis

A pardon to the captain, and a largess Among the soldiers, had appeas'd their fury.

Denham.

The paitry largess too severely watch'd,
That no intruding guests would share a share.

Dryden, Jus.

Irus's condition will not admit of largesses.

Addison.

LARGITION. n. s. [largitio, Lat.] The act of giving.

L'ARGO.* } [Italian.] Musical
LARGHETTO. } terms, denoting a slow movement; of which the former means a little quicker than adagio, and the latter a little quicker than largo.

LARK.† n. s. [larpce, lapeyc, Saxon; which Wachter deduces from the Celt. lief, voice, and orka, to avail; lerk, Danish; lawerick, Belg.; lawerock, Scot. and also among our own old writers.] A small singing bird.

It was the lark, the herald of the morn. Shakspeare.
Look up a height, the shrill-gorg'd lark so look Can't be seen or heard. Shakspeare, A Lear.

Th' example of the heartily lark, Conings.
Thy fellow poet, Cowley, mark
Mark how the lark and linnet sing;

With rival notes
They strain their warbling throats,
To welcome in the spring. Dryden.

L'ARKER. n. s. [from lark.] A catcher of larks.

Diet.

L'ARKLIKE.* adj. [lark and like.] Resembling the manner of a lark.

Pride, like an eagle, bullies among the stars,
But pleasure, larklike, tumbles upon the ground.

Young, Night Th. 5.

L'ARKSHEEL.* n. s. A name for the flower called Indian cress.

The Indian-cress our climate now does bear,
Call'd larkish 'cause he wears a horseman's spur.

Tate's Conkey.

L'ARKSPUR.† n. s. [delphinium.] A plant.

With the same weapon, larkspur, thou dost mount
Amongst the flowers, a knight of high account.

Diet.

L'ARUM. n. s. [from alarum or alarm.]

1. Alarm; noise noting danger.

His larum bell might loud and wide be heard,
When cause requir'd, but never out of time.

Spenser.

The peaking cornets, her husband, dwelling
In a continual larum of jealousy, comes to see in the instant of our encounter.

Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.
How far off lie these armies?

— Within a mile and half.

— Then shall we hear their larum, and they ours.

Shakspeare.

See is become formidable to all her neighbours,

as she puts every one to stand upon his guard,
and have a continual larum bell in his ears.

Hemell, For. Forest.

2. An instrument that makes a noise at a certain hour.

Of this nature was that larum, which, though it were but three inches big, yet would both wake a man, and of itself light a candle for him at any set hour.

Willis.

I see men as lusty and strong that eat but two meals a day, as others, that have set their stomachs, like larums, to call on them for four or five.

Locke on Education.

The young Kinnas, all at once let down,
Stean'd with his giddy larum ball the town.

Pope, Dunciad.

LARYNGOTOMY. n. s. [larynx and tomia;
laryngotomie, Fr.] An operation where the fore part of the larynx is divided to assist respiration during large tumours upon the upper parts; as in a quinsy.

Quincy.

L'ARYNX.† n. s. [larynx.] 1. The upper part of the trachea, which lies below the root of the tongue, before the pharynx.

Quincy.

There are thirteen muscles for the motion of the free cartilages of the larynx.

Deshom.

2. In botany, the larch.

The larynx is as frequent upon the mountains in this country, as the white pine, or common Scottish fir.

Drammond, Trans. (Lett. dat. 1744.) p. 16.

L'ASCAN.* n. s. A native seaman, or a native gunner, of India.

LASCIENCY. * n. s. [from lascivient,
Lat.] Wantonness.

Men, by letting themselves loose to all manner of wickedness and debauchery, through the potent and enormous lascivency of the bodily life, quite lose the relish and grateful sense of true goodness and nobility.

Holtywell, Malamp. (1681.) p. 9.

LASCIENT.† adj. [lascivient, Lat.] Frolicksome; wantoning.

The various tryings — of the lascivient life.

Merr. Com. Cobb. (1653.) p. 46.

LASCIVIOUS. adj. [lascivus, Lat.] 1. Lewd; lustful.

In what habit will you go along?
— Not like a woman; for I would prevent
The loose encounters of lascivious men. Shakspeare.

He on Eve

Began to cast lascivious eyes; she him
As wantonly repaid; in lust they burn.

Milton, P. L.

Notwithstanding all their talk of reason and philosophy, and those unnumerable difficulties which, over their cups, they pretend to have against Christianity; persuade but the covetous man not to defy his meocy, the lascivious man to throw off his lewd amours, and all their gaint-like objections against Christianity shall presently vanish.

South.

2. Wanton; soft; luxurious.

Grim-visag'd war hath smooth'd his wrinkl'd front;
And now, instead of mounting turbed steeds,
To fight the souls of fearful adversaries,
He capers nimbly in a lady's chamber;
To the lascivious pleasing of a lute.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

LASCIVIOUSLY.† adv. [from lascivious.]
Lewdly; wantonly; loosely.

Many men are so lasciviously given, either out of a depraved nature, or too much liberty.

Burton, Anat. of Med. p. 606.

Lasciviously deck'd like a courtier.

Wotton on Architecture.

She looked upon him amorously, or rather lasciviously. Patrick on Gen. 33:15. 9.

LASCIVIOUSNESS. n. s. [from lascivious.]
Wantonness; looseness.

The reason pretended by Augustus was the lasciviousness of his elegies, and his act of love.

Dryden, Pref. to Ovid.

LASH.† n. s. [The most probable etymology of this word seems to be that of Skinner, from schlagen, Dutch, to strike;
whence lash and lash. Dr. Johnson. —
Mr. H. Tooke gives a very different and forced etymon, to which few will subscribe: he calls a lash, Fr. lache, that part of a whip which is let loose, let go, cast out, thrown out; the past participle of Fr. lacher, Ital. lasciare. Diversa of Purley, li. 32. — It is the German laschen, to lash; lache, is a flap, a bit of leather,
a leash.]

1. A stroke with any thing plant and tough.

From hence are heard the groans of ghosts, the pains
Of sounding lashes, and of dragging chains.

Dryden.

Rous'd by the lash of his own stubborn tail,
Our lion now will force us small.

2. The thong or point of the whip which gives the cut or blow.

Her whip of cricket's bone, her lash of flim,
Her waggoner a small grey-coated gnat.

Shakspeare.

I observed that your whip wanted a lash to it.

3. A lash or string in which an animal is held; a snare; out of use.

The farmer they leave in the lash,
With looses on every side. Tassie, Husbandry.

4. A stroke of satire; a sarcasm.

The moral is a lash at the vanity of arrogating that to ourselves which succeeds well.

L'Extrange.

TO LASH. v. a. [from the noun.] 1. To strike with any thing plant; to scourge.

Let's whip these stragglers o'er the seas again,
Lash hence these over-weeening rags of France.

Shakspeare.

He charg'd the flames, and those that disobey'd
He lash'd to duty with his sword of light.

Dryden.

And limping death, lash'd up by fate,
Comes up to shorten half our date.

Dryden, Her.
Starts as tutors, and as uncles hand,
We lash the pupil, and defraud the ward.

Dryden, Pers.

Leaning on his lance, he mounts his car,
His fiery couriers lashing through the air.

Garth, Ovid.

2. To move with a sudden spring or jerk.

The club hung round his ears, and batter'd his brows;

He falls; and lashing up his heels, his rider drives.

3. To beat; to strike with a sharp sound.

The winds grow high,
Impending tempests charge the sky;
The lightning flies, the thunder roars,
And big waves lash the frightened shores.

Prior.

4. To scourge with satire.

Could person'd 'old Baileus lash in honest strain,
Flat'ers and bigots ev'n in Louis' reign.

Pope, Her.

5. To tie any thing down to the side or mast of a ship; properly to lace.

TO LASH.† v. n. To ply the whip, or any weapon held in the hand.

He through long sufferance growing now more great,
Rose in his strength, and gan her froth assyle, Heaping huge strokes as thick as shovels of hayle,
And lashing dreadfully at ev'ry part,
As if he thought her soul to disentraine.

Symon, F. Q. iv. vi. 16.
They last aloud, each other they provoke,
And lend their little souls at ev'ry stroke.

Dryden, Æn.
Gentle or sharp, according to thy choice,
To laugh at follie, or to last at vice. Dryd. Pers.
Let men out of their way last on ever so fast,
they are not at all the nearer their journey's end.

South.
Wheels clash with wheels, and bar the narrow street;
The lashing whip resounds.
Gay, Triclin.
LASH-FREE. * adj. [lash and free.] Free from the stroke of satire.

I with this whip you see
Do lash the time, and am myself lash-free.

R. Jonson, Mæcenas.
To LASH out. * v. n. [perhaps from the Goth. laskanjan, to let loose.] To break out; to be extravagant; to become unruly. Our old lexicographers, Huloet and Barret, give the word with out; but it is also used in this sense by itself.

We know not what rich joys we lose, when first we lash into a new offence. Falsham, Res. ii. 60.

A pious education may lay such strong fetters, such powerful restrictions upon the heart, that it shall not be able to lash out into those excesses and enormities, which the more licentious and debauched part of the world wallow in.

South, Sermon, x. 347.

1. A'SHER.† n. s. [from lash.] Sherwood.
1. One that whips or lashes.

2. A great quantity of water thrown forcibly. A colloquial word. In Scotland lash is the same. See Dr. Jamieson's Suppl. in voce.

LA'SHING out. * n. s. [from lash.] Extravagance; unruliness.

The lashings out of his luxury.

South, Sermon, ix. 72.
LASS. * n. s. [from laxus, Lat.] A loose-ness; a lax, as our old dictionaries call it; a flux. It is still spoken of cattle.

A grave and learned minister, was one day,
as he walked in the fields for his recreation, suddenly taken with a feck or looseness.

Burton, Anat. of Med. p. 59.
LASS. n. s. [from lad is formed ladless,
by contraction lass.] Hickes. A girl;
a maid; a young woman: used now
only of mean girls.

Now was the time for vigorous lads to show
What love or honour could invite them to;
A goodly theatre, where rocks are round
With reverend age, and lovely lasses crown'd.

Walker.
A girl was worth forty of our widows; and an honest, down-right, plain-dealing lass it was.

They sometimes use a hasty kin
Steal from unwary lasses; they with scorn,
And neck reclin'd, resent.

Philips.
LA'SSITUDE.† n. s. [lassitude, Latin; lassi-tudo, French. This word seems to have been established about 1540. Sir T.
Elyot, speaking of "two dyscrasies of the body, crudity and lassitude," says,
"which although they be wordes made of Latyne, haveynge none apte Englyshe wordes therefore, yet by the definitions and more ample declaration of them they shall be understood sufficiently, and of henceforth used for Englyshe."

Castel of Health, 1541, fol. 74. b.]

1. Weariness; fatigue; the pain arising from hard labour.

Lassitude is remedied by lashing, or anointing with oil and warm water; for all lassitude is a kind of contusion and compression of the parts;
and bathing and anointing give a relaxation or emollience. Brocas, Nat. Hist.

Ashidly in cogitation is more than our embodied souls can bear without lassitude or distemper. Glanville, Scipias.

She lives and breeds in air; the largeness and lightness of her wings and tail sustain her without lassitude. Miles, Ant. against Alecton.

Do not over-fatigue the spirits, lest the mind be seized with a lassitude, and thereby be tempted to nausea, and grow tired.

Patta, Imag. of the Mind.
From mouth and nose the biting torrent raps,
And last in lassitude lay all the man.

Pope, Odyssey.
2. [In physick.]

Lassitude generally expresses that weariness which proceeds from a distemper state, and not from exercise, which wants no remedy but rest; it proceeds from an increase of bulk, from a diminution of proper evacuation, or from too great a consumption of the fluid necessary to maintain the spring of the solids, as in fevers; or from a vitiated secretion of that juice, whereby the fibres are not supplied. Quincy.

LA'SLORN. n. s. [lass and lorn.] Forsaken by his mistresses. Not used.

Broom groves,
Whose shadow the dimmish bachelor loves,
Being lasons. Shakespeare, Tempest.

LAST. adj. [lacet, large, Saxon; laestat, Dutch.]

1. Latest; that which follows all the rest in time.

Why are ye the last to bring the king back?

O, may some spark of your celestial fire,
2 Son. xix. 11.

The last, the meistent of your sons inspire! Pope.

2. Hindmost; which follows in order of place.

Merion pursued at greater distance still,
Lest come Admetus, thy unhappy son. Pope.

3. Beyond which there is no more.
I will slay the last of them with the sword.

Amos, ix. 1.

Unhappy slave, and pupil to a bell,
Unhappy to the last the kind releasing knell.

Cowley.

The swans, that on Chystr often tried Their tuneful songs, now sung their last, and died.

Addison.

O! may fam'd Brunswick be the last,
The last, the happiest British king,
Whom thou shalt paint, or I shall sing.

Addison.

But while I take my last adieu,
Heave thou no sigh, nor shed a tear.

Prior.

Here, last of Britons, let your names be read.

Pope.

Wit not alone has shone on ages past,
But lights the present, and shall warm the last.

Pope.

4. The lowest; the meanest.
Antiochus
Takes the last prize, and takes it with a jest.

Pope.

5. Next before the present; as, last week.
6. Utmost.

Fools ambitiously contend
For wit and power, their last endeavours bend
To outshine each other. Dryden, Lucret.

7. At LAST. In conclusion; at the end.
Gad a troop shall overcome him; but he shall overcome at the last. Gen. xlii. 19.

Thus weather-cocks, that for a while
Have turn'd about with every blast,
Green oldness, destitute of oil,
Rum to a point, and fix at last. Freind.

8. The LAST; the end.
All politicians chew on wisdom past,
And blunder on in business to the last. Pope.

LAST. adv.

1. The last time; the time next before the present.
How long is't now since last myself and I
Were in a muck? Shakespeare.

When last I died, and, dear! I die
As often as from thee I go,
I can remember yet that I
Something did say, and something did bestow.

Dowry.

2. In conclusion.
Plea'd with his idol, he commends, admires,
Adores; and, last, the thing ador'd desires.

Dryden.

To LAST. v. n. [lastan, Saxon.] To endure; to continue; to persevere.

All more lasting than beautiful. Sidney.

I thought it agreeable to my affection to your grace to prefix your name before the essay; for the Latin volume of them, being in the universal language, may last as long as books last. Bacon.

With several degrees of lasting, ideas are imprinted on the memory. Locke.

These are standing marks of facts delivered to those who are eye-witnesses to them, and which were contrived with great wisdom to last till time should be no more. Addison.

LAST-† n. s. [large, large, Sax. the mould for a shoe-maker to work on; laist, Germ. the form or shape of the foot,
from the old word leisen, to imitate.
Wachter; or from the Goth. laistjan,
to follow.]

1. The mould on which shoes are formed.
The cobbler is not to go beyond his last.

L'Estrange.

A cobbler pursued several new grins, having been used to cut faces over his last.

Addison, Spect.

Should the big last extend the shoe too wide,
Each stone would wrench it's unwary step aside.

Gay.

2. A load; a certain weight or measure;
a measure of corn, consisting of ten quarters. This usage is common in our eastern counties, and is also found in the north; [blat, Sax. last, German.]

LA'STERY. n. s. A red colour.

The bashful blood her snowy cheeks did spread,
That her became as polish'd ivory,
Which cunning craftsmen's hand hath overlaid,
With fair vermilion, or pure lastery.

Symon.

LASTAGE.† n. s. [lastage, Fr. lastagie,
Dutch, lairst, Sax. a load.]

1. Custom paid for freightage.

2. Ballast for a ship.

LA'STAGE. * adj. [from the noun.] Bal-lasted. Huot.

LA'STING. participial adj. [from last.]

and renders the body less durable and lasting.

Ray on the Creation.

2. Of long continuance; perpetual.

White parents may have black children, as negroes sometimes have lasting white ones.

Boyle on Colours.

The grateful work is done,
The seeds of discord sow'd, the war begun;
Frauds, fears, and fury, have possess'd the state,
And fix'd the causes of a lasting hate.

Dryden, Zén.

A sieve cracked seldom recovers its former strength, and the memory of it leaves a lasting caution in the man, not to put the part quickly again to any robust employment.

Locke.

LASTINGLY. adv. [from lasting.] Perpetually; durably.

It is an art now lately studied by some so to incorporate wine and oil, that they may lastingly hold together.

Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 15.

LASTINGNESS. n. s. [from lasting.] Durableness; continuance.

All more lasting than beautiful, but that the consideration of the exceeding lastingness made the eye believe it was exceeding beautiful. Sidney. Consider the lastingness of the motions excited in the bottom of the eye by light. Newton, Opticks.

LASTLY. adv. [from last.]

1. In the family, as, of late days, of late years. I will justify the quarrel; secondly, balance the forces; and, lastly, propound variety of designs for choice, but not advise the choice.

Bacon, W. with Spin.

2. In the conclusion; at last; finally. LATCH. † n. s. [lata, Teut. laccio, Italian.

Dr. Johnson.—The past participle of the Sax. læccan, to lay hold of, to catch. Mr. H. Tooke.] A catch of a door moved by a string, or a handle.

The latch smor'd up. Gay, Pastors. Then comes rayr health from her cottage of catch.

Where never physician had lifted the latch. Smart.

To LATCH. † v. a.

1. To catch. [Icelandic, Sax.] It is thus used in the north of England.

Pussy seems I hastily beat,
And there; but sought avail;
He was so wimble and so wight,
From bough to bough he leaped light,
And oft the pumies latched.

Spenker, Shep. Cal. March.

It is we that should have been smitten with these sorrows by the fierce wrath of God, had not he stepped between the blow and us, and latched it in his own body and soul, even the dint of the fierceness of the wrath of God.

By. Andrews, Sermon on the Passion.

I have words,
That would be how'd out in the desert air,
Where hearing should not latch them.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Of a man that latches the weapon in his own body to save his prince.

By. Hall, Cases of Consc. ii. 10.

2. To fasten; to latch with a latch. He peep't him in and his latch did latch.

Spenker, Shep. Cal. May.

He had strength to reach his father's house; the door was only latched, and, when he had the latch in his hand, he turned about his head to see his pursuer.

Locke.

3. [Lecher, French.] To smear. But hast thou yet latch'd the Adhemian's eyes With the love juice, as I did bid thee do?

Shakespeare.

LATCHES. n. s.

Latches or laskets, in a ship, are small lines like loops, fastened by sewing into the bannets and drablers of a ship, in order to lace the bounnets to the courses, or the drablers to the bounnets. Harris.

LATCHET. n. s. [lacet, Fr. from latch.] The string that fastens the shoe.

There cometh one mightier than I, the latchet of whose shoes I am not worthy to unlace.

St. Mark, i. 7.

LATCH. † adj. [lax, lat, lace, Saxon; lath, lecl, late, M. Goth. lat, Su. Goth. laet, Dutch; in the comparative later for lath, in the superlative latest or last. Last is absolute and definite, more than latest.]

1. Contrary to early; slow; tardy; long delayed.

My lasting days die on with full career,
But my late spring no bud nor blossom smother.

Milton, Sonnet.

Just was the vengeance, and to last days
Shall long posterity resound thy praise.

Pope, Ode.

2. Last in any place, office, or character. All the difference between the late servants, and those who staid in the family, was that those later were finer gentlemen.

Addison, Spect.

3. Last in time; as, of late days, of late years.

4. The deceased; within a moderate period. Thus Dr. Johnson illustrates it by "the works of the late Mr. Pope;" and we may say, "the works of the late Dr. Johnson."

5. Far in the day or night.

LATE. adv.

1. After long delays; after a long time. It is used often with too, when the proper time is past.

O boy! thy father gave thee life too soon,
And hath bereft thee of thy life too late.

Shakespeare.

A second Silvius after these appears.
Silvius Æneas, for thy name he bears;
For arms and justice equally renown'd,
Who late restor'd in Ætas shall be crown'd.

Dryden, Æn.

He laughs at all the giddy turns of state,
When mortals search too soon, and fear too late.

Dryden.

The later it is before any one comes to have these ideas, the later also will it be before he comes to those maxims.

Locke.

I might have spared his life,

But now it is too late. Philips, Distr. Mother.

2. In a late season.

To make roses, or other flowers, come late, is an experiment of pleasure; for the ancients esteemed much of the rose vera. Bacon, Nat. Hist. There be some flowers which come more early, and others which come more late, in the year.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

3. Lately; not long ago.

They arrived in that pleasant lake,
Where, sleeping late, she left her knight.

Spenker, F. G.

In reason's absence fancy wakes,
Ill-matching words and deeds long past or late.

Milton, P. L.

And social joys, the late transform'd repairs.
From fresh pastures, and the dewy field,
The lowing herds return, and round them throng
With leaps and bounds the late imprison'd young.

Pope.

4. Far in the day or night.

Was it so late, friend, ere you went to bed,
That you do lie so late?

—Sir, we were carousing till the second cock.

Shakespeare.

Let the nocturnal sacrifice begun,
Nor ended till the next returning sun.

Dryden, Æn.

5. Of late; lately; in times past; near the present. Late, in this phrase seems to be an adjective.

Who but felt of late?

Milton, P. L.

Men have of late made use of a pendulum, as a more steady regulator.

Locke.

TO LATE. v. a. [leita, Icelandic.] To seek; to search. Used in Cumberland.

Dark it is, they should continue in the obscure darkness of latency, and the opaque shades of silence.

Epiet. Dæd. to Hæmy's Sermon. (1658.)

The undesign'dness of the coincidences is gathered from their latency, their minuteness, their obliquity, the quiddity of the circumstances in which they consist to the places in which those circumstances occur, and the circumlocutions by which they are traced out.

Paley, View of the Evid. of the Chr. Rel. vol. ii. §. ii. ch. vii.

LATENESS. n. s. [from late.]

1. Time far advanced.

Latency to life might be improper to begin the world with.

Swift to Gay.

2. Comparatively modern time.

If it could be made appear that the knetha (a Camasio coin) was of gold in the time when the author of the Book of Job wrote, it would be a further proof of the lateness of that composition.

Cassell's Dict. (Ox. 1780), p. 29.

LATENT. adj. [latens, Latin.] Hidden; concealed; secret.

If we look into its retired movements, and more secret latent springs, we may trace out a steady hand producing good out of evil.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

Who drinks, alas! but to forget, not soom, 'Tis melancholy sloth, severe disease,
Mem'ry confus'd, and interrupted thought,

Death's harbingers, his latest in the draught. Prior.

What were Wood's visible costs I know not, and what were his latent is variously conjectured.

Swift.

LAT-TER,† adj. [This is the comparative of late, though universally written with tt, contrary to analogy, and to our own practice in the superlative latest. When the thing of which the comparison is made is mentioned, we use later; as, this fruit is later than the rest; but latter when no comparison is expressed; but the reference is merely to time; as, those are latter fruits.]

Volet usus Quem penes arbitrium est, & vis, & norma loquendi.

1. Happening after something else.

This will this latter, as the former world, Still tend from bad to worse. Milton.

2. Modern; lately done or past.

Hath not navigation discovered, in these latter ages, whole nations at the bay of Soldania? Locke.

3. Mentioned last of two.

The difference between reason and revelation, and in what sense the latter is superior. Watts.

LA'TTERLY, adv. [from latter.] Of late; in the last part of life; a low word lately hatched.

Latterly Milton was short and thick.

Richardson.

LA'TTERMATH,* n. s. [latter and maye, from mapan, to mow. Mr. H. Tooke.] That which is mown later, or after a former mowing.

LA'TTICE, n. s. [lattia, French; by Junius written lattice, and derived from lax open, a hindring iron, or iron stop; by Skinner imagined to be derived from latte, Dutch, a lath, or to be corrupted from netlice or network; I have sometimes derived it from let and eye; letheyes, that which lets the eye. It may be deduced from lateralculus.] A reticulated window; a window made with sticks or irons crossing each other at small distances.

My good window of lattice fare thee well; thy easement I need not open. I look through thee. Shakespeare.

The mother of Sisera looked out at a window, and cried through the lattice. Judge, v. 28.

Up into the watch-tower get, And use all things despoil'd of fallices; Then shall not peep through lattice of eyes, Nor hear through labyrinth of ears, nor learn By circuit or collections to discern. Donne.

The trembling leaves through which he play'd, Deppling the walk with light and shade, Like lattice windows, give the spy Room but to peep with half an eye. Cleveland.

TO LA'TTICE-† v. a. [from the noun.]

To decussate, or cross; to mark with cross parts like a lattice. This is Dr. Johnson's definition, without any notice that the word had appeared in any dictionary before. But it is an old English word; and is found in Sherwood and Cotgrave: "To grate or lattice; to support or undersest by, to compass or hold in with, cross-bars or latticed frames."

LA'VA,* n. s. [Italian.] Liquid and vitrified matter discharged by volcanos at the time of their eruption.

There is not a lava of Mount Ætna, to which a counterpart may not be produced from the whitestons of Scotland.

Sir J. Hill, Trans. R. Soc. Edinb. vol. v. p. 1.

Whins and a certain class of lavas, taken from remote quarters of the globe, consist of the same component elements. Dr. Kennedy, ibid.

LAVA'TION, n. s. [lavatio, Lat.] The act of washing.

Such filthy stuff was by loose lewd varlets sung before her chariot on the solemn day of her function. Holcroft on Prov. p. 309.

LA'VATORY,* n. s. [from lavo, Lat.] A wash; something in which parts diseased are washed.

Not far from hence was a stately lavatory of porphyry, called St. John's font.

Ricard, State of the Greek Church, p. 47.

Lavatories, to wash the temples, hands, wrists, and jugulars, do potently produce and keep off the venom. Harvey.

LAUD, n. s. [laus, Lat.]

1. Praise; honour paid; celebration.

Doubleness, O gods, great land and praise were mine.

Reply'd the swain, for spotless faith divine: If, after social rites, and gifts bestow'd, I stain'd my hospitable hearth with blood. Pope, Odeus.

2. That part of divine worship which consists in praise.

We have certain hymns and services, which we may daily of laud and thanks to God for his marvellous works. Bacon.

In the book of Psalms, the lauds make up a very great part of it. Gen. of the Targum, p. 5.

TO LAUD, v. a. [laudo, Lat.] To praise; to celebrate.

O thou almighty and eternal Creator, having considered the heavens the work of thy fingers, the moon and the stars which thou hast ordained, with all the company of heaven, we laud and magnify thy glorious name. Benedict.

LAUDAB-† n. s. [from laudable.]

Praise-worthiness.

Names—instructive by the laudability of their characters, and the persuasiveness of their precepts. Mem. of Abp. Thomson, p. 5.

LA'UDABLE, adj. [laudabilis, Lat.]

1. Praise-worthy; commendable.

I'm in this earthly world, where to do harm Is often laudable, but to do good, sometime Accented dang'rous folly. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Affliction endeavours to correct natural defects, and has always the laudable aim of pleasing, though it always maims it. Locke.

2. Healthy; salutary.

Good blood, and a due projectile motion or circulation, are necessary to convert the aliment into laudable animal juices.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

LA'UDABLENESS,† n. s. [from laudable.]

Praise-worthiness.

There is something however, I hope, in the laudableness of my intention.

Stockhouse, Hist. of the B.B. Ded.

 Meekly as now to your sonny laudacion.
Purke's Morality of Goodness-Day, (1512).

LAUDATIVE, n. s. [laudativus, Lat.] Panegyric.

My lords, I mean to make no panegyric or laudative.
Bacon, Charge against J. S.

The first was a commendation, or laudative, of monarchy.
Bacon, Speech in Parliament.

LAUDATORY, adj. [laudatorius, Latin.]

Containing praise; bestowing praise.
 This psalm is hortatory, stirring up to the praises of God; and it is laudatory, setting forth and celebrating the power and greatness of God, for which he is to be praised.

 Their benedictions, or laudatory prayers.

Chilmond, Hist. of the Jews, (1653), p. 25.
 Panegyric, laudative, containing praise.

Johnson, in F. Eucroniadic.

LAUDATORY, n. s. That which contains or bestows praise.

I will not fail to give ye, readers, a present taste of him from his title, hung out like a tolling signpost to call passengers, not simply a confusion, but "a modest confusion," with a laudatory of itself obtained in the very first word.

Milton, Apol. for Simeonimus.

LAUDER, n. s. [from laud.] A praiser; a commender. Colgrave, and Sherwood.

TO LAVE, † v. n. [lavo, Latin, from the Gr. λαω, contracted from λαω, to wash; with the Eolic digamma, ν-ν, changing o into a. So the Latins say lavare and lavare, perf. lavi, sup. lautum and lotum. Morin, Dict. Etym. Fr. and Gr.]

1. To wash; to bathe.

Unsafe, that we must lave our honours
 In these so salt'ring streams. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

But as I rose out of the lauging stream,
 Heaven open'd her eternal doors, from whence
 The spirit descended on me like a dove.

Milton, P. R.

With roomy decks, her guns of mighty strength,
 Whose low-bid mouths each mouthing billow
laure.

Deep in her draught, and warlike in her length,
 She seems a sea-wasp flying on the waves. Dryden.

2. [Lever, Fr.] To throw up; to lade; to draw out.

Though hills were set on hills,
 And seas met was to guard here, I would through:
 I'd plough up rocks, stee as the Alps, in dust,
 And lave the Tyberne waves into clouds.

But I would reach thy head. B. Jonan, Catiline.

Some stow their oars, or stop the leaky sides,
 Another bolder yet the yard bestrides,
 And folds the sails; a fourth with labour laves
 Th' intruding sea, and waves ejects on waves.

Dryden.

TO LAVE, v. n. To wash himself; to bathe.

In her chaste current oft the goddess laves,
 And with celestial tears augments the waves. Pope.

LAVER, n. s. The remainder or leaving.

A northern word. Grose. And a pure Saxon word, occurring in Piers Ploughman; and it also means a crowd.

Brockett's N. C. Words.

LAVE-EARED, adj. Applied in Northamptonshire to horses that have large ears, or with ears not erect, but further apart at the tip, and of course hanging down or slouching.

A lave-eared mare with gold may trapped be.
By. Hall, St. i. 2.

TO LAVER, † v. n. [from veeren, Dutch.]

To change the direction of a ship in its course; to tack; to work the ship against the wind.

How easy 'tis when destiny proves kind,
 With full-spread sails to run before the wind:
 But those that 'gainst stiff gales *laver*ing go,
 Must be at once laved, and skiffed too.

Dryden, Act. Reduc.

LA'VENDER, n. s. [lavandula, Lat. "a lavo, quia in lavacris ac lotionibus expetitur." Vossius.] A plant.

It is one of the verticillate plants, whose flower consists of one leaf, divided into two lips; the upper lip, standing up, rigid, is roundish, and, for the most part, bifid; but the under lip is cut into three segments, which are almost equal: these flowers are disposed in whorles, and are collected into a slender spike upon the top of the stalks. Miller.

The whole lavender plant has a highly aromatic smell and taste, and is famous as a cephalic, nervous, and uterine medicine.

Hill, Matéria Medica.

And then again he turneth to his play,
 To spoil the pleasures of that paradise:

With wholesome sage, and lavender still grey,
 Rank smelling rue, and cummin good for eyes.

Spenser, Moiv.

LA'VEY, † n. s. [lavoire, French; from lavo,] 1. A washing vessel.

He gave her to his daughters, to imbatho
 In nectar'd lavere strew'd with asphodil.

Milton, Comus.

Let us go find the body where it lies
 Soak'd in his enemies blood, and from the stream
 With lavere pure, and cleansing herbs, wash off
 The clotted gore.

Milton, S. A.

Young Arcus from forth his bridal bow'r
 Brought the full lave o'er their hands to pour.

Pope, Odyssy.

2. A washer. Obsolete.

LA'VEROCK, n. s. [lauep, Saxon.] A lark. See LARK.

Flocks
 Of turtles, and of laverocks,
Claudian, Rom. R. 662.

See a black-bird feed her young,
 Or a laverock build her nest.

Walton, Angler's R. 148.

TO LAUGH, † v. n. [hlahjan, Gothic; hlahan, hlahan, Saxon; lachen, Germ. and Dutch; all which may be referred to the Greek γλαω, to laugh; the digamma l being inserted between two vowels.]

1. To make that noise which sudden merriment excites.

You saw my master wink and laugh upon you.
Shakespeare.

There's one did laugh le's sleep, and one cried, Murder!

They wak'd each other. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

At this fusty stuff,
 The large Achilles on his press bed lolling,
 From his deep chest laughs out a loud applause.

Shakespeare.

Laughing causeth a continual expulsion of the breath with the loud noise, which maketh the interjection of laughing, shaking of the breast and sides, running of the eyes with water, if he violent.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. [In poetry.] To appear gay, favourable, pleasant, or fertile.

Entrust her not the world, in that I pray
 You use her well: the world may laugh again,
 And I may live to do you kindness, if You do it her.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

The rallies shall stand so thick with corn, that they shall laugh and sing.

Then laughs the childish year with flow'rs crown'd.
Dryden.

The piteous bow'd, high leap'd with cates divine,
 And o'er the foaming bowl the laughing wine.

Pope.

TO LAUGH, † v. a.

1. To deride; to scorn.

Be bloody, bold, and resolute; laugh to scorn
 The power of man. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

A wicked soul shall make him to be laughed to scorn of his enemies.
Ecclesi. vi. 4.

2. To LAUGH at. To treat with contempt; to ridicule. Dr. Johnson places this improperly as a verb preter.

Presently prepare thy grave;
 Lie where the light form of the eye might heat
 Thy grave-stone daily; make thin epiphon,
 That death in thee of others lives may laugh.

Shakespeare.

"Twere better for you, if 'twere not known in council; you'll be laugh'd at." Shakespeare.

The disolute and abandoned, before they are aware of it, are betrayed to laugh at themselves, and upon reflection find, that they are merry at their own expense.

No wit to flatter led of all his store;
 No fool to laugh at, which he valu'd more.

Pope.

LAUGH, n. s. [from the verb.] The convulsion caused by merriment; an inarticulate expression of sudden merriment.

Me gentle Delia beckons from the plain,
 Then hid in shades, eludes her eager wail;
 But feigns a laugh, to see me search around,
 And by that laugh the willing fair is found.

Pope, Spring.

LAUGH-WORTHY, adj. Deserving to be laughed at.

They laugh'd at his laugh-worthy fate.
B. Jonson, Epigrams.

LAUGH AND LAY DOWN. A game at cards.

Eye on this winning laugh,
 Now nothing but pay, pay,
 With laugh and lay down.

Borough, cite, and town. Skellon, Poems, p. 168.

LA'UGHABLE, adj. [from laugh.] Such as may properly excite laughter.

Nature hath fram'd strange fellows in her time;
 Some that will evermore perch through their eyes,
 And laugh like parrots at a languiager;
 And others of much sinner aspect.

That they'll not show their teeth in way of smile,
 Though Nestor swear the jest be laughable.

Shakespeare.

Cannibon confesses Perdus was not good at turning things into a pleasant ridicule; or, in other words, that he was not a laughable writer.

Dryden, Jur.

LA'UGHER, n. s. [from laugh.] A man fond of merriment.

I am a common laugher. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

Some sober men cannot be of the general opinion, but the laughers are much the majority. Pope.

LA'UGHINGLY, † adv. [from laughing.] In a merry way; merrily.

He told master Bradford, that he had made the Bishop of London afraid: for, with his laughingly, his chaplain gave him counsel not to strike me with his crossier staff, for that I would strike again; and by my troth, said he, rubbing his hands, I had made him believe I would do so indeed.

Fox, Acts and Mon. of Dr. B. Taylor.

AU' OHINGSTOCK. n. s. [laugh and stock.]
A butt; an object of ridicule.

The forlorn maiden, whom your eyes have seen
The laughingstock of fortune's mockery. Spenser.
Pray you let us not be laughingstocks to other men's humours. Shakespeare.

Supine credulous frailty exposes a man to be both a prey and laughingstock at once. L'Estrange.

LAUGHTER. n. s. [from laugh.] Convulsive merriment; an inarticulate expression of sudden merriment.

To be wroth,
The lowest, most dejected thing of fortune,
Stands still in exposture; lives not in fear,
The lamentable change is from the best,
The worst returns to laughter. Shakespeare, L. Lear.

The act of laughter, which is a sweet contraction of the muscles of the face, and a pleasant agitation of the vocal organs, is not merely voluntary,
or totally within the jurisdiction of ourselves.

We find not that the laughter-fuling dame Mour'd for Achilles. Waller.
Pain or pleasure, grief or laughter. Prior.

LA'VISH. adj. [*Of this word I have been able to find no satisfactory etymology.
It may be plausibly derived from to lave, to throw out; as profundere operi
to be lavish.*]

1. Prodigal; wasteful; indiscreetly liberal.
His jolly brother, opposite in sense,
Laughs at his thrift; and lavish of expense,
Quiffs, crams, and gushes in his own defects. Dryden.

The dame has been too lavish of her feast,
And fed him till he loaths. Rome, Gen. Shore.

2. Scattered in waste; profuse; as, the cost was lavish.

3. Wild; unrestrained.
Belinda's bridegroom, left in proof,
Confronted him, curling his lavish spirit. Shakespeare.

To LA'VISH, v. a. [from the adjective.]
To scatter with profusion; to waste; to squander.

Should we thus lead them to a field of slaughter,
Might not the impartial world with reason say,
We lavish'd at our death the blood of thousands. Addison.

LA'VISH. n. s. [from lavish.] A prodigal;
a profuse man.

Tertullian very truly observeth, God is not a lavisher, but a dispenser, of his blessings.

Let those lavishes, that make us covetous their vicers, live so thriftily as to pay their debts in their life time; so may they deprive their executors of a trouble. See M. Sandys, Ess. (1634), p. 209.

LA'VISHLY. adv. [from lavish.] Profusely; prodigally.

My father's purposes have been mistook;
And some about him have too lavishly Wrested his meaning and authority. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Then laughs the childish year with flowers
crowd'd,
And lavishly perfumes the fields around. Dryden.

Praise to a wit is like rain to a tender flower;
If it be moderately bestowed, it cheers and revives;
but if too lavishly, overcharges and depresses him.

LA'VISHMENT. n. s. [from lavish.] Pro-fuseness; prodigality.

First got with guile, and thus preserv'd with dread,
And after spent with pride and lavishment. Spenser, F. Q.

They are given to lavishment of their savings.
Lord's Hist. of the Banians, (1630), p. 44.

VOL. II.

There seems to be a profusion and lavishment of the particles in some places of the noblest classics.
Blackwall, Soc. Class. i. 925.

LAUNDR. * See LANCE.

To LAUNCH. † v. n. [It is derived by Skinner from lance, because a ship is pushed into water with great force. See To LANCH.]

1. To force a vessel into the sea.
Launch out into the deep, and let down your nets for a draught. St. Luke, v. 4.

So short a stay prevails;
He soon equips the ship, supplies the sails,
And gives the word to launch. Dryden.

For general history Raleigh and Howel are to be had. He who would launch farther into the ocean, may consult Whoor. Locke.

2. To rove at large; to expatiate; to make excursions.

From hence that gen'ral care and study springs,
That launching and progression of the mind. Dennis.

Whoever pursues his own thoughts, will find them launch out beyond the extent of body into the infinity of space. Locke.

Spenser has not contented himself with solemn initiation: he launches out into very flowery pata, which still conduct him into one grand pata. Prior, Pref. to Solomon.

He had not acted in the character of a suppliant,
if he had launched out into a long oration.

I have launched out of my subject on this article. Arbutnot.

3. To plunge into; as, the man launched into an expensive way of living.

To LAUNCH, v. a.

1. To push to sea.
All art is used to sink episcopacy, and launch prelacy, in England. King Charles.

With stays and cordage last he rigg'd the ship,
And roll'd on leavers, launch'd her in the deep. Pope.

2. To dart from the hand. This perhaps, for distinction sake, might better be written launch or lance.

The King of Heav'n, obscure on high,
Rar'd his red arm, and launching from the sky
His withen bolt, not shaking empty smoke,
Down to the deep abyss the flaming fellow strook. Dryden.

LAUNCH. * n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of putting a ship out of the dock, and launching her into the water.

2. A particular kind of long-boat.

LAUND. * n. s. [lande, French; lando, Span. land, Dan. lan, Welsh.] Lawn; a plain extended between woods. Originally, a plain not ploughed. The old form of writing lawn.

There was the hart ywost to have his flight: —
This duke will have a cours at him or two With hounds, &c. Chaucer, An. Tale.

Under this thick grove brake we'll shroud our selves,
For through this lawn upon the deer we come;
And in this covert will we make our stand. Shakespeare.

About the lawns and wastes, both far and near.
Drayton, Polyolb. S. 13.

That grove for ever green, that conscious lawn.
Dryden, Pal. and Arcide.

LAUNDER. * n. s. [*lavandiere, French,
a laundress; and thus Chaucer calls Envy a lavender, in his Rom. of the Rose. The same word is applied to* women in Arnold's Chronicle, fol. 193.

Thus also our old lexicographer calls
"a launder, a woman-washer." Huloot Skinner's supposition, therefore, that our launderess may be formed from such a French word as lavandresse, is needless.
Launderess is, no doubt, from this hitherto unnoticed word launder.] A woman whose employment is to wash
clothes.

This effeminate love of a woman do to woman-ize a man, that, if he yield to it, it will not only make him an Amazon, but a launder, a distaffspinner, or whatever other vice occupies their idle heads can imagine, and their weak hands perform. Sidney, Arcad. b. 1.

To LA'UNDER. * v. a. [from the noun.]
To wash; to wet.

Off did she leave her napkin to her eye,
Watch on it had comely characters,
Laundering the silk on figures in the brims
That season'd wool had pelleted in tears. Shakespeare, Lov. Complaint.

If 'twere prun'd, and starch'd, and launder'd,
And cut square by the Russian standard.

LA'UNDERESS. * n. s. [from launder.]
A man that follows the business of washing.

He is a launderer of souls, and tries them, as men do witches, by water. Baxter, Rem. ii. 386.

LA'UNDRESS. * n. s. [lavandiere, French;
Skinner imagines that lavandresse may have been the old word. Dr. Johnson.
—It will be rather admitted that launder is from launder. See LAUNDER.] A woman whose employment is to wash
clothes.

The countess of Richmond would often say,
on condition the princes of Christendom would march against the Turks, she would willingly attend them, and be their launderess. C Camden.

Take up these clothes here quickly; carry them to the launder in Datchet mead. Shakespeare.

The launderess must be sure to tear her smocks
in the washing, and yet wash them but half-Swift.

To LA'UNDRESS. * v. n. To do the work of a launderess. Not in use.

Their wives are used to dress their meat,
to launderess. Blount, Voy. to the Levant, (1650), p. 26.

LA'UNDRY. * n. s. [as if lavanderie.]

1. The room in which clothes are washed.
The affairs of the family ought to be consular,
whether they concern the stable, dairy, the pantry,
or laundry. Swift.

2. The act or state of washing.
Chalky water is too fretting, an aspersum in laundry of clothes, which wear out space.

LA'VOLTA. † n. s. [la volte, French.
Dr. Johnson. — Rather the Italian la volta, being brought, with other feats of capering, from Italy. It means literally the turn. It is written also lavolto and lavolt.] An old dance in which was much turning and much capering.

Hammer.

I cannot sing,
Nor heel the high lawn, nor sweetest talk;
Nor play at subtle games. Shakespeare.

They did us — to the English dancing schools,
And teach lavolto high, and swift corantos.

Ision is — turned dancer, and leads lavolto with the Lamin. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

A homely Venus attired like a Bacchanal, attended by many merry-dancers, began to caper and frisk their best laurels, so as every limb struts to exceed each other.

Sir T. Herbert, Trac. p. 118.

To LAUREATE.* v. a. [laureatus, Lat. from laureus.] To crown with laurel.

Cockeram.

Shelton was laureated at Oxford, and in the year 1495 was permitted to wear his laurel at Cambridge.

Watson, Hist. E. P. ii. 130.

LAUREATE† adj. [laureatus, Lat.] Decked or invested with a laurel.

To Rome again repairs Julius
With his triumph laurel full lie.

Chaucer, Monk's Tale.

Then is he decked as poete laureate.

Barlowe, Epig. iv. (1570).

Bid amaranth all his beauty shed,
And daffodills fill their cups with tears,
To strew the laureate where Lycid lies.

Milton, Lycidas.

From the laureate fraternity of poets, ripe years led me to the shady spaces of philosophy.

Milton, Apol. for Smeectimus.

Soft on her lap her laureate son reclines. Pope.

LAUREATE.* n. s. One crowned with laurel. In King Edward the Fourth's time it is the appellation of the king's poet, who was then first so called; and the laureate still continues to be the title of his successors. At the degrees in grammar, which included the rhetoric and versification, anciently taken in our universities, particularly at Oxford; a wreath of laurel was presented to the new graduate, who was afterwards usually styled poeta laureatus." Watson, Hist. Eng. Poetry, vol. ii. p. 129.

The full sense of a learned laureate.

Cleveland, Poems, p. 66.

The flourishing wreaths by laureate worn.

Whitlock, Marm. of the Eng. p. 536.

Few verses touch their nicer art,

They scarce can bear their laureate twice a year.

Pope, Hor. Sat. i.

Not yet the laureat's crown

In thought exclude him! Shenstone, Econ. P. iii.

LAUREATION† n. s. [from laureate.] It denotes, in the Scottish universities, the act or state of having degrees conferred, as they have in some of them a flowering crown, in imitation of laurel among the ancients. Dr. Johnson. — It is so used, in reference to the degrees conferred by our own universities.

The scholastic laureations seem to have given rise to the appellation in question. I will give some instances at Oxford.

Watson, Hist. E. P. ii. 129.

LAUREL. n. s. [laurus, Lat. laurear, French.] A tree, called also the cherry bay.

The laureus or laurel of the ancients is affirmed by naturalists to be what we call the bay tree.

Ainsworth.

The laurel, mood of mighty conquerors,

And poet sage. Spenser, F. Q.

The laurel or cherry-bay, by cutting away the side branches, will rise to a large tree.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

LAURELLED† adj. [from laurel.] Crowned or decorated with laurel; laureate.

Upon your sword

Sits laurel'd victory. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

That true enthusiasm which transports and elevates the souls of poets above the middle region of vulgar conceptions, and makes them soar up to heaven to touch the stars with their laurel'd heads.

Here's't thou the news? my friend! the express is come
With laurel'd letters from the camp to Rome.

Dryden.

Then future ages with delight shall see
How Plato's, Bacon's, Newton's, books agree;
Or in fair series laurel'd bards be shown
A Virgin there, and here an Addison.

Pope.

LAURUSTINE.* n. s. [laurustinus, Lat.] LAURUSTINUS. An evergreen shrub, which flowers about Michaelmas, and holds its flowers through the winter.

A laurestine bear in blossom, with a juniper hunter in berries.

Guardian, No. 173.

The dusky boy, and laurestine bright.

Anonymus.

LAW.† n. s. [lax, Saxon; loi, French; laugh, Erse.] Dr. Johnson. — Dr. Johnson might have said the Saxon form of law; the Swedish lag; the Iceland lag, laug, log; the Dan. lov; and the old Fr. ley. Mr. H. Tooke deduces this word from the Goth. and Sax. legian, and legtan, ponere, to lay down, to deliver, to decree; a derivation which indeed had been made half a century before the Divisions of Purley were given to the world. See Wachter in V. LAGE: where this word is found in its several northern forms, and with this remark, which Mr. Tooke has imitated: "quibus sono et significatu convenit Lat. lex. Cuncta à legen, ponere, statuere, constituere, judice Stiernhielmio in Gloss. Ulph. Goth. p. 104. Quid enim est lex, nisi statutus vel constitutus, sive ipseus Dei et nature, sive populi seipsum obligantis, sive principis populum moderantis?"

1. A rule of action.

That which doth assign unto each thing the kind, that which doth moderate the force and power, that which doth appoint the form and measure of working; the same we term a law.

Hooker, i. § 2.

Unhappy man! to break the pious laws
Of nature, pleading in his children's cause.

Dryden.

2. A decree, edict, statute, or custom, publicly established as a rule of justice.

Ordn them laws, part such as appertain
To civil justice, part religious rites. Milton, P. I.
Our nation would not give laws to the Irish,
therefore now the Irish gave laws to them.

Dorsey on Ireland.

3. A decree authoritatively annexing rewards or punishments to certain actions.

So many laws argue so many sins. Milton, P. I.
Laws politique among men presuming many to be rebellious.

Hooker.

4. Judicial process.

When every case in law is right.

Shakespeare.

He hath resisted law,
And therefore law shall scorn him further trial.

Shakespeare.

Tom Touchy is a fellow famous for taking the law of every body: there is not one in the town where he lives that he has not sued at a quarter-sessions.

Addison, Spect.

5. A distinct edict or rule.

One law is split into two. Baker on Learning.

6. Conformity to law; any thing lawful.

In a rebellion,
When what's not meet, but what must be, was law.

Then were they chosen. Shakespeare, Coriol.

7. The rules or axioms of science; as, the laws of mechanics.

8. An established and constant mode or process; a fixed correspondence of cause and effect; as, the laws of magnetism.

Natural agents have their law. Hooker.

I dy'd, whilst in the womb he stay'd,

Avoiding Nature's law. Shakespeare, Cymb.

9. The Mosical institution; distinguished from the gospel.

Law can discover sin, but not remove,
Save by these shadowy expiations. Milton.

10. The books in which the Jewish religion is delivered: distinguished from the prophets.

Whosoever ye would that men should do so you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets. St. Matt. vii. 12.

11. A particular form or mode of trying and judging; as, law martial, law mercantile: the ecclesiastical law whereby we are governed.

12. Jurisprudence; the study of law; as, a doctor of law.

LA'WBREAKER.* n. s. [law and breaker; Sax. labbreca.] One who violates a law.

Thou art a robber,

A lawbreaker, a villain. Shakespeare, Cymb.

In this chapter he shews, how they were the lawbreakers. Milton, Tractation.

LA'WDAY.* n. s. A day of open court; a solemn court of a county or hundred.

Keep hets and lawdays, and in sessions sit.

Shakespeare, Othello.

LA'WFUL. adj. [law and full.] Agreeable to law; conformable to law; allowed by law; legitimate; legal.

It is not lawful for thee to have her.

St. Matt. xiv. 4.

Gloster's bastard son was kinder to his father, than my daughters got 'twixen the lawful sheets.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

LA'WFULLY. adv. [from lawful.] Legally; agreeably to law.

This bond is forfeit;

And lawfully by this the Jew may claim

A pound of flesh. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

Though it be not against strict justice for a man to do those things which he might otherwise lawfully do, albeit his neighbour do take occasion from thence to conceive in his mind a false belief, yet Christian charity will, in many cases, restrain a man.

South.

I may be allowed to tell your lordship, the king of poets, what an extent of power you have, and how lawfully you may exercise it.

Dryden, Ded. to Juvenal.

LA'WFULNESS. n. s. [from lawful.] Legality; allowance of law.

It were an error to speak further, till I may see some sound foundation laid of the lawfulness of the action.

Bacon.

LA'WGIVER. n. s. [law and giver.] Legislator; one that makes laws.

Solomon we esteem as the lawgiver of our nation.

Bacon.

A law may be very reasonable in itself, although one does not know the reason of the lawgivers.

Swift.

LA'WGIVING† adj. [law and giving.] Legislative.

The indiminishable majesty of our highest court,
the lawgiving and sacred parliament.

Milton, Of Rep. in Eng. B. 2.
Lawgiving heroes, fans'd for taming brutes,
And raising cities with their charming lutes.

Wallar.

LAWLESS, adj. [from law.]

1. Unrestrained by any law; not subject to law.

The necessity of war, which among human actions is the most lawless, hath some kind of affinity with the necessity of law.

Ralph, Essay.

The lawless tyrant, who denies
To know their God, or message to regard,
Must be compell'd.
Orpheus did not, as poets feign, tame savage beasts,
But men as lawless, and as wild as they.

Recom.

Not the gods, nor angry Jove will bear
Their lawless wandering walks in open air.

Dryden, Æn.

Blind as the Cyclops, and as blind as he,
They own'd a lawless savage liberty,

Like that our painted ancestors no pri'd,
Ere comelier arts their breasts had civiliz'd.

Dryd.

He meteor-like, flames lawless through the void,
Destroying others, by himself destroy'd.

Pope.

2. Contrary to law; illegal.

Taka not the quarrel from his powerful arms,
He needs no indirect or lawless course
To cut off those that have offended him.

Shaksp.

We cut our fault.
That they may hold excus'd our lawless lives.

Shaksp.

Thou the first, lay down thy lawless claim;
Thou of my blood who bear'st the Julian name.

Dryden.

LAWLESSLY, adv. [from lawless.] In a manner contrary to law.

Fear not, he bears an honourable mind,
And will not use a woman lawlessly.

Shaksp.

LAWLESSNESS, n. s. [from lawless.] Disorder; disobedience to law.

Gluttony, malice, pride, and covetise,
And lawlessness reigning with riotise.

Spenser, Habb. Tale.

LAWMAKER, n. s. [from law and make.] Legislator; one who makes laws; a law-giver.

Thy judgement is, that the church of Christ should admit no law-makers but the evangelists.

Hooder.

LAWMONGER, n. s. A word of contempt for a smatterer in law, a law dealer in law.

Though this chattering lawmonger be bold to call it wicked.

Milton, Colasterion.

LAWN, n. s. [lande, Fr. landa, Span. land, Dan. lan, Welsh.]

1. An open space between woods; originally, a plain not ploughed. See Chaucer under LAUND.

Between them lawns, or level downs, and flocks,
Grazing the tender herb, were interpos'd.

Milton, P. L.

His mountains were shaded with young trees, that gradually shot up into groves, woods, and forests, intermixed with walks, and lawns, and gardens.

Addison.

Stern beasts in trains that by his truncheon fell,
Now graily forms shoot o'er the lawns of hell.

Pope.

Interspers'd in lawns and opening glades,
Thin trees arise that shade each other's shades.

Pope.

2. [Lino, French.] Fine linen, remarkable for being used in the sleeves of bishops.

Should'st thou bleed,
To stop the wounds my finest lawn I'd tear,
Wash them with tears, and wipe them with my hair.

Prior.

From high life high characters are drawn,
A saint in crapse is twice a saint in lawn.

Pope.

What swa did the slow solemn knell inspire;
The duties by the lawn rob'd priests pay'd,
And the last words, that dust to dust convey'd?

Tickell.

LAWN, n. s. Made of lawn; resembling lawn.

Look on those lips,
Those now lawn pillows, on whose tender softness
Chaste modest speech, stealing from out his breast,
Had won't to rest itself.

Marton, Antoin's Revenge.

The chimere or upper robe, to which the lawn sleeves are generally sewed.

Whately on the Com. Prayer.

LAWN, n. s. [lawn.] 1. Having lawns; interspersed with lawns.

Through forests, mountains, or the lawn grounds.

Cool to the middle air, their lawn tops.

Thomson, Summer.

Musing through the lawn vale.

Warton, Ode 10.

2. Made of lawn, or fine linen.

When a plum'd fan may shade thy chalked face,
And lawn strips thy naked bosom grace.

Bp. Hall, Sat. iv. 4.

LAWSUIT, n. s. [law and suit.] A process in law; a litigation.

The giving the priest a right to the tithes would open law-suits and wrangles; his attendance on the courts of justice would leave his people without a spiritual guide.

Swift.

LAWYER, n. s. [from law. Dr. Johnson.] —It must be added, that our old word was not lawyer, but lawier. Thus Hulot, in his old dictionary: "Lawier, or man of law, causidicus." And thus Bale, in Leland's Newe Year's Gift. "To Locke up the gates of true knowledge, from them that affectuously seeketh it to the glory of God, is a property belongyng only to the hypocrytysh Pharisees and false lawiers." Thus the Sax. lahman. Professor of law; advocate; pleader.

It is like the breath of an unfe'd lawyer, you gave me nothing for it.

Shakspere, A. Lear.

In the law evil, because some lawyers in their office swerve from it?

Whitgift.

I have entered into a work touching laws, in a middle term, between the speculative and reverend discourses of philosophers, and the writings of lawyers.

Bacon, Holy War.

The nymphs with scorn beheld their foes,
When the defendant's council rose;
And, what no lawyer ever lack'd,
With impudence own'd all the fact.

Swift.

LAWYERLY, adj. [from lawyer.] Judicial. The more lawyerly smooting of this point.

Milton, Bicomedulatus, ch. 5.

LAX, adj. [laxus, Latin.] 1. Loose; not confined.

Inhabit lax, ye powers of heaven! Milton, P. L.

2. Dismantled; not strongly combined.

In mines, those parts of the earth which abound with strata of stone, suffer much more than those which consist of gravel, and the like laxer matter, which more easily give way.

Woodward.

3. Vague; not rigidly exact.

Dialogues were only lax and moral discourses.

Baker.

4. Loose in body, so as to go frequently to stool; laxative medicines are such as promote that disposition.

Quincy.

5. Slack; not tense.

By a branch of the auditory nerve that goes between the ear and the palate, they can hear themselves, though their outward ear be stopp'd by the lax membrane to all sounds that come that way.

Haller, Elem. of Speech.

LAX, n. s. 1. A looseness; a diarrhoea. The same as laxie. See LAXIE.

2. A kind of salmon. [lax, Saxon.]

2. The state of being loosened or slackened.

LAXATIVE, adj. [laxatif, French; laxo, Latin.] Having the power to ease costiveness.

Omitting honey, which is of a laxative power itself; the powder of loadstone doth rather constipate and bind, thus purge and loose the belly.

Brown.

The oil in wax is emollient, laxative, and anodyne.

Arbuthnot on Disorders.

LAXATIVE, n. s. A medicine slightly purgative; a medicine that relaxes the bowels without stimulation.

Nought profits him, to save abandon'd life,
Nor vomits upward aid, nor downward laxative.

Dryden.

LAXATIVENESS, n. s. [from laxative.] Power of easing costiveness.

Sherwood.

LAXITY, n. s. [laxitas, Latin.] 1. Not compression; not close cohesion; slackness of texture.

The former causes could never begot whirlpools in a chaos of so great a laxity and thinness.

Brutley.

2. Contrariety to rigorous precision; as, laxity of expression.

I need not observe on the laxity of this version.

Manns on Church Music, p. 167.

Nothing can be more improper than ease and laxity of expression, when the importance of the subject impresses solicitude, or the dignity of the person exacts reverence.

Johnson, Rambler, No. 159.

3. Looseness; not costiveness.

If sometimes it cause any laxity, it is in the same way with iron unprepared, which will disturb some bodies, and work by purge and vomit.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

4. Slackness; contrariety to tension.

Laxity of a fibre, is that degree of cohesion in its parts which a small force can alter, so as to increase its length beyond what is natural.

Quincy.

In consideration of the laxity of their eyes, they are subject to relapse.

Fleming, Surgery.

5. Openness; not closeness.

Hold a paper close by the flame of a candle, and by little and little move it further off, and there is upon the paper some part of that which I see in the candle, and it grows still less and less as I remove; so that if I would trust my sense, I should believe it as very a body upon the paper as in the candle, though infellected by the laxity of the channel in which it flows.

Digby on Boies.

LAXLY, adv. [from lax.] Loosely; without exactness or distinction.

Buffon has thrown his subjects into groups, laxly formed from general points of resemblance.

Dr. Rees, Cycloped.

LAXNESS, n. s. Laxity; not tension; not costiveness.

4 c 2

For the free passage of the sound into the ear, it is requisite that the tympanum be tense, and hard stretched; otherwise the lunata of that membrane will certainly dead and damp the sound.

Haller, Elem. of Speech.

LAY. Preterite of lie.

O! would the quarrel lay upon our heads.

He was familiarly acquainted with him at such time as he lay ambassador at Constantinople.

Kneller.

When Alah had heard those words, he fasted, and lay in sackcloth.

I tried whither in the Godhead lay. Dryden.

He rode to rescue the prey,

That shaded by the fern in harbour lay, And thence dislodg'd.

Leaving home, in my way to Sienna, I lay the first night at a village in the territories of the antient Veii.

How could he have the retirement of the cloister to perform all those acts of devotion in, when the burthen of the reformation lay upon his shoulders!

The presbyterians argued, That if the Pretender should invade those parts where the numbers and estates of the dissenters chiefly lay, they would sit still.

Swift.

TO LAY.† v. a. [læcan, Saxon; leggen, Dutch; lagjan, Goth. to place; v. c. consent. omnibus reliquis dialect. Celto-Scyth. Sereolus. Hence our word legge, and lig.]

1. To place; to put; to reposit. This word being correlative to lie, involves commonly immobility or extension; as a punishment laid is a punishment that cannot be shaken off; in immobility is included weight. One house laid to another implies extension.

He laid his robe from him. Jerom, iii. 6.

They have laid their swords under their heads.

Soft on the flowery herb I found me lay.

He sacrificing laid.

The entrails on the wood.

2. To place along. Seek not to be judge, being not able to take away iniquity, lest at any time thou feel the person of the mighty, and lay a stumbling-block in the way of thy uprightness.

A stone was laid on the mouth of the den.

Another ill accident is laying of corn with great rains in harvest.

Not frisking kids the flowery meadows lay.

To keep from rising; to settle; to still.

I'll use thy' adventures of my power.

And lay the summer's dust with showers of blood.

It was a sandy soil, and the way had been full of dust; but as hour or two before a refreshing fragrant shower of rain had laid the dust.

Not to fix deep, to dispose regularly: either of these notions may be conceived from the following examples; but regularity seems rather implied; so we say, to lay bricks; to lay planks.

Schismatics, outlaws, or criminal persons, are not fit to lay the foundation of a new colony.

I lay the deep foundations of a wall.

And Enos, nam'd from me, the city call.

Men will be apt to call it pulling up the old foundations of knowledge; i. persuading myself, that the way I have pursued lays those foundations sure.

6. To put; to place.

Then he suffered it to him again; then he put it by again; but, to my thinking, he was very loth to lay his fingers off it.

Till us death lay.

To ripe and mellow, we are but stubborn clay.

They shall lay hands on the sick, and recover.

They, who so state a question, do no more but separate and disentangle the parts of it one from another, & lay them, when so disentangled, in their due order.

We to thy name our annual rites will pay,

And on thy altars sacrifices lay.

7. To bury; to inter.

David fell on sleep, and was laid upon his father, and saw corruption.

8. To station or place privily.

Lay thee an ambush for the city behind thee.

The wicked have laid a snare for me.

Lay not wait, O! wicked man, against the dwelling of the righteous.

9. To spread on a surface.

The colouring upon those maps should be laid on so thin, as not to obscure or conceal any part of the lines.

10. To paint; to enamel.

The pictures drawn in our minds are laid in fading colours; and, if not sometimes refreshed, vanish and disappear.

11. To put into any state of quiet.

They bragged, that they could not but to abuse, and lay asleep, the queen and council of England.

12. To calm; to still; to quiet; to allay.

Friends, loud tumults are out laid

With half the easiness that they are rais'd.

Thus pass'd the night so foul, still mooring fair,

Came forth with pilgrim steps in amice gay,

Who with her radiant finger still'd the roar

Of thunder, than'd the clouds, and laid the winds.

After a tempest, when the winds are laid,

The calm sea wonders at the wrecks it made.

I fear I should have found

A tempest in your soul, and came to lay it.

At once the wind was laid, the whisp'ring sound

Was dumb, a rising earthquake rock'd the ground.

13. To prohibit a spirit to walk.

The husband found no charm to lay the devil a petitious, but the rattling of a bladder with beans in it.

14. To set on the table.

I laid most unto them.

15. To propagate plants by fixing their twigs in the ground.

The chief time of laying gilliflowers is in July, when the flowers are gone.

16. To wager; to stake.

But since you will be mad, and since you may suspect my courage, if I should not lay:

The pawn I proffer shall be full as good.

17. To reposit any thing.

The sparrow hath found an house, and the swallow a nest, for herself, where she may lay her young.

18. To exclude eggs.

After the egg lay'd, there is no further growth or nourishment from the female.

A hen mistakes a piece of chalk for an egg, and sits upon it; she is incapable of an increase or diminution in the number of those she lays.

19. To apply with violence: as, to lay blows.

Lay siege against it, and build a fort against it, and cast a mound against it.

Never more shall my torn mind be heal'd,

Nor taste the gentle comforts of repose!

A dreadful band of gloomy cars surround me,

And lay strong siege to my distracted soul.

20. To apply nearly.

She apply'd her hands to the spindle, and her hands hold the distaff.

It is better to go to the house of mourning than to go to the house of feasting: for that is the end of all men, and the living will lay it to his heart.

The peacock laid it extremely to heart, that, being Juno's darling bird, he had not the night-igale's voice.

He that really lays these two things to heart, the extreme necessity that he is in, and the small possibility of help, will never come caldly to a work of that consequence.

21. To add; to conjoin.

We unto them that lay field to field.

22. To put in a state implying something of disclosure.

If the sinus lie distant, lay it open first, and cure that aperture before you divide that in ano.

The wars have laid whole countries waste.

23. To scheme; to contrive.

Every breast she laid with spirit infam'd,

Yet still fresh projects lay'd the grey-eyed dame.

Homer is like his Jupiter, has his terror, shaking Olympus; Virgil, like the same power in his benevolence, counselling with the gods, laying plans for empires.

Doo Diego and we have laid it so, that before the rope it well about thy neck, he will break in and cut thee down.

24. To charge as a payment.

A tax laid upon land seems hard to the landholder, because it is so much money going out of his pocket.

25. To impute; to charge.

You rather must do, than what you should do, Made you against the grain to voice him counsel, Lay the fault on us.

How shall this bloody deed be answered?

It will be laid to us, whose providence Should have kept short, restrain'd, and out of haunt,

This mad young man.

We need not lay new matter to his charge.

Meo groan from out of the city, yet God lay'd not folly to them.

Let us be glad of this, and all our fears Lay on his providence.

The writers of those times lay the disgraces and ruins of their country upon the numbers and ferocities of those savage nations that invaded them.

They lay want of invention to his charge; a capital crime.

You represented it to the queen as wholly innocent of those crimes which were laid unjustly to its charge.

They lay the blame on the poor little ones.

There was eagerness on both sides; but this is far from laying a blot upon Luther.

26. To impose, as evil or punishment.

The wearist and most loathed life

That age, ach, peury, imprisonment,

Can lay on nature, is a paradise
To what we fear of death.

Shakespeare, Measure for Measure.
Thou shalt not be to him as an usurer, neither shalt thou lay upon him usury. Ezra, xi. 25.
The Lord shall lay the fear of you, and the dread of you upon all the land. Deut. xi. 25.

These words were not spoken to Adam; neither, indeed, was there any grant in them made to Adam; but a punishment laid upon Eve. Leche.
27. To enjoin as a duty, or a rule of action.

It seemed good to lay upon you no greater burden. Acts, xv. 28.
Whilst you lay on your friend the favour, acquit him of the debt. Wycherley.

A prince who never disobey'd,
Not when the most severe commands were laid,
Nor want, nor exile, with his duty weigh'd.

Dryden.
You see what obligation the profession of Christianity lays upon us to holiness of life. Tillotson.
Neglect the rules each verbal critic lays,
For not to know some trifles is a praise. Pope.

28. To exhibit; to offer.
It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man to die, before that he which is accused have the accusers face to face, and have licence to answer for himself concerning the crime laid against him. Acts, xiv. 16.

Till he lays his indictment in some certain country, we do not think ourselves bound to answer. Atterbury.

29. To throw by violence.
He bringeth down them that dwell on high;
the lofty city he smeth it low, even to the ground.
Isa. xlv. 5.

Bruce Caneus laid Otyrius on the plain,
The victor Caneus was by Turnus slain. Dryden.
He took the quiver, and the trusty bow;
Archates us'd to bear; the leaders first
He laid along, and then the vulgar plebe'd.

Dryden.
30. To place in comparison.
Lay down by those pleasures the fearful and dangerous thunders and lightnings, and then there will be found no comparison. Balguy.

31. To LAY ahold. To lay a ship ahold, is to bring her to lie as near the wind as she can, in order to keep clear of the land, and get her out to sea. Siccardus.
Lay her ahold, ahold; set her two courses; off to sea again, lay her off. Shakespeare, Tempest.

32. To LAY apart. To reject; to put away.

Lay apart all filthiness. James, i. 21.
33. To LAY aside. To put away; not to retain.

Let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us. Heb. xii. 1.

Amaze us not with that majestic frown,
But lay aside the greatness of your crown. Waller.
Roccoman first, then Mulgrave rose, like
light;

The flagrant, and Horace, laid aside,
Inform'd by them, we need no foreign guide. Granville.

Retention is the power to revive again in our minds those ideas which, after imprinting, have disappeared, or have been laid aside out of sight.
Locke.

When by just vengeance guilty mortals perish,
The gods behold their punishment with pleasure,
And lay the uplifted thunder-bolt aside.

Addison, Cato.
34. To LAY away. To put from one; not to keep.

Queen Esther laid away her glorious apparel, and put on the garments of anguish. Ezra, xiv. 2.

35. To LAY before. To expose to view; to shew; to display.

I cannot better satisfy your piety, than by laying before you a prospect of your labours. Wals.

That treaty hath been laid before the commons.

Swift.
Their office it is to lay the business of the nation
before him. Addison.

36. To LAY by. To reserve for some future time.

Let every one lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him. I Cor. xvi. 2.

37. To LAY by. To put from one; to dismiss.

Let brave spirits that have fitted themselves for command, either by sea or land, not be laid by as persons unnecessary for the time. Bacon, Advice to Filibers.

She went away, and laid by her veil.

Gen. xxviii. 19.
Did they not swear to live and die
With Esau, and straight laid him by? Hudibras.

For that look, which does your people awe,
When in your throne and robes you give 'em law,
Lay it by here, and give a gentler smile. Waller.

Darkness, which fairest nymphs disarms,
Defends us ill from Mira's charms;
Mira can lay her beauty by,

Take no advantage of the eye,
Quilt all that Lely's art can make,
And yet a thousand captives make. Waller.

Then he lays by the public care,
Thinks of providing for an heir;
Learns how to get, and how to spare. Denham.

The Tuscan king,
Laid by the lance, and took him to the siege.

Where Dindalus his borrow'd wings laid by,
To that obscure retreat I chuse to fly. Dryden, Jun.

My real for you must lay the further by,
And plead my country's cause against my son. Dryden.

Fortune, conscious of your destiny,
E'en then took care to lay you softly by;
And wrapp'd your fate among her precious things,
Kept fresh to be unfolded with your kings. Dryd.

Dismiss your rage, and lay your weapons by,
Know I protect them, and they shall not die. Dryden.

When their displeasure is once declared, they ought not presently to lay by the severity of their brows, but restore their children to their former grace with some difficulty. Locke.

38. To LAY down. To deposit as a pledge, equivalent, or satisfaction.

I lay down my life for the sheep. St. John, x. 15.

For her, my lord,
I dare my life lay down, and will do so, sir,
Please you I accept it, that the queen is spotless
I'd' eyes of Heaven. Shakespeare, What You Will.

39. To LAY down. To quit; to resign.

The soldier being once brought in for the service, I will not have him to lay down his arms any more. Spenser on Ireland.

Ambitious conquerors, in their mad career, Check'd by thy voice, lay down the sword and spear. Blackmore, Creation.

The story of the tragedy is purely fiction; for I take it up where the history has laid it down. Dryden, Don Sebastian.

40. To LAY down. To commit to repose.
I will lay me down in peace and sleep. Psalm, xlviii.

And they lay themselves down upon cloths laid to pledge by every altar. Amos, ii. 8.

We lay us down, to sleep away our cares; night shuts up the senses. Glennville, Scipias.

Some good conduct me to the sacred shades,
Or lift me high to Hannu's hilly crown,
Or in the plains of Tempe lay me down. Dryden, Virg.

41. To LAY down. To advance as a proposition.

I have laid down, in some measure, the description of the old known world. Abbot.

Kircher lays it down as a certain principle, that there never was any people so rude, which did not acknowledge and worship one supreme Deity. Sittingfleet.

I must lay down this for your encouragement, that we are no longer more under the heavy yoke
of a perfect unanning obedience. Swift.

Waller, Prop for Death.
Plato lays it down as a principle, that whatever is permitted to befall a just man, whether poverty or sickness, shall, either in life or death, conduce to his good.

From the maxims laid down many may conclude, that there had been abuses. Swift.

on him, and bring him out. Deut. xxi. 19.

Favourable seasons, aptitude and inclination,
be heedfully laid hold of. Locke.

46. To LAY in. To store; to treasure.

Let the main part of the ground employed to gardens or corn be to a common stock; and laid in and stored up, and then delivered out in proportion. Bacon.

A vessel and provisions laid in large for man and beast. Milton, P. L.

As equal stock of wit and valour
He had laid in, by birth a taylor. Hudibras.

They saw the happiness of a private life, but they thought they did not yet enough to make them happy, they would have more, and laid in to make their solitude luxurious. Dryden.

Readers, who are in the flower of their youth, should labour at those accomplishments which may set off their persons when their bloom is gone, and to lay in timely provisions for manhood and old age. Addison, Guardian.

47. To LAY on. To apply with violence.

We make no excuses for the obstinate; blows are the proper remedies; but blows laid on in a way different from the ordinary. Locke on Education.

48. To LAY open. To shew; to expose.

Teach me, dear creature, how to think and speak. Shakespeare.

Lay open to my earthy gross conceit,
Smother'd in errors, feeble, shallow weak,
The folded meaning of your word's deceit. Shakespeare.

A fool layeth open his folly. Prose, xiii. 16.

49. To LAY over. To incrust; to cover; to decorate superficially.

We unto him that with to the wood, Awake;
to the dumb moose, Arise, it shall teach: behold, it is laid over with gold and silver, and there is no breath at all in the midst of it. Isaiah, li. 19.

50. To LAY out. To expend.

Fathers are wont to lay up for their sons,
Thus for thy son art bent to lay out all. Milton, S. A.

Tycho Brueh laid out, besides his time and industry, much greater sums of money on instruments than any man was ever heard of. Bayle.

The blood and treasure that's laid out, Is thrown away, and goes for naught. Hudibras.
If you can get a good tutor, you will never repent the charge; but will always have the satisfaction to think it the money, of all others, the best laid out. Locke.

I, in this venture, double gains pursue, And laid out all my stock to purchase you. Dryden.

My father never at a time like this Would lay out his great soul in words, and waste Such precious moments. Addison, Cato.

A melancholy thought to see the disorders of a household that is under the conduct of an angry statesman, who lays out all his anger upon the public, and is only attentive to find out mis-carrriages in the ministry. Addison, Freeholder.

When a man spends his whole life among the stars and planets, or lays out a twelve-month on the spots in the sun, however noble his speculations may be, they are very apt to fall into burlesque. Addison on Anc. Medals.

Nature has laid out all her art in beautifying the face; she has touched it with vermilion, planted in it a double row of ivory, and made it the seat of smiles and blushes. Addison.

51. To LAY out. To display; to discover. He was dangerous, and takes occasion to lay out bigotry, and false confidence, in all its colours. Atterbury.

53. To LAY out. With the reciprocal pronoun, to exert; to put forth. No selfish man will be concerned to lay out himself for the good of his country. Snowbridge.

54. To LAY out. To compose the limbs of the dead. Durand gives a pretty exact account of some of the ceremonies used at laying out the body, as they are at present practised in the north of England, where the laying out is called stroking. Brown, Popular Antiqu.

55. To LAY to. To charge upon. When we began, in courteous manner, to lay his unkindness upon him, he, seeing himself confronted by so many, like a resolute orator, went not to denial, but to justify his cruel falsehood. Sidney.

56. To LAY to. To apply with vigour. Let children be hired to lay to their bones. From fallow as needeth, to gather up stones. Turner.

We should now lay to our hands to root them up, and cannot tell for what. Osford, Hezeas against the Covenant.

57. To LAY to. To harass; to attack. The great master having a careful eye over every part of the city, went himself unto the station, which was then hardly laid to by the Black Mustapha. Khalifa.

Whilst he this, and that, and each man's blow, Doth eye, defend, and shift, being laid to sore; Backwards he bears. Davies, Civ. Wars.

58. To LAY together. To collect; to bring into one view. If we lay all these things together, and consider the parts, rise, and degrees of his sin, we shall find that it was not for nothing. South.

Many people apprehend danger for want of taking the true measure of things, and laying matters rightly together. I. Estrange.

My readers will be very well pleased, to see so many useful hints upon the subject laid together in so clear and concise a manner. Addison, Guardian.

One series of consequences will not serve the turn, but many different and opposite deductions must be examined, and laid together, before a man can come to make a right judgment of the point in question. Locke.

59. To LAY under. To subject to. A Roman soul is bent on higher views To civilize the rude upstart's world, And lay it under the restraint of laws. Addison, Cato.

60. To LAY up. To confine to the bed or chamber. In the East Indies, the general remedy of all subject to the gout, is rubbing with hands till the motion raise a violent heat about the joints: where it was chiefly used, no one was ever troubled much, or laid up by that disease. Temple.

61. To LAY up. To store; to treasure; to reposit for future use. St. Paul did will them of the church of Corinth, every man to lay up somewhat by him upon the Sunday, till himself did come thither, to send it to the church of Jerusalem for relief of the poor there. Hooker.

Those things which at the first are obscure and hard, when memory hath laid them up for a time, judgement afterwards growing explaineth them. Hooker.

That which remaineth ever, lay up to be kept until the morning. Eccles. xlv. 23.

The king must preserve the revenues of his crowns without diminution, and lay up treasures in store against a time of extremity. Bacon, Advice to Villiers.

The whole was tilled, and the harvest laid up in several granaries. Temple.

I will lay up your words for you till time shall serve. Dryden.

This faculty of laying up, and retaining ideas, several other animals have to a great degree, as well as man. Locke.

What right, what true, what fit, we justly call, Let this be all my care; for this is all; To lay this harvest up, and hoard with haste What every day will want, and most, the last. Pope.

To LAY v. n. To lay eggs. Hens will greedily eat the herb which will make them lay the better. Morimer, Husbandry.

2. To contrive; to form a scheme. Which mov'd the king, By all the aptest means could be procur'd, To lay to draw him in by any train. Daniel, Civil Wars.

Scarcely are their consorts cold, ere they are laying for a second match. By. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

3. To LAY about. To strike on all sides; to act with great diligence and vigour. At once he warls and strikes, he takes and pays. Now far'd to yield, now forcing to invade, Before, behind, and round about him lays. Spenser, F. Q.

And laid about in fight more busily, Than th' Amazonian dame Penthesile. Hudibras.

6. To LAY on. To strike; to beat without intermission. His heart laid on as if it tried, To force a passage through his side. Hudibras.

Answer, or answer not, 'tis all the same, He lays too on, and makes me bear the blame. Dryden.

7. To LAY on. To act with vehemence: used of expences. My father has made her mistress Of the feast, and she lays it on. Shakespeare, Rich. Tale.

8. To LAY out. To take measures. I made strict enquiry whether I came, and laid out for intelligence of all places, where the intrails of the earth were laid open. Woodward.

9. To LAY upon. To importune; to request with earnestness and incessantly. Obsolete. All the people laid so earnestly upon him to take that war in hand, that they said they would never bear arms more against the Turks, if he omitted that occasion. Voltaire.

LAY, † n. s. (from the verb.) 1. A row; a stratum; a layer; one rank in a series, reckoned upwards. A viol should have a lay of wire-strings below, as close to the belly as the lute, and then the strings of guts mounted upon a bridge as ordinary viols, that the upper strings stricken might make the lower resound. Bacon.

Upon this they lay a layer of stone, and upon that a lay of wood. Morimer, Husbandry.

2. A wager. My fortunes against any lay worth naming, this crack of your love shall grow stronger than it was before. Shakespeare, Othello.

It is thy joy just, that thou misest of the bearing of many good words: it is thy happiness, that thou art freed from the hearing of many evil. It is an even lay betwixt the benefit of hearing good, and the torment of hearing evil. By. Hall, Bala of Gilead.

It is esteemed an even lay whether any man lives ten years longer: I suppose it is the same, that one of any ten might die within one year. Gravett, Bala of Mortality.

3. Station; rank. Not in use. Welcome unto their, renowned Turk, Not for thy lay, but for thy worth in arms. Soliman and Perenna, (1599.)

LAY, n. s. [ley, leay, Saxon; fry, Scottish.] Grassy ground; meadow: ground unplowed, and kept for cattle: more frequently, and more properly written lea. A tuft of daisies on a flow'ry lay They saw. Dryden, Flower and Leaf.

The plowing of layes is the first plowing up of grass ground for corn. Morimer, Husbandry.

LAY, † n. s. [lay, French. It is said originally to signify sorrow or complaint, and then to have been transferred to poems written to express sorrow. It is derived by the French from latus, Latin, a funeral song; but it is found likewise in the Teutonic dialect: ley, leok, Saxon; lery, Danish. Dr. Johnson. — "Les premières chansons Françaises furent nommées des lats," says M. de la Ravière, Poes. du Roi de Nav. tom. i. p. 215. And so far I believe he is right. But I see no foundation for supposing with him, that the lay was "une sorte d'eleme," and that it was derived "du mot

Latin lessus, qui signifie des plaintes; or that it was "la chanson la plus majestueuse et la plus grave." It seems more probable that lai in French was anciently a generic term, answering to song in English. The passage which M. de la Ravaliere has quoted from Le Brut, "Molt sot de lai, molt sot de notes," is thus rendered by our Layman: "Ne euthe na mon awa muchel of song." The same word is used by Petrar d'Alvergne, MS. Crofts, fol. lxxxv. to denote the songs of birds, certainly not of the plaintive kind. For my own part I am inclined to believe, that lied, lied, lied, Teutot, leof, Sax, and lai, French, are all to be deduced from the same Gothic original. Tyrrwhitt, Introduct. Disc. to Chaucer's Canterb. Tales, § xxi. Liuthon is, in old Gothick, to sing: A song; a poem. It is scarcely used but in poetry.

To the maiden's sounding timbrels sung,
In wail attended notes, a joyous lay.

Soon be slumber'd, fearing not be harm'd,
The whistles with a loud lay, she thus with him sweetly charm'd.

This is a most majestic vision, and Harmonious charming lay. Stalg. Tempest.
Nor then the solemn nightingale
Cous'd warbling, but all night tun'd her soft lays.

If Jove's will
Have link'd that amorous power to thy soft lay,
Now dimly sing. Milton, Sonnet.
He reach'd the nymph with his harmonious lays,
Whom all his charms could not incline to stay.

On Ceres let him call, and Ceres praise,
With uncouth dances, and with country lays.

Ev'n gods incline their ravish'd ears,
And tune their own harmonious spheres
To his immortal lays.

LAY, adj. [laicus, Latin; λαϊκός] Not clerical; regarding or belonging to the people as distinct from the clergy.
All this they had by law, and none remain'd,
The preference was but due to Levi's kind!
But when some lay preference fell by chance,
The Gourmands made it their inheritance.

Lay persons, married or unmarried, being doctors of the civil law, may be chancellors, of ficials, &c.

It might well startle
Our lay unlearn'd faith.

LAYER, n. s. [from lay.]
1. A stratum, or row; a bed; or one body spread over another.

A layer of rich mould beneath, and about this natural earth to nourish the flowers.

The terrestrial matter is disposed into strata or layers, placed one upon another, in like manner as any earthy sediment, settling from a flood in great quantity, will naturally be.

2. A sprig of a plant.
Many trees may be propagated by layers: this is to be performed by siting the branches a little way, and laying them under the mould about half a foot; the ground should be first made very light, and, after they are laid, they should have a little water given them: if they do not comply well in the laying of them down, they must be pegged down with a hook or two;

and if they have taken sufficient root by the next winter, they must be cut off from the main plants, and planted in the nursery: some twist the branch, or bare the rind; and if it be out of the reach of the ground, they fasten a tub or basket near the branch, which they fill with good mould, and lay the branch in it.

Transplant also carnation seedlings, give your layers fresh earth, and set them in the shade for a week.

3. A hen that lays eggs.
The oldest are always reckoned the best sitters,
and the youngest the best layers.

LAYER Out, n. s. [from To lay out.]
One who expends money; a steward.

LAYER Up, n. s. [from To lay up.] One who reposit for future use; a treasurer.
Old age that ill layer up of beauty, can't more spoil upon my face.

LAY-LAND, n. s. Fallow ground which lies untill'd. More properly ley-land, or lea-land. But see LAT. In the north,
ley-lands are lands in a common field laid down, which under that circumstance are said to lie ley.
He shall have my broad lay-lands.

Sir Gualine, Percy's Rel. i. l. 4.
Land,
Lie lay, till I return.

Beaum. and Fl. Loue's Pilgrimage.
LAYMAN, n. s. [lay and man.]
1. One of the people distinct from the clergy.

Laymen will neither admonish one another themselves, nor suffer ministers to do it.
Since a trust must be, she thought it best
To put it out of laymen's pow'r at least,
And for their solemn vows prepar'd a priest.

Where can be the grievance, that an ecclesiastical landlord should expect a third part value for his lands, his title as ancient, and as legal, as that of a layman, who in seldom guilty of giving such beneficial bargains?

2. An image used by painters in contriving attitudes.

You are to have a layman almost as big as the life for every figure in particular, besides the natural figure before you.

LAYSTALL, n. s. [from lay and stall, Sax.
stabilum, a dunghill on which they lay that is swept out of stalls or stables.
Skinner. By others from state, urine.
Sometimes written leystall, or leytall.]
An heap of dung.

Scarcely could he footing find in that foul way,
For many coores, like a great lay-stall,
Of murdered men, which therein strow'd lay.

Near the common lay-stall of a city.
If he will live abroad with his companions,
In dung and leytalls, it is worth a fear.

LAZAR, n. s. [from Lazarus in the Gospel.
Very old in our language: "A lazar or a begger." Chaucer, C. T.
Prose. Lazar is also old in the French.]

One deformed and nauseous with filthy and pestiferous diseases.

They ever after in most wretched case,
Like loathsome lazers, by the hedge lay.

I'll be sworn, and sworn upon't, she never shrouded any but lazars.
I am weary with drawing the deformities of life,
and fears of the people, where every figure of imperfection more resembles me.

Life be labours to refine
Daily, nor of his little stock denies Fit aims to lazars merciful and meek.
LAZAR-HOUSE, n. s. [lazar, French;
LAZARET, lazarretto, Ital.; from LAZARETTO, lazar.] A house for the reception of the diseased an hospitial.

A place
Before his eyes appear'd, ad, noisome, dark,
A lazar-house it seem'd, where were laid
Numbers of all diseases.
My genius prompts me, that I was born under a planet, not to die in a lazar.

The same penalty attends persons escaping from the lazar.

LAZARLIKE, adj. [from lazar.] Full of LAZARLY, adj. sores, leprous.

A most insatiable tetter bark'd about;
Most infectious with vile and loathsome crust,
All my smooth body.

Those five leprous and lazarly orders.
Sp. Hall, Contemp. B. 4.

LAZARWORT, n. s. [Laserwort.] A plant.
TO LAZE, v. n. [See the etymology of LAZY.] To live idly; to be idle; to slug.

Up, and laz not!
Hedest thou my business, thou couldst not sit so.

The hands and the feet sustained against the belly: they knew no reason, why the one should be lazing, and pampering itself with the fruit of the other's labour.

The not cried, Unions had rest labourers, while he lay lazing and lolling upon his couch.

TO LAZE, v. a. To waste in laziness; to stupidify by sloth.

He that takes liberty to laze himself, and dull his spirits for lack of use, shall find the more he sleeps, the more he shall be drowsy; till he becomes a very slave to his bed, and makes sleep his master.

Whitely, Redemp. of Time, (1634, &c.) p. 23.

LAZIVY, adv. [from lasy.] Idly; sluggishly; heavily.

Watch him at play, when following his own inclinations; and see whether he be stirring and active, or whether he lazily and listlessly dreams away his time.

The eastern nations view the rising stars,
Whilst night shades us, and lazily revere.

LAZINESS, n. s. [from lasy.] Idleness; sluggishness; listlessness; heaviness in action; tardiness.

That instance of fraud and laziness, the unjust steward, who pleaded that he could neither dig nor beg, would quickly have been brought both to dig and to beg too, rather than starve.

My fortune you have rescued, not only from the power of others, but from my own modesty and laziness.

LAZULI, n. s.
The ground of this stone is blue, veined and spotted with white, and a glistering or metallic yellow: it appears to be composed of, first, a white sparry, or crystalline matter; secondly, flakes of the golden or yellow talc; thirdly, a shining yellow substance; this fumes off in the calcination of the stone, and casts a sulphureous smell; fourthly, a bright blue substance, of great use among the painters, under the name of ultramarine; and when rich, is found, upon trial, to yield about one-sixth of copper, with a very little silver. Woodward.

LAZY† adj. [This word is derived by a correspondent, with great probability, from à laïe, French; but it is however Teutonic; lijer in Danish, and loisigh in Dutch, have the same meaning; and Spelman gives this account of the word: "Dividebantur antiqui Saxones, ut testatur Nithardus, in tres ordines; Edhilingos, Frilingos, & Luzzos; hoc est nobiles, ingenios & serviles; quam & nos distinctionem dno retinimus. Sub Ricardo autem secundo pars servorum maxima se in libertatem vindicavit; sic ut hodie apud Anglos rario invenitur servus, qui mancipium dicitur. Restat nihilominus ingenua appellations commemoratio. Ignavos enim hodie lazie dicimus." Dr. Johnson.—Schiller notices also the Teut. lass, laz, slow, tardy. It may be observed, that our old word is lazier and lazier: "Thou'st but a lazier lord." Spenser, Shep. Cal.]

1. Idle; sluggish; unwilling to work.

Our soldier like the night-owl's lazy flight,

Or like a lazy thrasher with a fall.

Fall gently down, as if they struck their friends.

Shakespeare.

Wicked condemned men will ever live like rogues, and not fail to work, but be lazy and spend victuals.

Bacon.

Whose lazy waters without motion lay.

Racine.

The lazy glutton sits at home will keep,

Indulge his sloth, and batten with his sheep.

Dryden.

Like eastern kings a lazy state they keep,

And close confin'd in their own palace sleep.

Or lazy lakes unproductive of a flood,

Whose dull brown Naiads ever sleep in mud.

Fornel.

What amazing stupidity is it, for men to be negligent of salvation themselves: to sit down lazy and unactive.

Rogers.

2. Slow; tedious.

The ordinary method for recruiting their armies, was now too dull and lazy an expedient to resist this torrent.

Clarendon.

LO. is a contraction of lord.

LEA† n. s. [ley, Saxon, a fallow; leaz, Saxon, a pasture, a plain.] Ground enclosed, not open. Dr. Johnson.—Rather an extensive plain.

As when two warlike brigantines at sea,
With murderous weapons arm'd to cruel fight,
Doe meet together on the watry deep.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. li. 16.

Greatly agast with his pitious plea;
Him thrust the good man on the lea.

Spenser.

Ceres, most bounteous lady, thy rich leas,
Of wheat, rye, barley, fescues, oats, and peas.

Shakespeare.

Her fallow leas

The darrel, hemlock, and rank fumitory

Doth root up.

Dry up thy barrow'd velvet, and plough turn leas,

Whereof ingrateful man with lickerish draughts,

And morsels unctuous, greases his pure mind.

Shakespeare.

He furrow'd many a churchful sea;
The very Rhine, and Velge's self did pass,
Who sheld doth suffer on his watery lea.

P. Fletcher, Pica. Ed. li. 13.

Such court guile,

As Mercury did first devise,

With the mixing Dryades,

On the lawns, and on the leas.

Milton, Comus.

The lowing herd winds slowly o'er the leas.

Gray.

LEACH.* See LEECH.

LEAD. n. s. [leab, Saxon.]

1. Lead is the heaviest metal except gold and quicksilver. Lead is the softest of all the metals, and very ductile, though less so than gold: it is very little subject to rust, and the least sonorous of all the metals except gold. The specific gravity of lead is to that of water as 11922 to 1000. Lead when kept in fusion over a common fire, throws up all other bodies, except gold, that are mixed, all others being lighter, except mercury, which will not bear that degree of heat: it afterwards vitrifies with the baser metals, and carries them off, in form of scoriae, to the sides of the vessel. The weakest acids are the best solvents for lead: it dissolves very readily in aqua fortis diluted with water, as also in vinegar. The smoke of lead works is a prodigious annoyance, and subjects both the workmen, and the cattle that graze about them, to a mortal disease.

Hill.

Thou art a soul in blis, but I am bound
Upon a wheel of fire; that mine own tears
Do scald like molten lead.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Of lead, some I can show you so like steel, and so unlike common lead ore, that the workmen call it steel ore.

Bogel.

Lead is employed for the refining of gold and silver by the cupel; heretofore it made common crucibles with vinegar; of corrus, red lead; of plumbum utrum, the best yellow ochre; of lead, and half as much tin, solder for lead.

Greav.

2. [In the plural.] Flat roof to walk on; because houses are covered with lead.

Stalls, bulks, windows,

Are smother'd up, leads fill'd, and ridges hor'd

With variable complexions; all agreeing

In earnestness to see him.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

I would have the tower two stories, and goodly leads upon the top, raised with statues interposed.

Bacon.

TO LEAD. v. a. [from the noun.] To fit with lead in any manner.

He fashioneth the clay with his arm, he applieth himself to lead it over; and he is diligent to make clean the furnace.

Eccles. xxviii. 30.

This is a traverse placed in a loft, at the right hand of the chair, with a privy door, and a carved window of glass leaded with gold and blue, where the mother sitteth.

Bacon.

TO LEAD. v. a. preter. I led; part. led. [leaban, Saxon; leiden, Dutch.]

1. To guide by the hand.

Doth not each on the sabbath loose his ox or his ass from the stall, and lead him away to watering?

They thrust him out of the city, and led him unto the brow of the hill.

St. Luke, iv. 39.

2. To conduct to any place.

Save to every man his wife and children, and they may lead them away, and depart.

1 Sam. xxi. 23.

Then brought he me out of the way, and led me about the way without unto the utter gulf.

Isaiah, xlvii. 2.

He maketh me to lie down in green pastures; he leadeth me beside the still waters.

Psal. xlii. 2.

3. To conduct as head or commander. Would you lead forth your army against the enemy, and seek him where he is to fight?

Spenser on Ireland.

He turns lead against the lion's armed jaws; And brings no more in debt to years than thou; Leads ancient lords, and rev'st red lodges, on To bloody battles.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

He led me on to mighty deeds, Above the nerve of mortal arm, Against the uncircumcised, our enemies: But now lead me back off me.

Milton, S. A.

Christ took not upon him flesh and blood, that he might conquer and rule nations, head armies, or possess places.

South.

He might muster his family up, and lead them out against the Indians, to seek reparation upon any injury.

Leche.

4. To introduce by going first. Which may go out to face them, and which may go in before them, and which may lead them out, and which may bring them in.

Numb. xxvii. 17.

His guide, as faithful from that day.

As Hesperus that leads the sun his way.

Fairfax.

5. To guide; to shew the method of attaining. Human testimony is not so proper to lead us into the knowledge of the essence of things, as to acquaint us with the existence of things.

Watts, Logic.

6. To draw; to entice; to allure. Appoint him a meeting, give him a shew of comfort, and lead him on with a fine baited lead.

Clarendon.

The lord Cottington, being a master of temper, knew how to lead him into a mistake, and then drive him into lead, and then expose him.

Clarendon.

7. To induce; to prevail on by pleasing motives. What I did, I did in honour.

Shakespeare.

Led by th' impartial conduct of my soul. Shakespeare. He was driven by the necessities of the times, more than led by his own disposition, to any rigorous of actions.

King Charles.

What I say will have little influence on those whose rods lead them to with the continuance of the war.

Swift.

8. To pass; to spend in any certain manner. The sweet woman leads an ill life with him.

Shakespeare.

So s'th's then lead Safest thy life, and best prepar'd to endure Thy mortal passage when it comes.

Milton, P. L.

Thim, fair Lavinia, thy surviving wife

Shall breed in groves, to lead a solitary life.

Argensol.

Luther's life was led up to the doctrines he preached, and his death was the death of the righteous.

Fr. Atterbury.

Celibacy, as then practised in the church of Rome, was commonly forced, taken up under a bold vow, and led in all unbecomings.

Fr. Atterbury.

This dissembler is most incident to such as lead a sedentary life.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

TO LEAD.† v. n. I will lead on softly, according as the cattle that goeth before me, and the children be able to endure.

Gen. xxviii.

2. To conduct as a commander. To shew the way, by going first.

He left his mother's countess by patent, which was a new leading example, grown before somewhat rare. Wotton.

The way of maturing of tobacco must be from the heat of the earth or sun; we see some leading of this musk-melons sown upon a hot-bed dugged below. Bacon.

The vessels heavy laden put to sea
With proud rosy gales, a woman leads the way. Dryden.

4. To exercise dominion.

For shepherds, said he, there doeth lead
As lords do elsewhere. Spenser, July.

5. To LEAD off. To begin.

Her social powers were brilliant, but not uniform; for, on some occasions, she would persist in a determined acclivity, to the regret of the company present; and, at other times, would lead off in her best manner, when perhaps none were present, who could taste the spirit and anxiety of her humour. Conderland, Memoirs of Hume.

LEAD-† n. s. [from the verb.] Guidance; first place in a less despotic word. Dr. Johnson.—Bolingbroke, however, somewhere uses it; and a most eminent writer in our own time farther warrants the usage of it.

Yorkshire takes the lead of the other counties.

At the time I speak of having a momentary lead, I am sure I did my country important service. Burke, Lett. p. 17.

LEADEN-† adj. [leaden, SAXON.]

1. Made of lead.

This tiger-footed rage, when it shall find
The harm of unkindness' swiftness, will, too late,
Lead pounds' round 's's. Shakespeare, Coriol.

O mirth's slumber!

Lay'st thou the leaden mace upon my boy,

That plays thee music? Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

A leaden bullet shot from one of those guns against a stone wall, the space of twenty-four paces from it, will be beaten into a thin plate.

2. Heavy; unwilling; motionless.

If thou do'st find him tractable to us,

Encourage him, and tell him all our reason:

If he be leaden, icy, cold, unwilling,

Be thou so too. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

3. Heavy; dull.

I'll strive with troubled thoughts to take a nap;

Lest leaden slumber pipe me down to morrow;

When I should mount with wings of victory. Shakespeare.

4. Stupid; absurd.

What is to leaden or blockish, which these delishy pagists will not avouch for the maintenance of their tumpory? Fisher, Retrospect, &c. (1790), p. 45.

LEADEN-HEARTED-† adj. [leaden and heart.]

Having an unfeeling, stupid heart.

O leaden-hearted men, to be in love with death!

Thomson, Castle of Indolence, C. 9.

Call on the lady leaden-stepping hours,

Whose speed is but the heavy plummet's pace. Milton.

LEADER-† n. s. [from lead.]

1. One that leads, or conducts.

2. Captain; commander.

In my text

I'll draw the form and model of our battle,

Limit each leader to his several charge,

And part in just proportion our small strength. Shakespeare.

I have given him for a leader and commander to the people. Isaiah, lv. 4.

Those escaped by flight, not without a sharp jest against their leaders affirming, that, as they had followed them into the field, so it was good reason they should follow them out. Hayward.

When our Lycians see

Our brave examples, they admiring say,

Behold our gallant leaders. Densham.

The brave leader of the Lycian crew. Dryden.

3. One who goes first.

Nay, keep your way, little gallant; you were wont to be a follower, now you are a leader. Shakespeare.

4. One at the head of any party or faction:

as the detestable Wharton was the leader of the whigs.

The understandings of a senate are enlivened by three or four leaders, set to get or to keep employments. Swift.

LEADING-† adj. Principal; chief;

capital.

In organized bodies, which are propagated by seed, the shape is the leading quality, and most characteristical part that determines the species. Locke.

Mistakes arise from the influence of private persons upon great numbers stiled leading men and parties. Swift.

LEADING-† n. s. [from lead.]

1. Guidance; conduct by the hand.

There is a cliff, whose high and bending head

Looks fearfully in the confined deep:

Bring me but to the very brim of it,

And I'll repair the misery thou dost bear

With something rich about me: from that place

I shall no leading need. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

2. Conduct of a commander.

Lords have had the leading of their own followers to the general hostings. Spenser on Ireland.

If thou with thy own revenges, take

One half of my commission, and set down

As best thou art experienced. Shakespeare, Coriol.

Cyrus was beaten and slain under the leading of a woman, whose wit and conduct made a great figure. Temple.

LEADING-STRINGS-† n. s. [lead and string.]

Strings by which children, when they learn to walk, are held from falling.

Sound may serve such, ere they to sense are grown. Shakespeare.

Like leading-strings, till they can walk alone. Dryden.

Was he ever able to walk without leading-strings, or swim without bladders, without being discovered

by his hobbling and his sinking? Swift.

LEADMAN-† n. s. [lead and man.] One who begins or leads a dance.

Such a light and mettled dance

Saw you never, Shakespeare.

And by leadmen for the nonce,

That turn round like grinde-stones. B. Jonson.

LEADWORT-† n. s. [lead and wort; plumbago.] A plant.

LEADY-† adj. [from lead.] Of the colour of lead. Hulciot.

His roddy lips [were] wan, and his eyes leady and hollow. Sir T. Elton, Gen. fol. 124.

LEAF-† n. s. leaves, plural. [leaf, SAXON;

leaf; Dutch; leaf; Goth. "vox anton-quis, multique lingua communis."

Serenius.]

1. The green deciduous parts of plants and flowers.

This is the state of man; to-day he puts forth

The tender leaves of hopes, to-morrow blooms. Shakespeare.

A man shall seldom fail of having cherries borne by his graft the same year in which his incision is made, if his graft have blossom buds; whereas if it were only leaf buds, it will not bear fruit till the second season. Boyle.

Those things which are removed to a distant view, ought to make but one man; as the leaves on the trees, and the billows in the sea. Dryden, DuRoi.

2. A part of a book, containing two pages.

Happy ye book, when as those lily hands

Shall handle you. Spenser.

Peruse my leaves through every part,

And think thou seest my owner's heart

Serw'd o'er with trifles. Swift.

3. One side of a double door.

The two leaves of the one door were folding. 1 Kings.

4. Any thing foliated, or thinly bent.

Eleven ounces two pence sterling ought to be of so pure silver, as is called leaf silver, and then the melior mass of other weight seventeen pence halfpenny falling. Cicero.

Leaf gold, that flies in the air as light as down, is as truly gold as that in an ingot. Digby on Bodies.

TO LEAF-† v. n. [from the noun.] To bring leaves; to bear leaves.

Most trees fall off the leaves at autumn; and if not kept back by cold, would leaf about the solstice. Brown.

LEAFAGE-† n. s. [from leaf.] Store of leaves.

If morn and ev'n's fresh leafage they may have.

The Silver-Worms, (1599).

LEAFED-† adj. [from leaf.] Bearing or having leaves. Hulciot.

LEAFLESS, adj. [from leaf.] Naked of leaves.

Bare honesty without some other adornment, being looked on as a leafless tree, seldom will take himself to his shelter. Gas. of the Tempest.

Where doves in flocks, the leafless trees o'er-shade, Shakespeare.

And lonely woodcocks haunt the wat'ry glade.

Pope.

LEAFY-† adj. [from leaf.] Full of leaves.

The frauds of men were ever so,

Since summer was first leafy. Shakespeare.

What chance, good lady, hath bereft you thus?

— Dim darkness, and this leafy labyrinth. Shakespeare.

O'er barren mountains, o'er the flow'ry plain,

The leafy forest, and the liquid main,

Extends thy uncontrouled and boundless reign. Dryden.

Her leafy arms with such extent were spread,

That hosts of birds, that wing the liquid air,

Perch'd in the boughs. Dryden, Flis. and Leaf.

So when some sweet'ning travellers retire

To leafy shades, near the cool nuptial verge

Of Parus, Brazilian stream; her lat

A gristly hydra suddenly shoots forth. Philips.

LEAGUE-† n. s. [ligue, French; ligo,

Lat. to bind together.] A confederacy:

A combination either of interest or friendship.

You peers, continue this united league:

I every day expect an embassy

From my Redeemer, to redeem me hence.

And now in peace my soul shall part to heaven,

Since I have made my friends at peace on earth. Shakespeare.

We come to be informed by yourselves,

What the conditions of that league must be. Shakespeare.

Thou shalt be in league with the storm of the field; and the beasts of the field shall be at peace with thee. Job.

Go break thy league with Baasha, that he may depart from me. 3 Chron. xlv. 3.

It is a great error, and a narrowness of mind, to think, that nations have nothing to do one with another, except there be either an union in sovereignty, or a conjunction in pacta or leagues; there are other bands of society and implicit confederations.

Bacon, Holy War.
As a league-breaker gave up his head,
Single rebellion, and did hostile acts.

Milton, S. A.
Oh, Tyranny, with immortal hate
Pursue this hated race; and let there be Twist us and them on league nor amity.

Denham.
To LEAGUE. v. n. To unite on certain terms; to confederate.

Where fraud and falsehood invade society, the hand presently breaks, and men are put to a loss where to league and to fasten their dependances.

South.
LEAGUE. n. s. [lieue, Fr. leuca, Latin; from lech, Welsh, a stone that was used to be erected at the end of every league. Camden.] A measure of length, containing three miles.
Ere the ships could meet by twice five leagues,
We were encountered by a mighty rock.

Spenser.
E'en Italy, though many a league remote,
In distant echoes answer'd.
LEAGUED. adj. [from league.] Confederated.

And now thus leagu'd by an eternal bond,
What shall retard the Britons bold designs?

Philips.
LEAGUER. v. n. s. [Dutch, or Flemish.] "They will not vouchsafe in their speeches or writings to use our terms belonging to matters of war, but do call a camp by the Dutch name of legar; nor will not afford to say that such a town or such a fort is besieged, but that it is belegard." Sir J. Smythe, Certain Disc. 1590, fol. 2.]

1. Camp; not siege, as Dr. Johnson has hastily asserted.

We will bind and hoodwink him so, that he shall suppose no other but that he is carried into the league of the adversaries, when we bring him to our tents.

Spenser, Art. W.
They played their cannon day and night into the enemy's leaguers and quarters.—They shot into the leaguer at Heliogton hill, and there killed Lieutenant Colvill of Cortworth.

A. Wood, Annals Univ. Ox. (an. 1646.)

2. One united in a confederacy. Not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

The division are so many, and so intricate, of protestants and catholics, royalists and leaguers.

Bacon, Observe on a Libel, (1592.)
Are you leaguers, or covenanters, or associators?

Dryden, Viriadic of the Duke of Guise.

LEAK. v. n. s. [lek, leke, Dutch; hleece, Sax. leak; leka, Su. Goth. to flow or run.] A breach or hole which lets in water.

There will be always evils, which no art of man can cure; breaches and leaks more than man's wit hath hands to stop.

Hooker.
The water rushes in, as it doth usually in the leak of a ship.

Widdis.
Whether she sprang a leak I cannot find,
Or whether she was over with wind.
Or that some rock below her bottom rent,
But down at once with all her crew she went.

Dryden.
LEAK. adj. [hleece, Sax. leake rcp, a leaky ship. Lye.] Leaky.

And fifty sisters water to leak vessels draw.

Spenser, F. Q. i. v. 55.
Yet is the bottle leaky, and bag too torn,
That all which I put in falls out anon.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. viii. 24.

To LEAK. v. n. To let water in or out.

They will allow us ne'er a jordan, and then we leak in your chimney.

Shakespeare.
His feet should be washed every day in cold water; and have his shoes so thin, that they might leak and let in water.

Locke.

2. To drop through a breach, or discontinuity.

The water, which will perhaps by degrees leak into several pails, may be emptied out again.

Widdis.

Golden stars hung o'er their heads,
And seem'd so crowded, that they burst upo' 'em,
And dart at once their baleful influence
In leaking fire.

Dryden and Let.

To LEAK. v. a. To let out.

It would be next to impossible to make pipes to hold as perfectly as not to leak air in some parts.

Mr. Hooke, in Hist. R. Soc. iv. 548.

LEAKAGE. n. s. [from leak.]

1. State of a vessel that leaks.

They weaken themselves by too great a leakage of their power.

Bp. Parker, Rep. Rch. Transp. p. 11.

2. Allowance made for accidental loss in liquid measures.

LEAKY. adj. [from leak.]

1. Battered or pierced, so as to let water in or out.

Thou'rt so leaky,
That we must leave thee to thy sinking; for Thy dearest quit thee.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

If you have not enjoy'd what youth could give,
But life sunk through you like a leaky sieve,
Accuse yourself, you liv'd not while you might.

Dryden.

2. Loquacious; not close.

Women are so leaky, that I have hardly met with one that could hold her breath longer than she could keep a secret.

L'Estrange.

LEAM. v. n. See LEME.

To LEAN. v. n. preter. leaned or leant.

[hlman, Saxon; lemen, Dutch.]

1. To incline against; to rest against.

Security is expressed among the medals of Gordianus, by a lady leaning against a pillar, a sceptre in her hand, before an altar.

Pemican on Drawings.

The columns may be allowed somewhat above their ordinary length, because they lean unto us good supporters.

Watson.

Thou shook his head, that shook the firmament.

Dryden.

If God be angry, all our other dependencies will profit us nothing; every other support will fail under us when we come to lean upon it, and deceive us in the day when we want it most.

Reynolds.

Then leaning o'er the rails he musing stood.

Gay.

'Mid the central depth of black'ning woods,
High rear'd in solemn theatre around
Leant the huge elephant.

Thomson.

2. To propend; to tend towards.

They delight rather to lean to their old customs, though they be more unjust and more inconvenient.

Spencer.

Trust in the Lord with all thine heart; and lean not unto thine own understanding.

A desire leaning to either side, biases the judgment strangely.

Watts.

3. To be in a bending posture.

She lean me out at her mistress's chamber window, bids me a thousand times good night.

Shakespeare.

Wearied with length of ways, and worn with toil,
She laid her down, and leaning on her knees,
Invok'd the cause of all her miseries.

Dryden.

The gods came downwards to behold the wars,
Sharp'ning their sights, and leaning from their stars.

Dryden.

4. To bend; to waver; to totter.

What shalt thou expect,
To be dependant on a thing that leans?

Shakespeare, Cymb.

To LEAN. v. a.

1. To incline; to cause to lean.

Lean thine aged back against mine arm,
And in that case I'll tell thee my disease.

Shakespeare.

Oppress'd with anguish, panting and o'ercrest,
His fainting limbs against an oak he leant.

Dryden.

2. [ecl. leina.] To conceal. North of Eng. Ray, and Grose. "They will give a thing no leaning," i. e. they will not suffer the least connivance. Lye.

LEAN. adj. [hlæne, hlenc, Sax. hleng, slender.]

1. Not fat; meagre; wanting flesh; bareboned.

As leuc was his horse as is a rake.

Chaucer, C. T. Pro.

You tempt the fury of my three attendants,
Lean famine, quatering steel, and climbing fire.

Shakespeare.

Lean raw-bo'd rascals, who would e'er suppense,

They had such courage and audacity! Shakespeare.

Lean-look'd prophets whisper fearful change.

Shakespeare.

I would invent as bitter searching terms,
With fall as many signs of deadly hate.

Shakespeare.

As leand'd carry in a leandage cave.

Seven other kine came up out of the river, ill-favoured and lean-fleshed.

Gos. xli. 5.

Let a physician beware how he purge after hard frosty weather, and in a lean body, without preparation.

Bacon.

And fetch their precepts from the Cynick tub,
Praising the lean, and sallow, abstinence.

Milton, Comus.

Swear that Adrastus, and the lean-look'd prophet,

Are just conspirators.

Dryden and Let.

Lean people often suffer for want of fat, as fat people may by abstraction of the vessels.

Abusant on Aliments.

No laughing grees wasen in my eyes;
But haggard grief, lean-looking, sallow care,
Dwell on my brow.

Rome, Jane Shore.

2. Not unctuous; thin; hungry.

There are two chief kinds of terrestrial liquors, those that are fat and light, and those that are lean and more earthy, like common water.

Arbuthnot.

2. Want of matter; thinness; poverty.
The poor king Reignor, whose large style
Agrees not with the loonness of his purse.

Shakespeare.

LEANY. * adj. [lean-man, Teut. a servant.] Alert; active. Grose notices this word, but does not mention in what place it is used.

Fat kernes, and leany knaves.

Spenser, Sch. Col. July.

To LEAP.† v. n. [hileap, Sax. hileapan, Goth. to dance; hlegpa, Icel. to run; leap, Scottish, to jump.]

1. To jump; to move upward or progressively without change of the feet.

If I could win a lady at leap-frog, or by vaulting into my saddle with my armour on, I should quickly leap into a wife.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

A man leaped better with weights in his hands than without; for that the weight, if it be proportionately, strengthened the sinews by contracting them. To leaping with weights the arms are first cast backwards, and then forwards with so much the greater force, for the hands go backward before they take their rise.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

In a narrow pit,
He saw a lion, and leap'd down to it.

Comely, David.

Thrice from the ground the leap'd, was seen to wield
Her brandish'd lance.

Dryden, Æn.

2. To rush with vehemence.
God changed the spirit of the king into mildness, who in a leap from his throne, and took her in his arms, till she came to herself again.

Eth. xv. 8.

After he went into the tent, and found her not,
he leaped out to the people.

Judith, xiv. 7.

Rejoice ye in that day, and leap for joy.

St. Luke, vi. 23.

I am warm'd, my heart
Leaps at the trumpet's voice, and burns for glory.

Addison.

4. To fly; to start.
He started frowning from me, as if ruin
Leap'd from his eyes: so looks the chafed lion
Upon the daring huntsman that has gall'd him;
Then makes him nothing.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

Out of his mouth go burning lances, and sparks of fire leap out.

Job, xli. 15.

To LEAP. v. a.

1. To pass over, or into, by leaping.
Every man is not of a constitution to leap a gulf for the saving of his country.

L'Estrange.

As one condemn'd to leap a precipice,
Who would before his eyes the depth below,
Sleeps short.

Dryden, Spens. Frier.

She dares pursue, if they dare lead;
As their example still prevails:
She tempts the stream or leaps the pale.

Prior.

2. To compress, as beasts.
Too soon they must not feel the sting of love:
Let him out leap the cow.

Dryden, Georg.

LEAP. n. s. [from the verb.] 1. Bound; jump; act of leaping.

2. Space passed by leaping.
After they have carried their riders safe over all leaps, and through all dangers, what comes of them in the end but to be broken-winded?

L'Estrange.

3. Sudden transition.
Wickedness comes on by degrees, as well as virtue;
and sudden leaps from one extreme to another are unsound.

L'Estrange.

The commons wrested even the power of chasing a kieg intirely out of the hands of the nobles; which was so great a leap, and caused such a convulsion in the state, that the constitution could not bear.

Swift.

4. An assault of an animal of prey.
The cat made a leap at the mouse.

L'Estrange.

5. Embrace of animals.
How she cheats her bellowing lovers' eyes;
The rushing leap, the doubtful progeny.

Dryden, Æn.

6. Hazard or effect of leaping.
Medals it were an easy leap
To pluck bright honour from the pale-fac'd moon.

Shakespeare, Troil.

You take a precipice for no leap of danger,
And woo your own destruction.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

Behold that dreadful downfall of a rock,
Where yon old fisher views the waves from high!
'Tis the convenient leap I mean to try.

Dryden, Theocritus.

LEAP. * n. s. [leap, Saxon; leap-leap, a basket to carry corn in while sowing.]

1. A basket.
Neither of seven loaves into four thousand of men, and how many leaps, ye taken?

Wicliffe, St. Matt. xvi. 9.

2. A weel for fish.
LEAP-FROG. n. s. [leap and frog.] A play of children, in which they imitate the jump of frogs.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

If I could win a lady at leap-frog, I should quickly leap into a wife.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

LEAP-YEAR. n. s.
Leap-year or bisextile is every fourth year, and so called from its leaping a day more than year than in a common year: so that the common year has 365 days, but the leap-year 366; and then February hath 29 days, which in common years hath but 28. To find the leap-year you have this rule:

Divide by 4; what's left shall be
For leap-year 0; for past, 1, 2, 3.

Harriot.

The reason of the name of leap-year is, that a day of the week is missed; as, if on one year the first of March be on Monday, it will on the next year be on Tuesday; but on leap-year it will leap to Wednesday.

That the year consisteth of 365 days and almost six hours, wanting eleven minutes; which six hours omitted will, in process of time, largely deprave the compute; and this is the occasion of the bisextile or leap-year.

Brown.

LEAPER. * n. s. [from leap; Sax. hileape, a dancer.]

1. One who leaps or capers.
2. Spoken of a horse, which passes over hedge and ditch by leaping.

LEAPFROG. * adv. [from the part leap-frog.] By leaps.

Hulot.

LEARN. * v. a. [from learn, Saxon; leren, Germ. to learn; to teach; lepan, Sax. to teach; leape, learning, skill. See LEARN.]

1. To gain the knowledge or skill of.
Learns a parable of the fig-tree.

St. Matt. xxiv. 32.

He, in a shorter time than was thought possible, learned both to speak and write the Arabian tongue.

Knox.

Learn, wretches, learn the motions of the mind, And the great moral end of humankind.

Dryden, Pers.

You may rely upon my tender care,
To keep him far from perils of ambition,
All he can learn of me will be to weep!

A. Philips.

2. To teach. [It is observable, that in many of the European languages the same word signifies to learn and to teach; to gain or impart knowledge.] This sense is now perhaps obsolete. It is retained in the present version of the Psalms in our Common Prayer Book.

He would learn.

The lion stoop to him in lowly wise,
A lion hard.

Spenser, F. Q.

You taught me language, and my profit on't
Is, I know not how to curse: the red plague rid you.

Shakespeare, Tempest.

For learning me your language.
A thousand more mischances than this one,
Have learn'd me how to brook this patiently.

Shakespeare.

Hast thou not learn'd me how
To make perfumes?

Shakespeare, Cymb.

My testimonies that I shall learn them.

Ps. cxlxi. 15.

To LEARN. v. n. To take pattern; with of.

Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly.

St. Matt. xi. 29.

In imitation of sounds, that man should be the teacher is so part of the matter; for birds will learn one of another.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

LEARNED.† adj. [from learn.]

1. Versed in science and literature.
It is indifferent to the master in hand, which way the learned shall determine of it.

Locke.

Some by old words to fame have made pretence:
Such labour'd nothing, in so strange a style,
Amuse th' unlearn'd, and make the learned smile.

Page.

The learned met with free approach,
Although they came not in a coach.

Swift.

The best account is given of them by their own authors; but I trust more to the table of the learned Bishop of Bath.

Atkinson on Coins.

2. Skilled; skilful; knowing; with in.
Though truss't in arms, and learn'd in martial arts.

Gracille.

Thou chus't not to conquer men but hearts.

Locke.

3. Skilled in scholastic, as distinct from other knowledge.
Till a man can judge whether they be true or so, his understanding is but little improved, and thus men of much reading are greatly learned, but may be little knowing.

Locke.

4. Wise.
Those needful jealousies of state, that warn wiser princes how to provide for their safety;

and to teach them how learned a thing it is to be aware of the humblest enemy. B. Janan, Sigenus.
LEARNEDLY. adv. [from learned.] With knowledge; with skill.

The apostle seemed in his eyes but learnedly mad.

Much
 He spoke, and learnedly, for life; but all
 Was either pitied in him, or forgotten. Shaksp.
 Ev'ry coitcomb swears as learnedly as they.

LEARNEDNESS. n. s. [from learned.] Style of being learned.

The learnedness of the age.

Alp. Laud's Remains, p. 158.
LEARNER. n. s. [from learn, Sax. leornnepe.] One who is yet in his rudiments;
 one who is acquiring some new art or knowledge.

The late learners cannot so well take the ply, except it be in some minds that have not suffered themselves to fix.

Nor can a learner work so cheap as a skilful practised artist can. Grounds, Dills of Mortality.

LEARNING. n. s. [from learn; Sax. leornnung.] Rarely used in the plural number.]

1. Literature; skill in languages or sciences; generally scholastic knowledge.
Learning hath its infancy, when it is almost childish; then its youth, when luxuriant and juvenile; then its strength of years, when solid; and, lastly, its old age, when dry and exhaust.

The king, he takes the babe
 To his protection; calls him Posthumus; —
 Puts him in all the learnings that his time
 Could make him the receiver of.

To tongue or pudding thou hast no pretence,
Learning thy talent is, but mine is sense. Profr.
 As Moses was wont to all the wisdom of the Egyptians, so it is manifest from this chapter, that St. Paul was a great master in all the learning of the Greeks.

2. Skill in any thing good or bad.
 An art of contradiction by way of scorn, a learning wherewith we were long untutored forward, that the miserable times whereunto we are fallen should abound.

LEASABLE. adj. [from lease.] Capable of being let by lease. Sherwood.

LEASE. v. a. [from leas, French; Spelman: lassen, Germ. Serenius.]

1. A contract by which, in consideration of some payment, a temporary possession is granted of houses or lands.

Why, cousin, wert thou regent of the world,
 It were a shame to let this land by lease. Shaksp.
 Lords of the world have but for life their lease.
 And that too, if the lesser price, must cease.

I have heard a man talk with contempt of bishops' leases, as on a worse foot than the rest of his estate. Swift.

2. Any tenure.
 Our high-plac'd Macbeth
 Shall live the lease of nature. Shakspere.

Thus to give the world increase,
 Short'n'd hast thy own life's lease.

Milton, El. M. of Winchester.
 To LEASE. v. a. [from the noun.] To let by lease.

Where the vicar leases his glebe, the tenant must pay the great ill to the rector or proprietor, and the small tithes to the vicar.

Astiff, paragon.
 To LEASE. v. n. [lesen, Dutch. Dr. Johnson. — It is the Saxon lean, and lyan, to gather, to collect; lysan, Goth. and lesa, Icel. the same. This word, therefore, might justly be distinguished, in its spelling, from the former lease, and the subsequent leasing, by being written lese.] To glean; to gather what the harvest men leave.

She in harvest us'd to lease;
 But harvest done, to clove-work did aspire,
 Meat, drink, and two-pence, was her daily bide. Dryden.

LEASE. v. t. [from lease.]

1. ANSEB. gatherer after the reaper.

There was no office which a man from England might not have; and I looked upon all who were born here as only in the condition of leasers and gleaners. Swift.

2. A liar. See LEASING.

Those idle words — we answer with silence and scorn. Let learners have leave to talk.

Sp. Hall, Hen. of the Marr. Clor. p. 359.

LEASEHOLD. adj. [lease and hold.] Holden by lease; as, a leasehold tenement.

LEASH. v. t. [leash, French; leash, Teut.; lascia, Italian. Dr. Johnson. — Germ. lasche, a bit of leather, a flap. Serenius.]

1. A leather thong, by which a falconer holds his hawk; or a courser leads his greyhound. Hammer.

Holding Coriolis in the name of Rome,
 Even like a fawning greyhound in the leash,
 To let him slip at will. Shakspere.

What I was, I am;
 More straining on, for plucking back; not following.

Shakspere, Wint. Tul.

2. A tierce; three.

I am sworn brother to a leash of drawers, and can call them all by their christian names.

Shakspere, Hen. IV.

Some thought when he did gabble
 Th'd heard three labourers of Babel,
 Or Cerberus himself pronounce

A leash of languages at once.
 Thou art a living comedy; they are a leash of dull devils. Dennis, Letters.

3. A band wherewith to tie any thing in general.

The ravished soul being shewn such game,
 would break those leashes that tie her to the body.

Swift.
 To LEASH. v. a. [from the noun.]

To bind; to hold in a string.

Then should the warlike Harry, like himself,
 Assume the part of Mars; and, at his heels,
 Leash'd in like hounds, should famine, sword, and fire,

Crouch for employment. Shakspere, Hen. V.

Cerberus, from below,
 Must, leash'd to himself, with him a bunting go.

Lovell, Luc. Path. p. 33.

LEASING. n. s. [leasuring, Saxon; leaying, Icel. perfdy. Wicliffe calls liars "leasuring-mongers," dealers in lying.] Lies; falsehood.

O ye sons of men, how long will ye have such pleasure in vanity, and seek after leasuring.

Psalm lv. 2.

He 'mongst ladies would their fortunes rend
 Out of their hands, and merry leasings tend.

Spenser, Hob. Tul.

He hates foul leasings and vile flattery,
 Two filthy biots in noble generosity.

Spenser, Hob. Tul.

That false pilgrim which that leashing told,
 Being indeed old Archimago. Spenser, F. Q.

I have ever verified my friends
 With all the size that verity
 Would without lapsing suffer: nay, sometimes,
 Like to a bow upon a subtle ground
 I've tumbld' past the throw; and in his praise
 Have almost stamp'd the leashing. Shakspere, Coriol.
 As falls, quoth Richard, prone to leashing.
 Say things at first, because they're pleasing;
 Then prove what they have once asserted,
 Nor care to have their lie deserted:
 Till their own dreams at length deceive them,
 And oft repeating they believe them. Prior.
 Trading few shall drive again,
 Nor leasings lewd affright the swain.

Gay, Pastoral.

LEASOW. n. s. [lepe, leape, Saxon.] A pasture. This word is very old in our language; but has escaped notice, notwithstanding the modern application of it by Shenstone to his celebrated residence, the Leasowes. Kelham notices also the Norm. Fr. leues, or leunes, as used for pasture-ground.

He schal goyn, and schal go out; and he schal fynde leuwe, [in the present version, pasture.]

Wicliffe, St. John. 2. 9.

They arrived at a little grove of trees in a close of Mr. Whitgrave's, called the pit-leuwe.

Boswell, &c. (1651), reprint. 1822, p. 65.

LEAST. adj. the superlative of little. [lept, Saxon. This word Wallis would persuade us to write lest, that it may be analogous to less; but surely the profit is not worth the change.] Little beyond others; smallest.

I am not worthy of the least of all the mercies shewed to thy servant. Gen. xxiii. 10.

A man can no more have a positive idea of the greatest than he has of the least space. Locke.

LEAST. adv. In the lowest degree; in a degree below others; less than any other way.

He resolv'd to waive his suit,
 Or for a while play tight in night. Hudibras.

Ev'n that avert; I chuse it not;
 But taste it as the truly unhappy lot.

No man more truly knows to place a right value on your friendship, than he who least deserves it on all other accounts than his due sense of it.

Dryden, As. Tul.

Pope, Letters.

At LEAST. }

At the LEAST. }

At LEASTWISE. }

1. To say no more; to not demand or affirm more than is barely sufficient; at the lowest degree.

He who attempts, though in vain, at least aspires.

The tempted with diabolism. Milton, P. L.

He from my side subducing, took perhaps More than enough; at least on her bestowed

Too much of ornament, in outward show

Upon the mast they saw a young man, at least if he were a man, who sat as on a horseback.

Sidney.

Every effect doth after a sort contain, at least we resemble the cause for which it proceeds.

Hosier.

Honour and fame at least the third'vee' of oad,
 And ill he pays the promise of a God. Pope.

This remedies, if any, are to be proposed from a constant course of the milken diet, continued at least a year. Temple.

A fend may deceive a creature of more excellency than himself, at least by the total permission of the omniscient Being. Dryden, Del. to Juvenal.

2. It has a sense implying doubt; to say no more; to say the least; not to say all that might be said.

Whether such virtue spent now fail'd
New angles to create, if they at last
Are his created. Milton, P. L.

Let useful observations be at least some part of the subject of your conversation.

Watts, Temp. of the Mind.

LE'AST. adj. [This word seems formed from the same root with loisir, French, or loose.] Flimsy; of weak texture. Not in use.

He never leaveth, while the sense itself be left leone and leone. Archon, Schoolmaster.

LEAT.* n. s. [Ilex, Sax. third pers. sing. pret. from leatan, to lead, to conduct.] A trench to convey water to or from a mill. Mentioned in the Stat. 7 Jac. 1. c. 19.

LE'ATHER. n. s. [leäp, Saxon; leädr, Erse.]

1. Dressed hides of animals.

LEAVE. n. s. [leäp, Saxon; from lytan, to grant.]

1. Grant of liberty; permission; allowance.

By your leave, Ireneus, notwithstanding all this your careful foresight, methinks I see an evil lurk unobserved. Spenner on Ireland.

When him his dearest Una did behold, Disdaining life, desiring leave to dye. Spenner, F. Q.

I make hold to press upon you.
— You're welcome; give us leave, drawer. Shakespeare.

The days
Of Sylla's sway, when the free world took leave
To act all that it would. B. Jonson, Catiline.

Thrice happy snake! that in her sleeve
May boldly creep, we dare not give
Our thoughts so unconfin'd a leave. Waller.

No friend has leave to bear away the dust.
Dryden.

Offended that we fought without his leave,
He takes this time his secret hate to shew. Dryd.

One thing more I crave leave to offer about Sylving, before I leave it. Locke.

I must have leave to be grateful to any who serves me, let him be never so obnoxious to any party: nor did the very party put me to the hardship of asking this leave. Pope.

2. Farewell; adieu. In this sense leave is permission to depart.

Take leave and part, for you must part forthwith. Shakespeare.

Evils that take leave,
On their departure, most of all shew evil. Shaksp.

There is further compliment of leave taking between France and him. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Here my father comes;
A double blessing is a double grace;
Occasion smiles upon a second leave. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

But my dear nothings, take your leave,
No longer must you me deceive. Shedding.

Many stars may be visible in our hemisphere, that are not so at present; and many shall take leave of our horizon, and appear unto southern habitations. Brown.

TO LEAVE.* v. a. pret. I left; I have left. [Of the derivation of this word the etymologists give no satisfactory account. Dr. Johnson. — It is the Saxon leapan, leap, to leave, to relinquish; leffa, leel, the same.]

1. To quit; to forsake.

A man shall leave his father and his mother, and cleave to his wife. Gen. ii. 24.

If they love less, and leave the lusty wine,
Envy them not their palate with the swine. B. Jonson.

2. To desert; to abandon.

He that is of an unthankful mind, will leave him in danger that delivered him. Ecclus. xii. 17.

3. To depart from, without action; as, I left things as I found them.

When they were departed from him, they left him in great distress. 2 Chron. xxiv. 25.

4. To have remaining at death.

There be of them that have left a name behind them. Ecclus. xlii. 8.

5. Not to deprive of.

They still have left me the providence of God, and all the promises of the gospel, and my charity to them too. By Taylor.

6. To suffer to remain.

If it be done without order, the mind comprehendeth less that which is set down; and besides, it leaveth a suspicion, as if more might be said than is expressed. Bacon.

These things must be left uncertain to farther discoveries in future ages.

Abbot, Disc. of the World.
Who those are, to whom this right by descent belongs, be leaver out of the reach of any one to discover from his writings. Locke.

7. Not to carry away.

They encamped against them, and destroyed the increase of the earth, and left no sustenance for Israel. Judg. vi. 4.

He shall eat the fruit of thy cattie; which also shall not leave thee either corn, wine, or oil. Deut. xlviii. 48.

Vastus gave strict commandment, that they should leave behind them unnecessary baggage. Knox, Hist.

8. To reject; not to choose.

In all the common incidents of life, I am superior, I can take or leave. Steele.

9. To fix as a token or remembrance.

This I leave with my reader, as an occasion for him to consider, how much he may be beholden to experience. Locke.

10. To bequeath; to give as inheritance.

That peace thou leav'st to thy imperial line,
That peace, Oh happy shade, be ever thine. Dryden.

11. To give up; to resign; to part with.

Thou shalt not glean thy vineyard; thou shalt leave them for the poor and stranger. Lev. xix. 10.

Such black and grained spots
As will not leave their tinct. Shaksp. Hamlet.

If a wise man were left to himself, and his own choice, to wish the greatest good to himself he could devise; the sum of all his wishes would be this, That there were just such a being as God is. Tillotson.

12. To permit without interposition.

Whether Esau were a vassal, I leave the reader to judge. Locke.

13. To cease to do; to desist from.

Let us return, lest my father leave caring for the ames, and take thought for us. 1 Sam. ix. 5.

14. TO LEAVE OFF. To desist from; to forbear.

If upon any occasion, you bid him leave off the doing of any thing, you must be sure to carry the point. Locke.

In proportion as old age came on, he left off fox-hunting. Addison, Spect.

15. TO LEAVE OFF. To forsake.

He began to leave off some of his old acquaintance, his roving and bullying about the streets: he put on a serious air. Archibald, John Bull.

16. TO LEAVE OUT. To omit; to neglect.

I am so fraught with curious business, that I leave out ceremony. Shaksp. Winter Tale.

You may partake: I have told 'em who you are. — I should be loth to be left out, and here too. B. Jonson.

What is set down by order and divided into books, demonstrate, that nothing is left out or omitted, but all is there. Bacon.

Be friend till utmost end
Of all thy days be done, and none left out,
For the nice morn on the Indian steep
From her cabin'd loop-hole peep. Milt. Comus.

We ask, if those subvert
Henson's world's d'maxims, who assert
That we the earth's existence may conceive,
Though we one atom out of matter leave? Blackmore.

I always thought this passage left out with a great deal of judgement, by Tucca and Varus, it seems to contradict a part in the sixth Æneid.
Addison on Italy.

TO LEAVE. v. n.

1. To cease; to desist.

If I be my essence, and I leave to be,
She is not by her fair influence
Foster'd, blun'd, d, cherish'd, kept alive. Shakspeare.
And since this business so far is done,
Let us not leave till all our own be won. Shakspeare.
He began at the eldest, and left at the youngest.
Gentius.

2. To leave off. To desist.

Gritus, hoping that they in the castle would not hold out, left off to batter or undermine it, wherewith he perceived he little prevailed. Knotter, Hist.

But when you find that vigorous heat abate,
Leave off, and for another summons wait. Rasselas.

3. To leave off. To stop.

Wrongs do not leave off there where they begin,
But still beget new mischiefs in their course. Daniel.

TO LEAVE. v. a. [from leavy, leaver, Fr.]
To levy; to raise; a corrupt word, made, I believe, by Spenser, for a rhime.

An army strong the leav'd,
To war on those which him of his realm betray'd. Spenser, F. Q.

LEAVED. adj. [from leaves, of leaf.]

1. Furnished with foliage.
Those tamarisks with thick leav'd box are found,
And cytissus and garden-pines abound. Congreve, Tivoli, of Orvid.

2. Made with leaves or folds.

I will loose the loins of kings, to open before him the two leaved gates. Isa. xlv. 1.
LEAVELESS. adj. [from leaf and less.]
Having no leaves. Leafless is more used.

Then I no more shall court the verdant bay,
But the dry leavess trunk on Goughs. Carew, Venus prof. to Simply's Paulina.

LEAVEN. n. s. [leavin, Fr. from lever, to lift up; levere, Lat. Our word should be written leaven. "The sour coagulated milk of Syria is called leaven." Withering's
Eng. Botany, ii. 324.]

1. Ferment mixed with any body to make it light; particularly used of sour dough mixed in a mass of bread.

It shall not be baked with leaven. Lev. vi. 17.
All fermented meats and drinks are easiest diggested; and those unfermented, by harm or leaven, are hardly digested. Flyger.

2. Any mixture which makes a general change in the mass, it generally means something that depraves or corrupts that with which it is mixed.

Many of their propositions savour very strong of the old leaven of innovations. K. Charles.

TO LEAVEN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To ferment by something mixed.

Whosoever eateth leavened bread, that soul shall be cut off. Exod. xii. 17.

2. To taint; to imbue.

They yet so watch over their hearts, as not to suffer any outward momentary adornings whatsoever to leaven them with any thing of pride or sinful vanity. Bp. Taylor, Arif. Handsum. p. 187.
That cruel something unposset,
Corrodes and leavens all the rest. Prior.

3. To imbue; in a good sense.

A few fishermen leavened the world with a doctrine of love against the grain of it; and asked truth prevailed against authority, art, and interest, in conjunction. Goodman, Wind. Er. Conf. p. 11.

LEAVENING. n. s. [from leaven.] Ferment mixed with any substance to make it light.

Breads we have of several grains, with divers kinds of leavenings and seasonings; so that some do extremely more appetites. Bacon.

LEAVENOUS. adj. [from leaven.] Containing leaven; tainted.

Those unwise and leavenous doctrine, corrupting the people, first taught them looseness, then bondage. Milton, Eikonoclast. ch. 9.

LEAVER. n. s. [from leave.] One who deserts or forsakes.

Let the world rank me in register
A master-leaver and a fugitive. Shakspeare.

LEAVES. n. s. The plural of leaf.

It is fit for the unembellishment of man in plants are, seeds, roots, and fruits; for leaves they give no nourishment at all. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

LEAVINESS. n. s. [from leavy.] State of being full of leaves; accumulation of leaves. Leafiness would be better. Sherwood.

LEAVINGS. n. s. pl. [from leave.] Remnant; relics; offal; refuse: it has no singular.

My father has this morning call'd together,
To this poor hall, his little Roman senate,
The leavings of Pharsalia. Addison, Cato.

Then who can think we'll quit the place,
Or stop and light at Cloc's head,
With scraps and leavings to be fed? Swift.

LEAVY. adj. [from leaf.] Full of leaves;
covered with leaves; leafy is more used.

Straphon, with leavy twigs of laurel tree,
A garland made on temples for to wear,
By which they chosen was the dignity
Of village lord that Whimodile to bear. Sidney.

Now, near enough; your leavy screens thrown down,
And show like those you are. Shakspeare, Muchob.

TO LECH. v. a. [lecher, French. This is merely another term for the verb lech, already noticed; which Hamner explains by lech. But this is the commentary, made, in an unguarded moment, by the rash pen of Mr. Mason:

"Hast thou yet lech'd the Athenian's eyes, &c." See TO LATCH. "This,"
Mr. Mason says, "is a strong specimen of Johnson's inconsistency. Under the verb lech, this passage is given for an example of it, the word being silently altered to latched. Such wilful impositions on the public would be enough to ruin any literary character whatsoever."

—Now silent alteration is quite out of the question; lech is the reading of the poet, retained by Mr. Steevens; and is one of our northern words unknown to Mr. Mason. Johnson gives lech, or, as Hamner calls it, lech, merely, perhaps, as the proposed alteration of that critick; and accordingly so cited the passage.

LECHER. n. s. [Derived by Skinner from lezure, old French; lezure is used in the middle ages in the same sense.
Dr. Johnson.—The old French language has lecheur, "galant, libertin, debauché, friand, gourmand, qui s'adonne aux
plaisirs, soit de la table ou de l'amour."
Roquefort. — Legepceps, Saxon, is
"concupiscit illicitus, fornicator, adulterum. Hinc nostra, lecher, lechery."
Lye, edit. Manning.—It is probably from the German leichen, to be lascivious, to play the whore.] A whore-
master.

I will now take the lecher; he's at my house;
he cannot "scape me. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

You, like a lecher, out of whorish loins
Are pleas'd to breed out your inheritors. Shakspeare.
The lecher soon transforms his mistress; now
In lo's place appears a lovely cow. Dryden.

The sleepy lecher shuts his little eyes,
About his churning chaps the frothy bubbles rise. Dryden.

She yields her charms
To that fair lecher, the strong God of arms. Pope, Odyssey.

TO LECHER. v. n. [from the noun.] To whore.

Die for adultery? no.
The wren goes so, and the small gilded by Does lecher in my sight. Shakspeare, A. Lear.
Gut eats all day, and lechters all the night. B. Jonson.

LECHEROUS. adj. [from lecher.]
1. Provoking lust.

A lecherous thing is wine, and drunkenness
Is full of striving and of wretchedness. Chaucer, Pard. Tale.

2. Lewd; lustful.

The sapphire should grow foul, and lose its beauty, when worn by one that is lecherous; the emerald should fly to pieces, if it touch the skin of any unchaste person. Derrham.

LECHEROUSLY. adv. [from lecherous.]
Lewdly; lustfully.

Ther he wasted his goodlie, in livings lecherous.
Wicliffe, St. Loh. iv. 15.

LECHEROUSNESS. n. s. [from lecherous.]
Lewdness.

LECHERY. n. s. [from lecher; old Fr.
lechere. See LECHER.] Lewdness; lust.

The rest welcom with little shame in open
lechery, as swine do in the common mire. Asham, Schoolmaster.

Against such lewdsters and their lechery,
Those that betray them do no treachery. Shakspeare.

LECTION. n. s. [lectio, Lat.]

1. A reading; a variety in copies.

I have perused those various lectiones of Lectiones. Bentley, Phil. Lips. § 27.

Every critic has his own hypothesis: if the common text be not favourable to his opinion, a various lection shall be made authentic. Watts, Logic.

2. A lesson, or portion of scripture, read in divine service.

To this we described Jewish order of morning prayers so far did the ancient Christian agree, as to begin likewise with lectiones and psalmody.

Hesper on Lent, p. 355.

LECTIONARY. n. s. [low Lat. lection-arium.] A book containing parts of scripture, which were read in churches.

The lectionary contained all the lessons, whether from scripture, or other books, which were directed to be read in the course of the year.

Warton, Life of Sir T. Pope, p. 337.
Mabillon found at Lisleux, and published a Gallie lectionary, which is reputed to be now about 1300 years old, and contains the entire epistle of John, except the three heavenly witnesses.
Perron, Lett. to Trévise, p. 159.

LECTURE. n. s. [lecture, French.]

1. A discourse pronounced upon any subject.

Mark him, while Danetia reads his rustick lecture unto him, how he finds his boasts before noon, and where to shade them in the extreme heat.

Wrangling pedant,

When in musick we have spent an hour,
Your lecture shall have leisure for as much.

When letters from Cimar were given to Rustica, he refused to open them till the philosopher had done his lecture. Bp. Taylor, Holy Living.
Virtue is the solid good, which tutors should not only read lectures and talk of, but the labour and art of education should furnish the mind with, and fasten there.

2. The act or practice of reading; perusal.

In the lecture of holy scripture, their apprehensions are commonly confined unto the literal sense of the text.

3. A magisterial reprimand; a pedantic discourse.

Numbals will be blest by Cato's lectures.

To LECTURE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To instruct formally.
  2. To instruct insolently and dogmatically.
- To LECTURE. v. n. To read in publick; to instruct an audience by a formal explanation or discourse; as, Wallis lectured on geometry.

LECTURER. n. s. [from lecture.]

1. An instructor; a teacher by way of lecture.

2. A preacher in a church hired by the parish to assist the rector or vicar.

If any minister refused to admit into his church a lecturer recommended by them, and there was not one orthodox or learned man recommended, he was presently required to attend upon the committee.

LECTURESHIP. n. s. [from lecture.] The office of a lecturer.

He got a lectureship in town of sixty pounds a year, where he preached constantly in person.

LECTURN. n. s. [lectrin, old Fr. lectrarium, low Lat. from lectus, of lego, to read.] A reading desk. Obsolete.

Hulet.

The second lesson Robin Redebrone sang—
And to the lecturne amorily he sprang.

Chaucer, Court of Love.

LEN. part. pret. of lead.
Then shall they know that I am the Lord your God, which caused them to be led into captivity among the heathen.

The leaders of this people caused them to err, and they that are led of them are destroyed.

As in vegetables and animals, so in most other bodies, not propagated by seed, it is the colour we must fix on, and are most led by.

LED'DEN. n. s. [lyben, Sax. the Latin language, and language in general; lyben, the Latin only.] Dante, Mr. Tyrwhitt has observed, uses latino in the general sense of lyben. Our old word is sometimes ledy, or leid, for language; which, as well as ledden, are now obsolete.]

1. Language.

See understood well every thing
That any foule may in his leden sein,
And coude answer him in his leden again.

Chaucer, Syn. Tute.

Thereto he was expert in prophecies,
And could the ledde of the gods unfold.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. xi. 19.

Her leden was like human language true.

Fairfax, Tasso, xvi. 13.

2. True meaning.

And those that do to Cynthia expound
The ledde of strange languages in charge.

Spenser, Cloth Court.

LEDCA'PTAIN. n. s. [led and captain.]

An humble attendant; a favourite that follows as if led by a string.

Mr. Pope, and Mr. Gay, were then favourites of Mrs. Howard; especially Gay, who was then of her ledcaptains.

Swift to Lady B. Germaine, (1732.)
They will never want some creditable ledcaptain to attend them, at a minute's warning, to operas, plays, Ranelagh, and Vauxhall.

LEDGE. v. n. s. [leggen, Dutch, to lie.]

1. A row; layer; stratum.

The lowest ledge or row should be merely of stone, closely laid, without mortar: a general caution for all parts in building contiguous to board.

A ridge rising above the rest; or projecting beyond the rest.

We are like some fond spectators, that when they see the puppets acting upon the ledge, think they move alone; not knowing that there is an hand behind their curtain that stirs all their wires.

The four parallel sticks rising above five inches higher than the handkerchief, served as ledges on each side.

Any prominence or rising part.

Beneath a ledge of rocks his fleet he hides,
The bending brow above, a safe retreat provides.

Swift, Gulliv. Trav.

3. Any prominence or rising part.

LEDGER. n. s. In the sense of an account-book, this orthography is settled by long custom. In any other sense it is perfectly obsolete, so that no advantage can arise from altering the spelling.

As a further confirmation of ledger, we have ledge derived from the same Dutch word which is the original of ledger, namely, leggen, to lie. Nares, Elem. of Orthoep. p. 297. See LEGER.

- LEDHO'REE. n. s. [led and horse.] A sumpter horse.

- LED'F. n. s. [lic, French.]

1. Dregs; sediment; refuse; commonly less.

My cloaths, my wex, exchange'd for thee,
I'll mingle with the people's wretched lee.

[See term; supposed by Skinner from leau, French, the water, Dr. Johnson.

—We have here a vestige of the old Icelandic. word lee, laa, the sea. This seems to give us the true origin of the English lee, which has been strangely derived by Skinner from leau. Others have traced it to le, as denoting shelter; [lee, Goth. "locus tempestatis subductus" Ihre.] But a lee shore is that, towards which the winds blow, and of consequence, the waves are driven. From the lee side of the ship being understood to denote that which is not directly exposed to the wind, it seems to have been oddly inferred, that the term lee, as thus used, signifies calm, tranquil. Dr. Jamieson, in V. L.E.] It is generally that side which is opposite to the wind, as the lee shore is that the wind blows on. To be under the lee of the shore, is to be close under the weather shore.

A leeward ship is one that is not fast by a wind, to make her way so good as she might. To lay a ship by the lee, is to bring her the masts and shrouds flat, and the wind to come right on her broadside, so that she will make little or no way.

If we, in the bay of Biscay, had had a port under our lee, that we might have kept our transporting ships with our men of war, we had taken the Indian fleet.

The Hollanders were before Duinkerik with the wind at north west, making a lee shore in all weathers.

Unprovided of tackling and victualing, they are forced to seek by a storm; yet better do so than venture splitting and sinking on a lee shore.

Him, haply slumbering on the Norway foam,
The pilot of some small night-fouled'd skiff,
Dreaming some island, oft, as seamen tell,
With fad anchor in his very ribs,
Moors by his side under the lee, while night
Invests the sea.

Butter'd by his lee they lay,
The passing winds through their torn canvas play.

To LEE. v. n. [leogan, Sax.] To utter a falsehood; to lie. Chaucer uses lee for a lie. "Thou lee" is thou tellst a lie, in our northern dialect.

LEECH. n. s. [leac, Saxon; lech, lekeis Gothick. Wicliffe, Gower, and Chaucer use this word.]

1. A physician; a professor of the art of healing; whence we still use conleech.

A leech, the which had great insight
In that disease of grievous conscience,
And well coude cure the same; his name was Patience.

Her words prevail'd, and them the learned leech.
His cunning hand gan to his wounds to lay,
And all things else the which his art did teach.

Phryck is their bane.
The learned leeches in despair depart,
And shake their heads, disquodding of their art.

Wise leeches will not vain receipts obtrude;
Deaf to complaints they wait upon the ill,
Till some safe crisis.

The hoary wrinkled leech has watch'd & toil'd,
Tried every health-restoring herb and gum,
And wearied out his painful skill in vain.

They say, had wrought this blessed deed;
This leech Arbutnot was yclept. Gay, Pastorals.

2. A kind of small water serpent, which fastens on animals, and sucks the blood; it is used to draw blood where the lancet is less safe, whence perhaps the name.

I drew blood by leeches behind his ear.

Sicking like leeches, ill they burst with blood,
Without remorse insatiably.

To LEECH.† v. a. [læcian, Sax. leician; Gothick.] To treat with leicimion; to heal.

Fully avised him to leche.

Chaucer's Dream, vers. 852.

LEECRAFT. n. s. [leech and craft.] The art of healing.

We study speech, but others cure with it. We leechcraft learn, but others cure with it.

Davies.

LEECH-WAY. n. s. [from the Gothick leik, flesh, and also a corpse.] The path in which the dead are carried to be buried. Exmore Dialect. That is, the way of all flesh. See also LICH.

LEEF.† adj. [leof, Saxon, dear, loved; lieve, leve, Dutch, the same. See also LIEF.]

1. Agreeable; pleasing; grateful; dear. Mine own dear brother, and my lefit lord.

Chaucer, Merc. Thle.

Whilome all these were low and lefe, And loved their flocks to feed; They never strove to be chief,

And simple was their weede. Spenner, Shep. Col.

My little flock that was to me most lefe.

Spenner, Shep. Col.

For love of that is to thee most lefe.

Spenner, Shep. Col.

2. Willing; as, "leef or loth" common in Gower.

All were they lefe or loth. Spenner, F. Q.

LEEF.* adv. [from the adjective.] Soon; willingly; readily. "I would as leef not go." Common, as a vulgar expression, in many parts of England. See also LEVER.

LEEK. n. s. [leac, Saxon; loach, Dutch; leech, Erse, porrum, Latin.] A plant. Know't thou fluellen? — Yes.

Tell him I'll knock his leek about his pate.

Upon St. David's day. Shakspeare.

Leek to the Welsh, to Dutchmen butter's dear.

Gay.

We use acid plants inwardly and outwardly in gangrenes; in the scurvy, water-cresses, horse-radish, garlic, or leek-pottage.

Flieger on Humours.

LE'ENY.* adj. See LEANY. LEER.† n. s. [hileap, Sax. frons, facies, gena.]

1. Complexion; hue; face. He hath a Rosalind of a better leer than thou.

Shakspeare, As you like it.

2. An oblique view. I spy entertainment in her; she gives the leer of invitation. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

Aside the devil jarr'd!

For envy, yet with jealous leer malign.

3. A labour'd cast of countenance. Damn with faint praise, assent with civil leer.

Pope.

I place a statesman fall with my sight;

A blasted snaffle in all his glee;

With monstrous visage, and peridious leer. Swift.

4. Formerly, the cheek; agreeably to the Saxon usage of it.

No, ladie, quoth the earle with a lowde voyce,

and the teares trilling down his leeres, say not so.

Holingshead, Hist. of Irel. fol. 114. b.

LEER.* adj. [leleap, Sax. vacuus.]

1. Empty. This expression, in colloquial language, is yet spoken, in some places, of the stomach; a leer stomach. In Wiltshire, a leer waggon is an empty waggon; in the Exmore dialect, the word is leery.

2. Empty; frivolous; foolish; without understanding.

The author doth promise a strutting horse-cooper, with a leer drunkard, two or three to attend him in as good equipage as you would wish.

B. Jonson, Induct. Berth. Fair.

Laugh on, sir; I'll to bed and sleep, And dream away the vapour of love, if th' house And your leer drunkards let me.

B. Jonson, New Inn.

He had rather have words bear two senses imperitently, than one to the purpose; and never speaks without a leer sense. Dryden, Character. Rem.

To LEER.† v. n. [from the noun; so leer, Dan. to smile; loeren, Dutch, to look askance.] To look obliquely; to look archly.

I will leer upon him as he comes by; and do but mark the countenance that he will give me.

Shakspeare, Men. 11.

O yes! O yes! if any mad Whom leering Cupid has betray'd To frowns of spite, to eyes of scorn,

And would in madness now see torn

The boy in pieces; let her come

Hither, and lay on him her down. Lily's Galathea.

I wonder whether you taste the pleasure of independency, or whether you do not sometimes leer upon the court.

Swift.

To LEER.* v. a. To draw on with smiles; to beguile with leering.

Bertran has been taught the arts of courts,

To glid a face with smiles, and leer a man to ruin.

Dryden.

LE'ERINGLY.* adv. [from the part, leering.] With a kind of arch smile, or sneer.

He leeringly produces a passage, wherein I maintain that the convocations were heretofore frequently inhibited.

Dp. Nicholson to Dr. Kennet, Epi. Corr. i. 296.

LEES. n. s. pl. [lic, French.] Dregs; sediment: it has seldom a singular. But see LEE.

The memory of king Richard was so strong, that it lay like lees at the bottom of men's hearts; and if the vessel was at stirr'd, it would come up.

Bacon, Hen. 111.

If they love lees, and leave the lusty wine, Envy them not their palates with the swine.

B. Jonson.

Those lees that trouble it, refine

The agitated soul of generous wine. Dryden.

To LEES.† v. a. [leorjan, Sax. to lose; leeren, Dutch.]

1. To lose: an old word.

Then sell to thy profit both butter and cheese, Who buerth it sooner the more he shall leer.

Twain.

Preservature we may find grass to save the horses and mules alive, that we leer not all the beasts.

I King, xvii. 5.

But as they come on both sides he takes fee, And pleasest both: for while he melts his grease For this, that wins for whom he holds his peace.

B. Jonson.

How in the port our fleet drest time did lose, Withering like prisoners, which lie but for fees.

Dennis.

2. To hurt; to destroy. [læsus, Lat. from lædo, to hurt.] A night thief cometh not, but that he stole, sle, and lees.

Wiclyffe, St. John. x. 10.

LEET.† n. s.

Leete, or leta, is otherwise called a law-day. The word seemeth to have grown from the Saxon lefe, which was a court of jurisdiction above the wapentake or hundred, comprehending three or four of them, otherwise called thirving, and contained the third part of a province or shire: these jurisdictions, one and other, he now abolished, and swallowed up in the county court. Cowel. [The word is probably from the Goth. and Icel. leita, to enquire.]

Who has a breast so pure,

But some uncleanly apprehensions Keep leets and law-days, and in sessions sit With meditations lawful? Shakspeare, Othello.

You would not hear at the leets. Because she brought some jugs, and no seal'd quarts. Shakspeare, Tem. of the Shrew.

LEET-ALE.* n. s. A feast or merry-making at the time of the leet.

Leet-ale, in some parts of England, signifies the dinner at a court-leet of a manor for the jury and customary tenants. Morton, Hut. E. P. ii. 229.

LEET.* adj. Our northern word for light; and thus leetsome for lightsome.

LE'EWARD.* adj. [lee and peaph, Saxon.] Under the wind; on the side opposite to that from which the wind blows. See LEE.

The classical were called long ships, the oceanic round because of their figure approaching towards circular: this figure, though proper for the stowage of goods, was not the fittest for sailing, because of the great quantity of leeward way, except when they sailed full before the wind. Arctius.

Let no statesman dare, A kingdom to a ship compare; Let he should call our commonweal A vessel with a double keel; Which just like ours, new rig'd and mann'd And got about a league from land, By change of wind to leeward slide, The pilot knew not how to guide. Swift.

LEFE.* See LEEF, and LEVER. LEFT.* participle preter. of leave.

Alas, poor lady! desolate and left; I weep myself to think upon thy woe. Shakspeare.

Had such a river as this been left to itself, to have found its way out from among the Alps, whatever windings it had made, it must have formed several little seas. Addison.

Went I left to myself, I would rather aim at instructing than diverting; but if we will be useful to the world, we must take it as we find it. Addison, Specie.

LEFT.* adj. [liffe, Dutch; levisus, Latin.] Sinistrous; not right.

That there is also in men a natural propensity in the right, we cannot with consistency affirm. If we make observation in children, who permitted the freedom of both hands, do oftentimes confine it unto the left, and are not without great difficulty restrained from it. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The right to Plato's golden palace guides. The left to that unhappy region tends. Which to the depth of Tartarus descends. Dryden.

The gods of greater nations dwell around, And, on the right and left, the palace bound; The commonwealth where they can. Dryden.

A raven from a wither'd oak, Left of their lodging was oblig'd to croak: That once lik'd him not. Dryden.

The left foot naked when they march to fight, But in a ball's raw hide they sheathe the right. Dryden.

The man who struggles in the fight, Fatigues left arm as well as right. Prior.

LEFT-HANDED.* adj. [left and hand.] 1. Using the left-hand rather than right.

The limbs are used most on the right-side, whereby custom helpeth; for we see, that some are left-handed, which are such as have used the left-hand most.

For the seat of the heart and liver on one side, whereby men becom left-handed, it happeneth too rarely to counterpoise an effect so common; for the seat of the liver on the left-side is very monstrous.

Brown, Falg. Err.

2. Unlucky; inauspicious; unseasonable.
[A Latinism.]

That would not be put off with left-handed cries.

B. Jonson, Epitaph.

They are close hypocrites, and walk in a left-handed policy.

Sir G. Paul, Lift of Alp. Whiffle, p. 56.

- LEFT-HANDEDNESS. n. s. [from left-handed.]

Be ungracious; yet we cannot want that hand.

Donne, Poems, p. 153.

- LEFT-HANDEDNESS. n. s. [from left hand.]

Awkward manner.

An awkward address, ungraceful studies, and actions, and a certain left-handedness (if I may use the expression) proclaim low education.

Ld. Chesterfield.

- LEG.† n. s. [leg, Danish; leggar, Icelandic.]

1. The limb by which we walk; particularly that part between the knee and the foot.

They haue; and what their tardy feet denied,

The trusty staff, their better legs, supplied.

Dryd.

Purging comfits, and ants' eggs.

Had almost brought him off his legs.

Hudibras.

Such intrigue people cannot meet with, who have nothing but legs to carry them.

Adrian, Guardian.

2. An act of obedience; a bow with the leg drawn back; usually, but not always, with the verb to make. Hence, in our old dictionaries, "to make a leg;" and all the examples, given by Dr. Johnson under the present meaning, are accompanied with this verb. There are now examples without it.

At court, he that cannot make a leg, put off his cap, kiss his hand, and say, Shakespeare, all's well.

Their horses never give a blow.

But when they make a leg, and bow.

Hudibras.

He was a quarter of an hour in his legs, and reverences, to the company.

L. Ensign, Tr. of Quercus.

Nor enjoin them a leg, a rhyme, or a bow.

By Barker, Repr. of Robinson, p. 508.

If the boy should not put off his hat, nor make legs very gracefully, a dancing-master will cure that defect.

Locke.

He made his leg, and went away.

Swift.

3. To stand on his own LEGS. To support himself.

Persons of their fortune and quality could well have stood upon their own legs, and needed not to lay in for countenance and support.

Collier of Friendship.

4. That by which any thing is supported on the ground; as, the leg of a table.

LEGACY. n. s. [legatum, Latin.]

Legacy is a particular thing given by last will and testament.

Cowd.

If there be no such thing apparent upon record, that as if one should devise a legacy by force and virtue of some written testament, wherein there being no such thing specified, he pleads that there it must needs be, and bringeth arguments from the love or good-will which always the testator bore him; imagining, that these, or the like proofs, will convict a testament to have that in it, which other men can nowhere by reading find.

Hosker.

Fetch the will kinder, and we shall determine

How to cut off some charge in legacies.

Shakespeare, Jud. Cen.

Good counsel is the best legacy a father can leave a child.

L'Extrange.

When he thought you gone

To augment the number of the blest above,

He deem'd 'em legacies of royal love;

Nor arm'd, his brothers' portions to invade,

But to defend the present you had made.

Dryd.

When the heir of this vast treasure knew,

How large a legacy was left to you,

He wisely ty'd it to the crown again.

Dryden.

Leave to the children tumult, strife, and war,

Portions of toil, and legacies of care.

Prior.

- LEGACY-HUNTER. n. s. A word of contempt for persons, who by flattery or presents endeavour to obtain the good opinion of others, in order to be remembered in their wills by a legacy.

The legacy-hunters, the hereditaries, were a more common character among the ancients than with us.

Jr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

I am, Mr. Rambler, a legacy-hunter and, as every man is willing to think well of the tribe which his name is registered, you will forgive my vanity, if I remind you that the legacy-hunter, degraded by an ill-compounded appellation in our barbarous language, was known, as I am told, in ancient Rome, by the atrocious titles of "captator" and "hereditarius."

Johnson, Rambler, No. 197.

- LEGAL.† adj. [legal, French; leges, Latin.]

1. Done or conceived according to law.

Whatever was before Richard I. was before time of memory; and what is since is, in a legal sense, within the time of memory.

Hale, Hist. of the Com. Law.

2. Lawful; not contrary to law.

Assigning to every thing capable of ownership a legal and determinate owner.

Blackstone.

3. According to the law of the old dispensation.

His merits

To save them, not their own, though legal, works.

Milton, P. L.

- LEGALITY. n. s. [legalité, French.] Lawfulness.

To LEGALIZE.† v. a. [legaliser, French; from legal.] To authorize; to make lawful.

If any thing can legalize revenge, it should be injury from an extremely obliged person; but revenge is so absolutely the peculiar of Heaven, that no consideration can empower, even the best men, to assume the execution of it.

South.

A market-over for legalizing a base traffick of votes and pensions.

Burke, Lett. in T. Dugby, Esq.

- LEGALLY. adv. [from legal.] Lawfully; according to law.

A prince may not, much less may inferior judges, deny justice, when it is legally and competently demanded.

By Taylor.

- LEGATARY. n. s. [legataire, French; from legatum, Latin.] One who has a legacy left.

An executor shall exhibit a true inventory of goods, taken in the presence of fit persons, as creditors and legataries are, unto the ordinary.

Legatary, Latin; legate, English.

LEGATE. n. s. [legatus, Latin; legat, French; legato, Italian.]

1. A deputy; an ambassador.

The legatus from the Ætolian prince return: Sad news they bring, that all after the coast, And care employ'd, their embassy is lost.

Dryden, Æt.

2. A kind of spiritual ambassador from the pope; a commissioner deputed by the pope for ecclesiastical affairs.

Look where the holy legate comes apace,

To give us warrant from the hand of Heaven.

Shakespeare.

Upon the legate's summons, he submitted himself to an examination, and appeared before him.

Atterbury.

- LEGATE. n. s. [from legatus, Latin.] One who has a legacy left him.

If he chance to scape this dismal boat,

The former legacies be blotted out.

Dryden, Juv.

My will is, that if any of the above-named legacies should die before me, that then the respective legacies shall revert to myself.

Swift.

- LEGATESHIP. n. s. [from legate.] Office of a legate.

Shrewsbury.

Has put them in a box called "the box of the ambassador and legation."

Notwick, Confutation of the Aitoran, (1652), p. 97.

- LEGATINE.† adj. [from legate.] Some write this word, improperly, legantine. Even Milton has so used it: "A kind of legantine power." Animadv. on the Rem.

Defence. "Matters of embassies, and legantine affairs." Howells, Pref. to Finet's Philoxenia.]

1. Made by a legate.

When any one is absolved from excommunication, it is provided by a legatine constitution, that some one shall publish such absolution.

Ayliffe, Peregrin.

2. Belonging to a legate of the Roman see.

All those you have done of late,

By your power legatine within this kingdom,

Fall in the compass of a promissory.

Shakespeare.

- LEGATION. n. s. [legatio, Latin.] Deputation; commission; embassy.

After a legation ad res rependendas, and a refusal, and a denunciation or indication of a war, the war is no more confined to the place of quarrel, but is left at large.

Bacon.

In striving, the duke had a fine and unaffected politeness, and upon occasion costly, as in his legations.

Watson.

- LEGATOR. n. s. [from lego, Latin.] One who makes a will, and leaves legacies.

Suppose debates

Between pretenders to a fair estate

Bequeath'd by some legator's last intent.

Beaumont, Tr. of the Legation, Hint and Panther.

- TO LEG.† v. a. [allego, Lat.]

1. To allege; to assert.

To recon false, and ledge auctorities.

Chamier, Court of Love, v. 1065.

Not only he legeth his mercy to bind his reason, but also his wyrdome.

Dyer, Fisher, Pt. 15.

2. To lighten; to ease. [allego, French.] Written also allege, or allege. In both senses obsolete.

To leggin her of her dolours.

Chamier, Rom. R. 5016.

- LEGEND. n. s. [legenda, Lat.]

1. A chronicle or register of the lives of saints.

Legends being grown in a manner to be nothing else but heaps of frivolous and scandalous vanities, they have been even with disdain thrown out, the very nests which breed them abhorring them.

Hosker.

There are in Rome two sets of antiquities, the christian and the heathen; the former, though of 41 a fresher date, are so embroiled with fable and legend, that one receives but little satisfaction.

Addison on Italy.

2. Any memorial or relation.

And in this legend all that glorious deed

Read, whilst you arm you; arm you whilst you read.

Farfax.

3. An incredible unauthentic narrative.

Who can trace the legends, that record

More idle tales, or fables so absurd?

Blackmore.

It is the way of attaining to heaven, that makes profane scorers so willingly let go the expectation of it. It is not the articles of the creed, but the duty to God and their neighbour, that is such an inconsistent incredible legend.

Bentley.

4. Any inscription; particularly on medals or coins.

Compare the beauty and comprehensiveness of legends on ancient coins.

Addison on Medals.

TO LEGEND. v. a. [from the noun.] To detail as in a legend.

Nor ladie's woe, nor wandering knight,

Legend I out in rhimes all richly dight.

Bp. Hall, Sat. l. 1.

LEGENDARY. adj. [from legend.] Fabulous; romantic; partaking of the nature of a legend.

Those legendary writers — ascribe it to them that brought the reliques of St. Andrew.

Cockeram.

2. A relater of legends.

Mendacious and counterfeit miracles related by the legends of their church.

Sheldon, Mir. of Antichrist, (1616), p. 245.

Going with his nurse's sons into the field to fetch home the corn, this famous legendary, Abner, the angel, Gabriel came unto him.

L. Addison, Life of Mahomet, p. 18.

The legends own, that St. Catherine was slandered as a fond and light woman.

Bp. Lexington, Path. of Meth. and Typica, i. 59.

LEGIER. n. s. [from legier, Dutch, to lie or remain in a place.] Any thing that lies in a place; as, a legier ambassador; a resident; one that continues at the court to which he is sent; a legier-book; a book that lies in the computing-house.

Lord Angelo, having affairs to heaven,

Intends you for his swift ambassador,

Where you shall be an everlasting legier.

Shap.

I've given him that

Which, if he take, shall quite unpeople her

Of legiers for her sweet.

Shakespeare, Cymb.

If legier ambassadors or agents were sent to remain near the courts of princes, to observe their motions, such were made choice of as were vigilant.

Bacon.

Who can endure

Thy praise too much? thou art Heaven's legier

here,

Working against the states of death and hell.

Herbert.

He withdrew not his confidence from any of those who attended his person, who, in truth, lay legier for the current, and kept up the spirits of their countrymen by their intelligence.

Clerendon.

I call that a legier bait, which is fixed, or made to rest, in one certain place, when you shall be absent; and I call that a walking bait, which you have ever in motion.

Walton.

LEGER-BOOK. n. s. A book that lies ready for entering articles of account or other memoranda in. See LEDGER.

Many leger-books of the monasteries (are) still remaining, wherein they registered all their leases, and that for their own private use.

An entry in the leger-book of the chapter.

LEGERDEMAIN. n. s. [contracted perhaps from legeret de main, French. Dr. Johnson. — It was, of old, leger, leger du main, or de maine: as in Fluolet's dictionary; in The Pope Confuted, fol. 35, 1580: "A trimme and skillful shift of leger de mayne;" and in Fotherby's Athesmatix, p. 348: "Conveyed unto another by leger du main." Sleight of hand; juggle; power of deceiving the eye by nimble motion; trick; deception; knack.

He so light as legerdemaine,

That what he touch'd can not to light again.

Spenser, Faerie Queene, l. 1.

Of all the tricks and legerdemain by which men impose upon their own souls, there is none so common as the plea of a good intention.

South.

LEGERETTY. n. s. [legeret, French.] Lightness; nimbleness; quickness. A word not now in use.

When the wind is quicken'd, out of doubt,

The organ, though defunct and dead before,

Break up their drowsy grave, and newly move

With casted slough and fresh legidity.

Shakespeare, Hen. F.

TO LEGGE. v. a. [leggan, Saxon.] To lay. See TO LAY.

That obscure language the foundations of penance from dolede work, [present version, not laying again the foundation, &c.] Wicliffe, Heb. vi. 1.

Ther durste no wight hand upon him legge.

Chaucer, Ree's Tale.

To that unfeather'd two-legg'd thing, a son.

Dryden.

LEGIBILITY. n. s. [from legible.] Capability of being read.

LEGIBLE. n. s. [legibilis, Latin.]

1. That may be read.

You observe some clergymen with their heads held down within an inch of the cushion, to read what is hardly legible.

Swift.

2. Apparent; discoverable.

People's opinions of themselves are legible in their countenances. Thus a kind imagination makes a bold man have vigour and enterprise in his air and motion; it stamps value and significance upon his face.

Collier.

LEGIBILITY. n. s. [from legible.] State or quality of being legible.

LEGIBLY. adv. [from legible.] In such a manner as may be read.

LEGION. n. s. [legio, Latin.]

1. A body of Roman soldiers consisting of about five thousand.

The most remarkable piece in Antonine's pillar is, the figure of Jupiter Pluvius seated rain on the fainting army of Marcus Aurelius, and thunderbolts on his enemies, which is the greatest confirmation possible of the story of the Christian legion.

Addison.

2. A military force.

She to foreign realms

sends forth her dreadful legions.

Philips.

3. Any great number.

Not in the legions

Of horrid hell, can come a devil more dam'd.

Shakespeare.

The partition between good and evil is broken down; and where one sin has entered, legions will force their way through the same breach. Rogers.

LEGIONARY. adj. [from legion; Fr. legionnaire.]

1. Relating to a legion.

Sherwood.

It [the Gospel] was most probably first introduced among the legionary soldiers; for we find St. Alban, the first British martyr, to have been of that body.

Burke, Aborig. of Eng. History.

2. Containing a legion.

3. Containing a great indefinite number.

Too many applying themselves bewist jest and earnest, make up a legionary body of error.

Brown.

LEGIONARY. n. s. One of a body of Roman soldiers, consisting of about five thousand.

The legionaries, stood thick in order, empalmed with light armed; the horse on either wing.

Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 2.

TO LEGISLATE. v. n. To make laws for any community.

Solon, in legislating for the Athenians, had an idea of a more perfect constitution than he gave them; but he gave them such laws as they were then capable of receiving.

Bp. Watson, Charge in 1805.

LEGISLATION. n. s. [from legislator, Lat.] The act of giving laws.

Let me intrust you to explain what you mean by this way of divine legislation, or this way of delivering the Will of God, by the writings of the Holy Scripture. Goodman, Hist. Eccl. Conf. P. iii.

Pythagoras joined legislation to his philosophy, and like others, pretended to miracles and revelations from God, to give a more venerable sanction to the laws he prescribed.

Litteton on the Conversion of St. Paul.

LEGISLATIVE. adj. [from legislator.] Giving laws; lawgiving.

Their legislative phrensy they repent,

Enacting it should make no precedent.

Danthon.

The poet is a kind of lawgiver, and those qualities are proper to the legislative style.

Dryden.

LEGISLATOR. n. s. [legislator, Latin; legislator, French. The earliest example, given by Dr. Johnson, of this word, is from South. It appears in the list of hard words, requiring explanation, in Sylvester's Du Bartas, 1621, p. 665.]

A lawgiver; one who makes laws for any community.

It spoke like a legislator: the thing spoke was a law.

South.

Heroes in animated marble frown,

And legislators seem to think in stone.

Pope.

LEGISLATORSHIP. n. s. [from legislator.] Power of making laws.

There ought to be a difference made between coming out of pupillage, and leaping into legislatorship.

Le. Hall, Hylf.

LEGISLATORSHIP. n. s. [from legislator.] A female lawgiver.

See what that country of the mind will produce, when by the wholesome laws of this legislator it has obtained its liberty.

Shaftebury, Moral. P. iv. § 9.

LEGISLATURE. n. s. [from legislator, Lat.] The power that makes laws.

Without the concurrent consent of all three parts of the legislature, no law is, or can be made.

Hale, Com. Law.

In the notion of a legislature is implied a power to change, repeal, and suspend laws in being, as well as to make new laws.

Addison.

By the supreme magistrate is properly understood the legislative power, but the word magistrate seeming to denote a single person, and to express the executive power, it came to pass that the obsequies due to the legislature was, for want of considering this easy distinction, misapplied to the administration.

Boethius, Sentent. of a Ch. of Eng. Man.

LEGIST. * n. s. [lex, legis, Lat. the law; legiste, old French. Our old lexicography gives legiste, as an obsolete word for lawyer. Bullokar and Cockeram. Chaucer uses it. Test. of Love.] One skilled in law.

Be it from my sharp matrick muse
Those grave and reverent legists to abuse,
That aid Astraea.

Marton, Scourge of Vill. (1595), li. 7.

The decretals and legists denied their ignorance.

LEGITIMACY. n. s. [from legitime.]

1. Lawfulness of birth.
In respect of his legitimacy, it will be good.

2. Genuineness; not spuriousness.
The legitimacy or reality of these marine boats vindicated, I now inquire by what means they were hurried out of the ocean.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

LEGITIMATE † adj. [from legitimus, Latin; legitime, Fr.]

1. Born in marriage; lawfully begotten.
Legitimate Edgar, I must have your land;
Our father's love is to the bastard Edmund;

Shakespeare.

An adulterous person is tied to make provision for the children begotten in unlawful embraces, that they may do no injury to the legitimate, by receiving a portion.

Sp. Taylor.

2. Genuine; not spurious: as, a legitimate work, the legitimate production of such an author.

3. Lawful: as, a legitimate course of proceeding.

TO LEGITIMATE † v. s. [legitimi, Fr. from the adjective.]

1. To procure to any the rights of legitimate birth.
None of your holy fathers as yet have been able to legitimate the child.

Sheldon, Mir. of Antichrist, (1616), p. 150.

Legitimate him that was a bastard.

Ayliffe, Paragon.

2. To make lawful.
To enact a statute that which dares not seem to approve, even to legitimate vice, to make sin itself, the ever alien and vassal sin, a free citizen of the commonwealth, pretending only three or four plausible reasons.

Milton, Dect. and Disc. of Div. li. 2.

It would be impossible for any enterprise to be lawful, if that which should legitimate it is subsequent to it, and has no influence to make it good or bad.

Deroy of Chr. Party.

LEGITIMATELY † adv. [from legitime.]

1. Lawfully.
Those who were born of harlots, were not bound by the law to nourish or relieve their parents, as they were who were legitimately born.

2. Genuinely.
By degrees he rose to Jove's imperial seat,
Thus difficulties prove a soul legitimately great.

Dryden.

LEGITIMATENESS. * n. s. [from legitime.]

Legality; lawfulness.

The fathers of Constantinople, in their letter to pope Damasus and the oriental bishops, approved and commended Flavianus to them, highly asserting the legitimacy of his ordination.

Burrow on the Pope's Supremacy.

LEGITIMATION † n. s. [legitimation, Fr.; from legitime.]

1. Lawful birth.

I have disclaim'd my land;
Legitimation, name, and all is gone;
Then, good my mother, let me know my father.

Shakespeare, C. John.

From whence will arise many questions of legitimacy, and what in nature is the difference between a wife and a concubine.

Lodge, Life of Wolsey, p. 234.

2. The act of investing with the privileges of lawful birth.

He legitimated the duke's natural children by Katherine Swinford, whom he had lately married; he got their legitimation confirmed by parliament; and heaped upon them honours and preferences.

Lodge, Life of Wolsey, p. 234.

LEGUME. } n. s. [legume, Fr.; legu-

LEGUMEN. } men, Lat.] Seeds not reaped, but gathered by the hand; as, beans: in general all larger seeds; pulse.

Some legumens, as peas or beans, if newly gathered and distilled in a retort, will afford an acid spirit.

Boyle.

In the spring fell great rains, upon which ensued a most destructive mildew upon the corn and legumes.

Arbuthnot.

LEGUMINOUS. adj. [legumineus, French;

from legumen.] Belonging to pulse;

consisting of pulse.

The properest food of the vegetable kingdom is taken from the farinaceous seeds, as, oats, barley, and wheat; or of some of the stiliqueous or leguminous, as, peas or beans.

Arbuthnot.

LEIGER. * See LEGER and LEGER.

LEIGER-BOOK. * BOOK.

LEISURABLE † adj. [from leisure.] Done at leisure; not hurried; enjoying leisure.

A relation inextinguishable in his works of leisureable hours, the examination being as ready as the relation.

Brown.

A French gentleman, these consul-general for his nation, stayed me to take a leisureable view of that kingdom. Bibaut, Voy. to the Levant, p. 108.

He publicly declared himself ready and desirous to assist any person single, and particularly invited such to come at their leisureable hours.

Fell, Life of Hammond, § 2.

LEISURABLY † adv. [from leisureable.] At leisure; without tumult or hurry.

Let us beg of God, that when the hour of our rest is come, the patterns of our dissolution may be Jacob, Moses, Joshua, and David, who leisureably ending their lives in peace, retired for the mercies of God upon their posterity.

Hosier.

Here men must follow the shore: wind about leisureably; and insinuate their useful alterations by soft and unperceivable degrees.

Spenser, Hist. B. s. p. 66.

LEISURE. n. s. [laisier, Fr.]

1. Freedom from business or hurry; a vacancy of mind; power to spend time according to choice.

A gentleman fell very sick, and a friend said to him, Send for a physician; but the sick man answered, It is no matter; for if I die, I will die at leisure.

Bacon, Apophthegms.

Where ambition and avarice have made no entrance, the desire of leisure is much more natural than of business and care.

Temple.

You enjoy your quiet in a garden, where you have not only the leisure of thinking, but the pleasure to think of nothing which can discompose your mind.

Dryden.

2. Convenience of time.

We'll make our leasures to attend on yours.

Shakespeare.

They summon'd up their meiny, strait took horse;

Commanded me to follow, and attend

The leisure of their answer. Shakespeare, C. Lear.

O happy youth!

For whom thy fate reserves as a fair bride:
He sigh'd, and had no leisure more to say,
His honour call'd his eyes another way.

Dryden, Ovid.

I shall leave with him that rebuke, to be considered at his leisure.

Lodge.

3. Want of leisure. Not used.

More than I have said, loving countrymen;
The leisure and enforcement of the time
Forbids to dwell on.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

LEISURE. * adj. Convenient; free from business or hurry. We now say, leisure hours, leisure time.

Here pass me, my Gothic lute, a little while;
The leisure hour is all that thou can'st claim.

Dowry.

LEISURELY. adj. [from leisure.] Not hasty; deliberate; done without hurry.

He was the wretchedest thing when he was young.

So long a growing, and so leisurely.

That, if the rule were true, he should be gracious.

Shakespeare.

The earl of Warwick, with a handful of men, fired Leith and Edinburgh, and returned by a leisurely march.

Heyward.

The bridge is human life; upon a leisurely survey of it, I found that it consisted of threecore and ten leisure arches.

Addison.

LEISURELY. adv. [from leisure.] Not in a hurry; slowly; deliberately.

The Belgians say, that with disorder'd haste,
Our deep-settled heels upon the sands might run;

Or if with caution leisurely we past,

Their numerous goals might chase us one by one.

Dryden.

We decended very leisurely, my friend, being careful to count the steps.

Heyward.

LEMAN. † n. s. [Generally supposed to be Laimant, the lover, French; but imagined by Junius, with almost equal probability, to be derived from leif, Dutch, or leop, Saxon, beloved and man. This etymology is strongly supported by the ancient orthography, according to which it was written lewoman. Dr. Johnson.—

Junius is right; that is, the word comes from the Saxon, leop; and, as man in the Saxon language, signifies both man and woman, leman was used both for male and female sweethearts. Barret terms a leman "a married man's concubine,"

Alv. 1580. Shakespeare, a married woman's gallant; "Ford, that searched a hollow walnut for his wife's leman."

Merr. Wives of Windsor. A sweet-heart; a gallant; or a mistress.

Spenser, F. Q.

Her lewoman be, whether she wold or n'ld.

Chaucer, Man of Law's Tale.

Unto his lewoman Dalida be (Sampson) told,

That in his heres all his strengthe lay:

And finally to his fowen him she sold.

Chaucer, Monk's Tale.

Hold for my sake, and do him not to dye;

But vanquish'd, thine eternal bondslave make,

And me thy worthy meed unto thy leman take.

Spenser, F. Q.

A cup of wine,

That's drink and fine,

And drink upon the leman mine.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

LEME. * n. s. [leema, Saxon; lieme, Icel.

splendour; laughton, Goth. lightning.]

A ray; a beam; a flash; as, "a leme or flame of fire, a leme of lightning,"

Huicet. See also GLEAM.

Fire with red lenes. Chaucer, Nonnes Pri. Tale.
Therby the incomprehensible majesty of God, as it were by a bright lene of a torch or candle, is declared to the blinde inhabitants of this world.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 2.

TO LENE,* v. n. [lenen, Saxon.] To shine; to blaze. Both the verb and substantive are obsolete.

LEMMA,* n. s. [лѣма; lemme, Fr.] A proposition previously assumed.

I shall premise the following lemmas: If with a view to demonstrate any proposition, a certain point is proposed, by virtue of which certain other points are attained; and such supposed point be itself afterwards destroyed or rejected by a contrary supposition; in that case, all the other points, attained thereby and consequent thereupon, must also be destroyed and rejected, so as from thence forward to be no more supposed or applied in the demonstration.

Ep. Berkeley, Analyst, § 12.

LEMON,* n. s. [limon, French; limonium, low Latin.]

1. The fruit of the lemon-tree.

The juice of lemons is more cooling and astringent than that of oranges.
Arbutnot.
The dyers use it for dying of bright yellows and lemon colours. Martiner.

Bear me, Pomona!

To where the lemon and the piercing line,
With the deep orange, glowing through the green,
Their lighter glories bind. Thomson.

2. The tree that bears lemons.

The lemon tree hath large stiff leaves;
the flower consists of many leaves, which expand in form of a rose: the fruit is almost of an oval figure, and divided into several cells, in which are lodged hard seeds, surrounded by a thick fleshy substance, which, for the most part, is full of an acid juice. There are many varieties of this tree, and the fruit is yearly imported from Lisbon in great plenty. Miller.

LEMONADE,* n. s. [from lemon.] Liquor made of water, sugar, and the juice of lemons.

Thou, and thy wife, and children, should walk in my gardens, buy toys, and drink lemonade.
Arbutnot, John Bull.

LEMURES,* n. s. pl. [Latin.] Hobgoblins; evil spirits among the ancients.
In consecrated earth,
And on the holy hurch,
The Lems and Lemures moon with midnight plaint.
Milton, Old Nativ.

TO LEND,* v. a. preterite, and part. pass.
lent. [lennan, Saxon; leenen, Dutch;
laena, Su. Goth. leinan, M. Goth. See LOAN.]

1. To afford or supply, on condition of repayment.
In common worldly things 'tis call'd ungrateful
With dull unwillingness to pay a debt,
Which, with a bounteous hand, was kindly lent;
Much more to be thus opposite with Hen' n's.
Shakespeare.

Thou shalt not give him thy money upon usury,
nor lend him thy virtues for increase.
Lev. xxv. 37.
They dare not give, and e'en refuse to lend,
To their poor kindred, or a wanting friend.
Dryden.

2. To suffer to be used on condition that it be restored.
I'll lend it thee, my dear, but have no power to give it from me. Shakespeare, All's Well.

The fair blessing we vouchsafe to send;
Nor can we spare you long, though often we may lend. Dryden to the D. of Ormond.

3. To afford; to grant in general.

Consciousness, like the sea, receives the tribute of all rivers, though unlike it in lending any back again. Drony of Chr. Party.

Painting and poetry are two sisters so like, that they lend to each other their name and office: one is called a dumb poetry, and the other a speaking picture. Dryden, Daphne.

From thy new hope, and from thy growing store,
Now lend assistance, and relieve the poor.

Cato, lend me far a while thy patience,
And condescend to hear a young man speak.
Addison.

Cephiss, thou

Wilt lend a hand to close thy mistress' eyes.

Al. Philop.

LENDABLE,* adj. [from lend.] That may be lent. Sherrwood.

LENDER,* n. s. [from lend.]

1. One who lends any thing;
2. One who makes a trade of putting money to interest.

Let the state be answered some small matter, and the rest left to the lender; if the abatement be small, it will not discourage the lender: he that took ten in the hundred, will sooner descend to eight than give over this trade.
Whole droves of lenders crowd the bankers doors to lend in money. Dryden, Span. Friar.
Interest would certainly encourage the lender to venture in such a time of danger. Addison.

LENDING,* n. s. [from lend.]

1. What is lent on condition of repayment.
Mowbray hath receiv'd eight thousand nobles,
In name of lendings for your highness' soldiers.
Shakespeare, Rich. II.

2. What is supplied in general.

Off, off, you lendings! Come, anubion here.
Shakespeare, C. Lear.

singular from the Sax. verb lengian.
Mr. H. Tooker.]

1. The extent of any thing material from end to end; the longest line that can be drawn through a body.

There is in Tictum e church that is in length
one hundred feet, in breadth twenty, and in height near fifty: it repareth the voice twelve or thirteen times. Bacon.

2. Horizontal extension.

Mercutius rushes on his foes,
And first unhappy Acron overthrows;
Stretch'd at his length he spurns the swartly ground.
Dryden.

3. Comparative extent; a certain portion of space or time: in this sense it has a plural.

Large lengths of seas and shores
Between my father and my mother lay.
Shakespeare, C. John.

To get from th' enemy, and Ralph, free;
Left danger, fears, and foes, behind.
And beat, at least, three lengths the wind.
Hudibras.

Time glides along with undiscov'rd haste,
The future but a length beyond the past.
Dryden, Ovid.

4. Extent of duration or space.

What length of lands, what oceans have you past'd?

What storms sustain'd, and on what shores been cast. Dryden.

Having thus got the idea of duration, the next thing is to get some measure of this common duration, whereby to judge of its different lengths. Lacke.

5. Long duration or protraction.

May Heav'n, great monarch, still augment your bias
With length of days, and every day like this.
Dryden.

Such toil requir'd the Roman name,
Such length of labour for so vast a frame.
Dryden, Æn.

In length of time it will cover the whole plain,
and make one mountain with that on which it now stands. Addison.

6. Reach or expansion of any thing.

I do not recommend to all a pursuit of sciences, to those extensive lengths to which the moderns
have advanced. Watts, Impr. of the Mind.

7. Full extent; uncontracted state.

If Lemius, who sent me this account, will acquaint me with the worthy gentleman's name; I will insert it at length in one of my papers.
Addison, Spect.

8. Distance.

He had marched to the length of Exeter,
he had some thought of going. Warton.

9. End; latter part of any assignable time.
Churches purged of things burdensome, so we brought at the length into that wherein now we stand. Hooker.

A crooked stick is not straitened unless it be lent as far on the clear contrary side, so that it may settle itself at the length in a middle state of evenness between them both. Hobbes.

10. AT LENGTH. [An adverbial mode of speech. It was formerly written at the length.] At last; in conclusion.

At length, at length, I have thee in my arms,
Though our molestation stars have struggled hard,
And belid us long sunder. Dryden, C. Arctur.

TO LENGTH,* v. a. [lengian, Saxon.] To extend; to make longer. Obsolete.

Was never man so favour could off at all ladies lynde.

To cause them lengthe or shorte the day which they to hym assynde. Holcot in V. Ladies of Devotion.

[He] knows full well doth both length his pain,
Suckled, Induct. Mir. for Mag.

TO LENGTHEN,* v. a. [from length. Sax.
lengian.]

1. To draw out; to make longer; to elonggate.

Relaxing the fibre, is making them flexible, or easy to be lengthened without rupture. Arbutnot on Aliments.

Falling dewd with spangles deck'd the glade,
And the low sun had lengthen'd every shade. Pope.

2. To protract; to continue.

Frame your mind to mirth and merriment,
Which bars a thousand harms, and lengthens life.
Shakespeare.

It is in our power to secure to ourselves an interest in the divine mercies that are yet to come,
and to lengthen the course of our present prosperity.

3. To protract pronunciation.

The learned languages were less constrained in the quantity of every syllable, beside heads of grammatical figures for the lengthening or abbreviation of them. Dryden.

4. TO LENGTHEN OUT. [The particle out is only emphatical.] To protract; to extend.

What if I please to lengthen out his day
A day, and take a pride to cozen fate? Dryden.
I'd hoard up every moment of my life,
To lengthen out the payment of my tears. Dryden.
It lengthens out every act of worship, and produces more lasting and permanent impressions in the mind, than those which accompany any transient form of words. Adrian.

TO LENGTHEN. v. n. To grow longer; to increase in length.

One way as well make a yard, whose parts lengthen and shrink, as a measure of trade in materials, that have not always a settled value. Locke.
Still his farther from its end;
Still finds its error lengthen with its way. Prior.

LENGTHENING. * n. s. [from lengthen.] Continuation; protraction.

Break off thy sins by righteousness, and thine inquiries by shewing mercy to the poor; if it may be a lengthening of thy tranquillity. Dan. iv. 27.

LENGTHFUL. * adj. [length and full.] Of great measure in length.

The driver whisks his lengthful thigh,
The horses fly, the chariot smokes along. Pope, Iliad.

LE'NTHWISE. adv. [length and wise.] According to the length, in a longitudinal direction.

LE'NIENT. adj. [leniens, Latin.]

1. Assuasive; softening; mitigating.
In this one passion may the strength enjoy;
Time, that on all things lays his lenient hand,
Yet tames not this; it sticks to our last end. Pope.

2. With of. Consolatories writ
With studied argument, and much persuasion taught.

Lenient of grief and anxious thought. Milton, S. A.

3. Laxative; anxiuous.
Oils relax the fibres, are lenient, balsamic, and abate acrimony in the blood. Arbutnot on Aliments.

LE'NIENT. n. s. An emollient, or assuasive application.
I dressed it with lenients. Wierman, Surgery.

TO LE'NI'FY. v. n. [lenifere, old French; lenio, Latin.] To assuage; to mitigate.

Used for squinancies and inflammations in the throat, it seemeth to have a mollifying and leni-fying virtue. Bacon.

All softening simples, known of our foreign use,
He presses out, and pours their noble juice;
These first infuse, to lenify the pains;
He tugs with pincers, but he tugs in vain. Dryden.

LE'NIMENT. * n. s. [lenimentum, Latin.] An assuaging. Cockerham.

LE'NITIVE. adj. [lenitif, Fr.; lenio, Latin.]
Assuasive; emollient.

Some plants have a milk in them; the cause may be an inception of putrefaction; for those milks have all an acrimony, though one would think they should be lenient. Bacon.

There is alimens lenitive expelling the feces without stimulating the bowels; such are animal oils. Arbutnot.

LE'NITIVE. † n. s.

1. Any thing medicinally applied to ease pain.

An apothecary's shop, wherein are remedies—alternatives, corroboratives, lenitives. Barton, Anat. of Med. p. 279.

There are lenitives that friendship will apply before it would be brought to detestable rigours. South, Sermon.

LE'NITY. n. s. [lenitas, Latin.] Mildness; mercy; tenderness; softness of temper.

Henry gives consent,
Of most compassion, and of lenity.
To ease your country. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
Lenity must gain
The mighty men, and please the discontent. Daniel.

Albeit so ample a pardon was proclaimed touching treason, yet could not the boldness be beaten down either with severity, or with lenity be abated.
Hayward.

These jealousies
Have but one root, the old imprison'd king.
Whose lenity first pleas'd the gaping crowd:
But when long try'd, and found supinely good,
Like Æsop's log, they leapt upon his back. Dryden.

LE'NNOCK. * adj. Slender; pliable. Lancasire Gloss.

LENS. n. s. From resemblance to the seed of a lens.

A glass spherically convex on both sides, is usually a lens; such as is a burning-glass, or spectacle glass, or an object glass of a telescope. Newton, Opticks.
According to the difference of the lens, I used various distances. Newton, Opticks.

LENT. part. pass. from lend.
By Jove, the stranger and the poor are sent,
And what to those we give, to Jove is lent. Pope, Ode.

LENT. * n. s. [from lend.] A supply, to be repaid or returned.

Upon the lent of Mr. Pocock's copy, he declared, that had it not been for his fear of opposiing his amanuensis, he would, upon sight thereof, have begun his work again. Twelfth, Life of Dr. E. Pocock.

LENT. † n. s. [lenten, the spring, Sax.;
from the Goth. Mana, to grow warm,
as the air in the spring does. Serenius.]
The quadragesimal fast; a time of abstinence; the time from Ashwednesday to Easter.

Lent is from springing, because it falleth in the spring; for which our progenitors, the Germans, use lent. Camden.

LENT. * adj. [lentus, Latin.] Slow; mild.
Not in use.

We must now increase
Our fire to 'ignis ardens,' we are past
"Fumus equinus, balnei ciceris,"
And all those leniter houts. B. Jonson, Alchemist.

LENT. adj. [from lent.] Such as is used in lent; sparing.

My lord, if you delight not in man, what lenient entertainment the players shall receive from you. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

She quench'd her fury at the flood,
And with a lenient salad cool'd her blood.
Their commonness, though but coarse, were nothing scents. Dryden, Hind and Panther.

LENTI'CLAR. adj. [lenticulaire, French.]
Convexly convex; of the form of a lens.

The crystalline humour is of a lenticular figure, conver on both sides. Ray on Creation.

vation of the haggard, and the two sorts of lentisers. Walton, Angler.

LENTOR. n. s. [lentor, Latin; lentour,
French.]

1. Tenacity; viscosity.
Some bodies have a kind of lentor, and more deceptive nature than others. Bacon.

2. Slowness; delay; sluggish coldness.
The lentor of eruptions, not inflammatory, points to an acid cause. Arbutnot on Diet.

3. [In physics.] That airy, viscid, co-agulated part of the blood, which, in malignant fevers, obstructs the capillary vessels. Quincy.

LENTOUS. adj. [lentus, Latin.] Viscous;
tenacious; capable to be drawn out.

In this span of a lentous and transparent body, as to be discerned many species which become black, a substance more compacted and tenuous than the other; for it rieth not in distillation. Brown.

LE'NOY. * See the fourth sense of EX-VOY.

LE'O. * n. s. [Latin, the lion.] The fifth sign of the zodiac.

By Leo, and the Virgin, and the Scales. Milton, P. L.

LE'OD. † n. s. Leod signifies the people;
or, rather, a nation, country, &c. Thus leodgar is one of great interest with the people or nation. Gibson's Camden.

Thus leod, in old Cornish, a tribe.
Chaucer uses leas, from the Greek λέαι,
for people.

Less people in English is to say.

Second Nonnes Tales.

LE'OF. n. s. Leof denotes love; so leof-win is a winner of love; leofstan, best beloved; like these Agapetus, Erasmus, Philo, Amandus, &c. Gibson's Camden.

LE'OFINE. † adj. [leofinus, Latin.]

1. Belonging to a lion; having the nature of a lion.

So was he ful of leofin courage. Chaucer, Monk's Tale.

That which in their physiognomy is leofine;
for, we read, some men had lionly looks.

Sp. Gauden, Life of Bp. Brownrigg, p. 236.

2. Leoline verses are those of which the end rhimes to the middle, so named from Leo the inventor: as,

Gloria facturum temere conceditur horum. Dr. Johnson.

Leo was not the inventor of Leontine verses, but Leontius. Menagiana, tom. ii. p. 214.

If his delight in odd-continued fancies, he may please himself with antistrophes, rebuses, leontine verses, &c. to be found in Sieur des Accords. Sie T. Brown, Miscel. p. 127.

Leontine verses are properly the Iliac hexameters or pentameters rhymed.

Warton, Hist. P. E. p. 12.

LEOPARD. n. s. [leo and pardus, Latin.] A spotted beast of prey.

Shew run not half so timorous from the wolf, Or horse or cat as from the leopards. As you fly from your oft-subdued slaves.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Before the king tame leopards led the way, And troops of lions innocently play. Dryden. A leopard is every way, in shape and actions, like a cat: his head, teeth, tongue, feet, claws, tail, all like a cat's: he boxes with his fore-feet, as a cat doth her kittens; leaps at the prey, as a cat at a mouse; and will also spit much after the same manner; so that they seem to differ, just as a kite doth from an eagle.

Greiv. Museum.

LEOPARDS-BANE. n. s. The name of an herb.

LE'PER. n. s. [lepra, leprosus, Latin.] One infected with a leprosy.

I am no loathsome leper; look on me.

Shakespeare.

The leper in whom the plague is, his clothes shall be rent. Lev. xiii. 45.

LE'PEROUS. adj. [Formed from leprosus, to make out a verse.] Causing leprosy: infected with leprosy; leprous.

Upon my secure bower thy leucis stole, With juice of cured babbled in a vial, And in the porches of mine ears did pour The leprous distillment. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

LE'PID. adj. [lepidus, Latin.] Pleasant; merry; lively; quick. Cockeram.

Some elegant figures and tropes of rhetoric do lie very near upon the confines of jocularity, and are not easily discerned from those satires of wit, wherein the lepid way doth consist. Burton, i. 14.

LE'PORINE. adj. [leporinus, Lat.] Belonging to a hare; having the nature of a hare.

LEPRO'SITY. n. s. [from leprosus.] Squamous disease.

If the crudities, impurities, and leprosinities of metals were cured, they would become gold. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

LE'PROSY. n. s. [lepra, Latin; lepre, Fr.] Formerly our word was leprosy; as in Huloet's old dictionary. A loathsome distemper, which covers the body with a kind of white scales.

Hebe, boane.

Sow all the Athenian boozers, and their crop Be general leprosy. Shakespeare, Timon.

It is a plague of leprosy. Lev. xiii. 5.

Between the malice of my enemies and other men's mistakes, I put so great a difference as between the itch of novelty and the leprosy of dissolality. King Charles.

Authors, upon the first entrance of the pox, looked upon it so highly infectious, that they ran away from it as much as the Jews did from the leprosy. Wiccanus, Surgery.

LE'PROUS. adj. [lepra, Latin; lepreux, French.] Infected with a leprosy.

He put his hand into his bosom; and when he took it out, behold, his hand was leprous as snow. Exod. iv. 6.

The silly amorous sucks his death.

By drawing in a leprous harlot's breath. Donne. LE'PROUSLY. adv. [from leprosus.] In an infectious degree.

Do but imagine

Now the disease has left you, how leprously

That office would have ciling'd it unto your forehead. Taurean, Revenger's Tragedy.

LE'PROUSNESS. n. s. [from leprosus.] State of being leprous. Sherrwood.

LERE. n. s. [lape, Sax; leere, Dutch.]

1. A lesson; lore; doctrine. Obsolete.

This sense is still retained in Sotland.

The kid, pitying his heaviness,

Asked the cause of his great distress;

And also who, and whence, that he were.

Tho' he, that had well yron'd his liver,

Thus meddled his talk with many a tear. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

2. Skill; scholarship. In this sense lare, or lair, is used in the north of England.

He was invulnerable made by magic leare. Spenser, F. Q. vi. iv. 4.

To LERE. v. a. [lapan, Saxon, to teach; leren, Germ. to teach and to learn; laerd, Icel. learned.]

1. To learn. So used in the north of England. "Lewed or lered;" ignorant or learned. Piers Pl. Crede.

As children loved their antiphones. Chaucer, Priores Tale.

He of Thyrsus his songs did lere. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

2. To teach.

I then did lar

A lore repugnant to thy parents' faith. Fortescue, Trum.

LERE. adj. Empty. See LEAR.

LE'ARY. [from lere.] A rating; a lecture. Rustick word.

LESS. adj. A negative or privative termination. [lar, Saxon; loos, Dutch.]

Joined to a substantive, it implies the absence or privation of the thing expressed by that substantive; as, a witless man, a man without wit; childless, without children; fatherless, deprived of a father; pennyless, wanting money.

Dr. Johnson.

The imperative lef of the Sax. verb lejan, to dismiss, has given to our language such adjectives as hopeless, restless, deathless, motionless, &c. i. e. dismiss hope, rest, death, motion, &c. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purk. i. 173.

LESS. conj. [lar, Sax. imper. of lejan, to dismiss.] Unless.

To tell you true, 'tis too good for you,

Less you had grace to follow it. B. Jonson, Barthol. Fair.

You should not ask, less you know how to give. Brown and Pl. Laws of Candy.

And the mute silence hid along.

Less 'Mullion will design a song.

In her sweetest, saddest plight,

Smoothing the rugged brow of night. Milton, El. Para.

LESS. [lar, Saxon.] The comparative of little: opposed to greater or to so great; not so much; not equal.

Mary, the Mother of James the less. St. Mark, xv. 40.

He that thinks he has a positive idea of infinite space will find, that he can no more have a positive idea of the greatest than he has of the least space; for in this latter we are capable only of a comparative idea of smallness, which will always be less than any one whereof we have the positive idea. Locke.

All the ideas that are considered as having parts, and are capable of increase by the addition of any equal or less parts, afford us, by their repetition, the idea of infinity. Locke.

'Tis less to conquer, than to make wars cease, And, without fighting, save the world to peace. L. Halley.

LESS. n. s. Not so much; opposed to more, or to as much.

They gathered some more, some less. Exod. xv. 17.

Thy servant know nothing of this, less or more. 1 Sam.

Yet could he not his closing eyes withdraw, Though less and less of Emily he saw. Dryden.

LESS. adv. In a smaller degree; in a lower degree.

This opinion presents a less merry, but not less dangerous, temptation to the mind in adversity. Decry of Chr. Piety.

The less space there is betwixt us and the object, and the more pure the air is, so much the more the species are preserved and distinguished; and, on the contrary, the more space of air there is, and the less it is pure, so much the more the object is confused and embroiled. Dryden.

Their learning lay chiefly in flourish; they were not much wiser than the less prevailing multitude. Collier on Priests.

The less they themselves want from others, they will be less careful to supply the necessities of the indigent. Smolridge.

Happy, and happy still, she might have prov'd, Were she less beautiful, or less beloved. Pope, Statius.

To LESS. v. a. To make less. Obsolete.

What he will make less, he lessens.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 7.

LESSE. n. s. The person to whom a lease is given.

To LESSE. v. a. [from less.]

1. To make less; to diminish in bulk.

Up to you bill;

Your legs are young; I'll tread these flats. Consider

When you above perceive me like a crow, That it is place that leasens, and sets off. Shakespeare, Cymb.

2. To diminish the degree of any state or quality; to make less intense.

Kings may give

To beggars, and not leasen their own greatness. Drakem.

Though charity alone will not make one happy in the other world, yet it shall lessen his punishment. Calamy, Sermon.

Collect into one sum as great a number as you please, this multitude, how great soever, leasens not one jot the power of adding to it, or brings him any nearer the end of the insatiable stock of number. Locke.

This third after time betrays him into such indecencies as are leasening his reputation, and is looked upon as a weakness in the greatest characters. Addison, Spect.

Nor are the pleasures which the brutal part of the creation enjoy subject to be leasened by the unreasonableness which arises from fancy. Atterbury, Sermon.

3. To degrade; to deprive of power or dignity.

Who seeks

To lessen thee, against his purpose serves

To manifest the more thy might. Atterbury, P. L.

St. Paul chose to magnify his office, when all men consented to lessen it. Atterbury, Sermon.

To LE'ARN. v. n. To grow less; to shrink; to be diminished.

All government may be esteemed to grow strong or weak, as the general opinion in those that govern is seen to lessen or increase. Temple.

The objection lessens much, and comes to no more than this, there was one witness of no good reputation. Attorney.

LESSER. adj. A barbarous corruption of less, formed by the vulgar from the habit of terminating comparatives in er; afterwards adopted by poets, and then by writers of prose, till it has all the authority which a mode originally erroneous can derive from custom.

Dr. Johnson.
Little has two comparatives, less and lesser. Use lesser as at liberty to employ either. The sound will direct us when to prefer the one to the other. As Addison's "Attend to what a lesser Muse indites," is clearly better than a less Muse. But, in general, it may be a good rule, to join less with a singular noun, and lesser with a plural; as, when we say, a less difficulty, and lesser difficulties. The reason is, that few singular nouns terminate in s, and most plural nouns do. Worse, the second comparative of bad, has not the same authority to plead as lesser, and is not, I think, of equal use. Our grammarians which we often attend to the influence which the ear has in modelling a language. Bp. Hurd.

What great despite doth fortune to thee bear,
Thus lowly to abate thy beauty bright,
That it should not deface all other lesser light?

Spenser, F. Q.
It is the lesser blot, modesty folds,
Went to change their shapes than men their minds. Shakespeare.

The mountains, and higher parts of the earth, grow lesser and lesser from age to age: sometimes the roots of them are weakened by subterraneous fires, and sometimes torn by earthquakes into caverns that are under them. Barnes.
Cain, after the murder of his brother, cries out, Every man that findeth me shall slay me. By the same reason may a man, in the state of nature, punish the lesser breaches of that law. Locke.

The larger herd, and there the lesser lamb.
The new-fall'n young herd bleating for thy dams. Pope.

LEUCOPHLEGMATICK. adj. [from leucophlegmatic.] Having such a constitution of body where the blood is of a pale colour, viscid, and cold, whereby it stuffs and bloats the habit, or raises white tumours in the feet, legs, or any other parts; and such are commonly asthmatic and dropsical.

Quincy.
Asthmatic persons have voracious appetites, and for want of a right sangification are leucophlegmatic.

LEVY.* adj. [from lev, Sax.] Agreeable; pleasing; dear. Written also lef, lef, and lef.

To LEVE.* v. a. [from lev, Sax. to believe.] The old form of our present word believe.

She leveth all that ever he saith.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 4.
Another man leveth that he may ete alle things. Wicliffe, Rom. xiv. 2.

LEV'VEE† n. s. [French.]

1. The time of rising.

2. The concourse of those who crowd round a man of power in a morning.

Would'st thou be first minister of state;
To have thy levees crowded with resort;
Of a depending, gazing, servile court?

Dryden, Jun.
None of her sylvan subjects made their court,
Leers and courtesies pass'd without resort.

Dryden, Hind and Panther.
Such as are troubled with the disease of leech-hunting, and are forced to seek their bread every morning at the chamber-doors of great men.

Addison, Spect. No. 547.

LEV'EL. adj. [læpel, Sax.]

1. Even; not having one part higher than another.

The doors
Discover ample spaces o'er the smooth
And level pavement. Milton, P. L.

The garden, seated on the level floor,
She left behind. Dryden, Boacoe.

2. Even with any thing else; in the same line or plane with any thing.

Our navy is address'd, our pow'r collected,
And every thing lies level to our wish. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Now shares with level wing the deep.
Milton, P. L.

There is a knowledge which is very proper to man, and lies level to human understanding, the knowledge of our Creator, and of the duties we owe to him. Tillotson.

3. Having no gradations of superiority. Be level in preferences, and you will soon be as level in your learning. Bentley.

To LEV'EL. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To make even; to free from inequalities; as he levells the walks.

2. To reduce to the same height with something else.

Less bright the moon,
But opposite in level'st west was set. Milton, P. L.

He will thy foes with silent shame confound,
And their proud structures level with the ground. Saunders.

3. To lay flat.

We know by experience, that all downright rains do evermore discover the violence of outrageous winds, and beat down and level the swelling and mountainous billows of the sea. Boyle.

He levels mountains, and he raises plains;
And not regarding difference of degree,
Abas'd thy daughter, and exalted me. Dryden.

4. To bring to equality of condition.

Reason can never assent to the admission of those brutish appetites which would over-run the soul, and level its superior with its inferior faculties. Decay of Chr. Piety.

5. To point in taking aim; to aim.

Each at the head

One to the gunners on St. Jago's tower;
Bid 'em for shame level their cannon lower. Dryden.

Iron globes which on the victor host

The construction I believe is not, globes level'd on the host, but globes level'd smote on the host.

6. To direct to an end.

The whole body of puritans was drawn to be abettors of all villainy by a few men, whose designs from the first were levelled to destroy both religion and government. Swift.

7. To suit to proportion.

Rebeld the law
And rule of beings in your Maker's mind;
And thence, like limbeck, rack ideas draw,
To fit the level'd use of human kind. Dryden.

To LEV'EL† v. n.

1. To aim at; to bring the gun or arrow to the same line with the mark.

The glory of God, and the good of his church, was the thing which the apostles aimed at, and therefore ought to be the mark whereto we also level.

2. To conjecture; to attempt to guess.

I pray thee overname them; and as thou namest them I will describe them; and according to my description, level at my affection. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

3. To be in the same direction with a mark.

He to his engine flew,
Plac'd near at hand in open view,
And rais'd it till it level'd right,
Against the glow worm tail of fate. Huddibras.

4. To make attempts; to aim.

Ambitious York did level at thy crown. Shakespeare.

5. To efface distinction or superiority; as, infamy is always trying level.

6. To square with; to accord.

With such accommodation and bowrt,
As leaveth with her breeding. Shakespeare, Oth.

LEV'EL. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. A plane; a surface without protuberances or inequalities.

After drizzling of the level in Northamptonshire, innumerable mice did upon a sudden arise. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

Those bred in a mountainous country override those that dwell on low levels. Saunders, Travels.

2. Rate; standard; customary height.

Love of her made us raise up our thoughts above the ordinary level of the world, so as great clerks do not disdain our conference. Sidney.

The prizes of military note inspired me with thoughts above my ordinary level. Dryden.

3. Suitable or proportionate height.

It might perhaps advance their minds so far Above the level of subjection, as 'T' assume to then the glory of that war. Daniel.

4. A state of equality.

The time is not far off when we shall be upon the level; I am resolved to anticipate the time, and to be upon the level with them now; for he is not that neither seeks nor wants them. Attireby to Pope.

Providence, for the most parts, sets us upon a level, and observes proportion to its dispensations towards us.

I suppose, by the style of old friends, and the like, it must be somebody there of his own level; whom his party have, indeed, more friends than I could wish. Swift.

5. An instrument whereby masons adjust their work.

The level is from two to two feet long, that it may reach over a considerable length of the work; if the plumb-line hang just upon the perpendicular, when the level is set flat down upon the work, the work is level; but if it hangs on either side the perpendicular, the floor or work must be raised on that side, till the plumb-line hang exactly on the perpendicular. Morris, Mech. Exerc.

6. Rule; plan; scheme; borrowed from the mechanic level.

- Be the fair level of thy actions laid,
As temperance wills, and prudence may persuade,
And try if life be worth the liver's care. Prior.
7. The line of direction in which any missive weapon is aimed.

I stood i' the level
Of a full charg'd confederacy, and gave thanks
To you that clocked it. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

As if that name,
Shot from the deadly level of a gun,
Did murder her. Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

Thrice happy is that humble pair,
Beneath the level of all care,
Over whose heads those arrows fly,
Of sad distrust and jealousy. Waller.

8. The line in which the sight paces.

Fit'd at first sight with what may import,
In fearless youth we tempt the heights of arts;
While from the bounded level of our mind
Short views we take, nor see the lengths behind. Pope.

LEV'ELLER.† n. s. [from level.]

1. One who measures or lays by a level.

Sherwood.

2. One who destroys superiority; one who endeavours to bring all to the same state of equality.

The Presbyterian must not hold himself secure,
While the independent sits at stern; nor the independent free from fear so long as the leveler, With the plusive promises of a pleasing party, suggests to the commons of England (as if it were the year of Jubilee) the enjoyment of a lawless and indisputable liberty.

K. Charles, cited in the Principally Politician, ch. 9.
You are an everlasting leveler; you would not encourage to extraordinary merit.

In diversion grown a leveler, like death?
Young, Criticism, Lett. 2.

1. Evenness; equality of surface.

2. Equality with something else.

The river Tiber is expressed lying along, for so you must remember to draw rivers, to express their levelness with the earth. Poetschman.

LEV'EN. n. s. [levain, Fr. Commonly, though less properly, written leaven; see LEAVEN.]

1. Ferment; that which being mixed in bread makes it rise and ferment.

2. Any thing capable of changing the nature of a greater mass.

The master ferments upon the old leaven,
and becomes more acid. Warner, Surgery.

The pestilential leavins conveyed in goods.
Arbuthnot.

LEV'ER. n. s. [levier, Fr.]

The second mechanical power, is a balance supported by a hypomochlion; only the centre is not in the middle, as in the common balance, but near one end; for which reason it is used to elevate or raise a great weight; whence come the name lever. Harris.

Have you any levers to lift me up again, being down? Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Some draw with cords, and some the monster drive

With rolls and levers. Dryden.

In a lever, the motion can be continued only for so short a space, as may be answerable to that little distance betwixt the fulcrum and the weight;
which is always by so much less, as the disproportion betwixt the weight and the power is greater, and the motion itself more easy.

Wilkins, Math. Magick.

Some hoisting levers, some the wheels prepare.

LEV'ER.† adj. the comparative degree of love, lef, or lief. [leor, leopse, Saxon.]
More agreeable; more pleasing.
Now cheer, and take which you is lever.

Gower, Conf. Am.
It were me lever than twenty pound worth lond.

LEV'ER.† adv. Rather. "To have lever, malo." Prompt, Parv. to prefer. As we now say, I had rather.

Yet had I lever spenden all the good
Which that I have, and (elles were I wood),
Than that ye should fallen in swiche mechele.

Die had she lever with enchanter's kaffe,
Than to be false in love. Spenser, F. Q. I. iv. 6.

LEV'ERET. n. s. [levert, Fr.] A young hare.

Thy travels o'er that silver field does show,
Like track of leverets in morning snow. Waller.

LEVET. n. s. [from lever, French] A blast on the trumpet; probably that by which the soldiers are called in the morning.

He that led the cavalcade,
Wore a songleader's flagellot,
On which he blew as strong a levet,
As well-few'd lawyer on his breviate. Hudibras.

LEV'EROCK. n. s. [lasep, Saxon.] This word is retained in Scotland, and denotes the lark. See LAVEROCK.

The smaller birds have their particular names;
as the leverock. Waller, Angler.

LEV'IALE. adj. [from levy.] That may be levied.

The sums which any agreed to pay, and were not brought in, were to be levied by course of law. Bacon, Hen. VII.

LEV'YATHAN. n. s. [לִיְיָתָן, Heb.] A water animal mentioned in the book of Job.

By some imagined the crocodile; but in poetry generally taken for the whale.

We may, as bootless, spend our vain command
Upon the enraged soldiers in their spoil,

As send our precepts to the levathian,
To come ashore. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Canst thou draw out levathian with an hook? Job.
Move to embroil the deep; levathian;
And his unruly train, in dreadful sport
Tempest the loom'd brins. Thomson, Winter.

To LEVIGATE.† v. a. [levigo, Latin.]

1. To polish; to smooth; to plane. Cock-eram. Not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

This is the primary sense of the word.

New objects with a gentle and grateful touch Warble upon the corporeal organs, or excite the spirits into a pleasant frisk of motion; but when we hath levigated the organs, and made the way so smooth and easy, that the spirits pass without any stop, those objects are no longer felt, or very faintly; so that the pleasure ceases.

The case of the vessel having been curiously levigated, ("ex lignis levigatis et quadratis.")
Bibulus, Bld. i. 335.

2. To rub or grind to an insupportable powder.

3. To mix till the liquor becomes smooth and uniform.

The chyle is white, as consisting of milk, oil,
and water, much levigated or smooth.

LEVIGATE.† part. adj. [from the verb.]
Figuratively, made smooth; lightened.

His labours being levigated and made more tolerable. Br. T. Elphinstone, Gov. fol. 11. b.

LEVIGATION.† n. s. [from levigate.]

Levigation is the reducing of hard bodies, as coral, tully, and precious stones, into a subtile powder, by grinding upon marble with a muller; but unless the instruments are extremely hard, they will so wear as to double the weight of the medicine.

Quincy.
Into water thy earth turn first of all,
Then of thy water make air by levigation,
And air make fire; than master I will thee call
Of all our secrets.

Old Poem in Ashmole's Theat. Chem. (1652) p. 138.

LEV'IN.† n. s. [from hippan, Saxon; to glisten, to shine.] Lightning. Not now in use.

Wild thunder dint and fry levern.
Chaucer, Wife of Bath's Prolog.

The lightness levin. Spenser, Shep. Cal.
As when the flashing grin haps so light
Upon two stubborn oaks.

Spenser, F. Q. v. fol. 40.

LEVITATION.† n. s. [levitas, levitatio, Lat.]
Act or quality of rendering light, or buoyant.

The lungs also of birds, as compared with the lungs of quadrupeds, contain in them a provision distinguishingly calculated for this same purpose of levitation; namely, a communication not found in other kinds of animals between the air-vessels of the lungs and the cavities of the body; so that by the introduction of air from one to the other, (at the will, as it should seem of the animal,) its body can be occasionally puffed out, and its tendency to descend in the air, or its specific gravity made less.

Paley, Nat. Theol. ch. 12. § 6.

LEV'ITE. n. s. [levita, Latin, from Levi.]

1. One of the tribe of Levi; one born to the office of priesthood among the Jews.

In the Christian church, the office of deacons succeeded in the place of the Levites among the Jews, who were as ministers and servants to the priests.

Ayliffe, Purgeon.

2. A priest; used in contempt.

LEV'ITIC.† adj. [from levite.]

1. Belonging to the Levites; making part of the religion of the Jews.

By the Levitical law, both the man and the woman were stoned to death; so heinous a crime was adultery.

2. Priestly.

Austin — sent to Rome Laurence and Peter, two of his associates, to acquaint the pope of his good success in England, and to be revolved of certain theological, or rather Levitical questions.

Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 4.

LEV'ITICALLY.† adv. [from Levitical.]

After the manner of the Levites.

These pure concerted men quarrelled at the name of the holy seventh day, called, as of old, Sunday, which they would have named Sabbath; and thereafter would have it observed Levitically, so strict as not to gather sticks.

Franklyn, Annals of K. James I. p. 81.
What right of jurisdiction soever can be from this place Levitically bequeathed, must descend upon the ministers of the Gospel equally.

Milton, Hist. of Ch. Gov. B. 1.

LEV'ITY. n. s. [levitas, Latin.]

1. Lightness; not heaviness; the quality by which any body has less weight than another.

He gave the form of levity to that which ascended; to that which descended, the form of gravity.

This bubble, by reason of its comparative levity to the fluidity that encloses it, would ascend to the top.

Hemley.

2. Inconstancy; changeableness.

They every day broucht some new thing; which restless levity they did interpret to be their growing in spiritual perfection.

Where wigs with wigs, with sword-knots swordknots strive,

Beaus banish beaus, and coaches coaches drive,
This erring mortals levity may call.

1. Unsteadiness; laxity of mind.

I unobscure'd all my secrets to thee;
Not out of levity, but over-power'd
By thy request.

2. Idle pleasure; vanity.

He never employed his omnipotence out of levity or ostentation, but as the necessities of reason required.

3. Trifling gaiety; want of seriousness.

Our graver business frowns at this levity.
Hoyden abhorred the licence, and the levities,
with which he saw too many corrupted.
That spirit of religion and seriousness vanishes, and a spirit of levity and libertinism, infidelity and profaneness, started up in the room of it.

TO LE'VY. v. a. [lever, French.]

1. To raise; to bring together; applied to men.

He resolved to finish the conquest of Ireland, and to that end levied a mighty army.

2. To raise; applied to war. This sense, though Milton's, seems improper.

They live in hatred, enmity, and strife,
Among themselves, and levy cruel wars.

3. To raise; applied to money.

Levy a tribute unto the Lord of the men of war.
Instead of a ship, he should levy upon his country such a sum of money.

LE'VY. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of raising money or men.

They have already contributed all their superfluous hands, and every new levy they make must be at the expense of their farms and commerce.

2. War raised.

Treason has done his worst: nor steel nor poison,
Malice domestic, foreign levy, nothing
Can touch him further.

LEW. * adj. [laune, German; lew, Dutch;

hloa, to be warm; Icelandic; hlpian, hlepian, Saxon, the same, of which Mr.
Tooke considers lew as the participle past, hlp, hlep.]

1. Not very warm; tepid; lukewarm.

Lew-warm is still an expression in several parts of England. See also LUKEWARM.
Thou art lew, and neither could neither how.

2. Pale; wan; of a decayed hue.

Cognate, and Sherwood.
LEWD.† adj. [laepe, lepy, lepy, Saxon;
as, laepe man, a layman; probably from leob, the people. This is the primitive sense of the word. It next included the idea of ignorance; which Dr. Jamieson attributes to the influence of the clergy on the general sentiments of society, the unlearned being in old time treated by them in a very contemptuous manner. Next, as if moral excellence had been confined to their own order, the term was applied by them to signify a wicked person, or one of a licentious life; whence, Dr. Jamieson adds, the modern sense of our lewd. The sense, however, to which Dr. Jamieson alludes by the word modern, is of great age in our language; for Chaucer uses it in the sense of lawful, as well as ignorant.]

1. Lew; not clerical; gross; ignorant.
Obsolete.

It was founden that they weren men unclerid,
and lewde men.
For lewde men this book I writ.

To these great clerks their little wisdom shew
To mock the lewd, as learn'd in this they.

2. Wicked; bad; dissolute.

If some be admitted in to the ministry, either void of learning, or lewd in life, are all the rest to be condemned?
Before they did oppress the people, only by colour of a lewd custom, they did afterwards use the same oppressions by warrant.

3. Lustful; libidinous.

Swiche old lewde wouds used be.
He is not lolling on a lewd love bed,
But on his knees at meditation.

Then lewd Anchelmotus be held in dust
Who stain'd his step-dame's bed with impious lust.

LE'WOLY.† adv. [from lewd.]

1. Foolishly; ignorantly; in a state of ignorance.

All which my daies I have not *lewde*ly spent,
Nor spilt the blossom of my tender youth
In idleness.

Employing his labours *lewde*ly, he maketh a vain
god of the same play.

Lord Peter, even in his lucid intervals, was very *lewde*ly given in his common conversation, extreme averse to death than allow himself to be once in an error.

2. Wickedly; naughtily.

A sort of naughty persons, *lewde*ly bent,
Have practis'd dangerously against your state.

3. Libidinally; lustfully.

He lov'd fair lady Eltrede, *lewde*ly lov'd,
Whose wanton pleasures him too much did please,
That quite his heart from Guendeline remov'd.

So *lewde*ly had his idle works appear,
The wretched texts deserve no comments here.

LE'WDEAS.† n. s. [from lewd.]

1. Foolishness; grossness; want of shame.
*Leuwde*ness blotteth good deeds with shame.

In stead of tears, the stars like weeping eyes
Drop down their exhalations from the skies;
And Titon's bride new rising from her bed,
Beholds their *leuwde*ness with a blushing red.

2. Wickedness; propensity to wickedness.
In stead of tears, the stars like weeping eyes
Drop down their exhalations from the skies;
And Titon's bride new rising from her bed,
Beholds their *leuwde*ness with a blushing red.

If it were a matter of wrong or wicked *leuwde*ness,
O ye Jews, reason would that I should bear with
you.

3. Lustful licentiousness.

Suffer not *leuwde*ness, nor indecent speech,
To apartment of the tender youth to reach.

Damianus's letter to Nicholas is an authentic record of the *leuwde*ness committed under the reign of celibacy.

LE'WUSTERY. n. s. [from lewd.] A lecher;

one given to criminal pleasures.
Against such leuwsters, and their lechery,
Those that betray them do no treachery.

LEWIS D'OR. n. s. See LOUIS D'OR.

LEXICOGRAPHY. n. s. [λέξιν and γραφία,
Gr. lexicography, French.] A writer of dictionaries; a harmless drudge, that busies himself in tracing the original, and detailing the signification of words.

Commentators and lexicographers, acquainted with the Syriac language, have given these hints in their writings on Scripture.

LEXICOGRAPHY.† n. s. [λέξιν and γραφία,
Greek.] The art or practice of writing dictionaries.

I shall only make some few reflections upon etymology and syntax, supposing orthography to belong to lexicography.

Dalgarno, Deaf and Dumb Man's Tutor,
(1680.) p. 39.

LEXICON. n. s. [λέξιν.] A dictionary;
a book teaching the signification of words.

Though a linguist should pride himself to have all the tongues that Babel cleft the world into, yet,
if he had not studied the solid things in them, as well as the words and lexicons, yet he were nothing so much to be esteemed a learned man as any yoman competently wise in his mother dialect only.

LEV. n. s. See LAV, and LEA.

Ley, lee, lay, are all from the Saxon
leax, a field or pasture, by the usual melting of the letter z or g.

LIABILITY. n. s. [from liable.]

The state of being liable. This is used in conversation oftener than the old word liableness. Of neither has Dr. Johnson taken notice. The present is certainly very modern.

LIABLE.† adj. [liable, from the old Fr.
lia, whence liar, liar, liar; See Lacome:
And that from the Latin, li, to bind;
so that liable is quasi ligabilis.] Obnoxious; not exempt; subject; with to.

But what is strength without a double share
Of wisdom? vast, unweildy, burthenome,
Proudly secure, yet liable to fall

By weakest subtleties.
The fragility, boast of Spencer and Milton, who neither of them wanted genius or learning; and yet both of them are liable to many censures.

This, or any other scheme, coming from a private hand, might be liable to some defects.

LIABLENESS. n. s. [from liable.] State of being liable to; obnoxiousness; subjection; propensity.

Abandoning the liableness of women to self-love and vanity, they are continually striking fire out of their flames upon this tinder.

W. Meningsen, Den. Est. P. I. (1646.) p. 162.
That state or condition must be the better, and in consequence of right reason more eligible, in which there is no liableness to the wrath and anger of God.

There is an inlet for ambition, though not for lust; a liableness to the fallacies of the spirit, though not of the flesh.

How difficult a thing it is, especially in a matter of returning, to pare off the excess, and not to cut to the quick; to stay at the right point, and not over-do; because of the liableness, in such cases, of becoming extreme, to fall into another.

Pulter, Moderation of the Ch. of Eng. p. 432.
La'AR. n. s. [from liar.] This word would analogically be liar; but this orthography has prevailed, and the convenience of distinction from liar, he who lies down, is sufficient to confirm it.] One who tells falsehood; one who wants veracity.

She's like a liar, gone to burning hell!
'Twas I that kill'd her.
Shakespeare, Othello.

He approves the common liar, fame,
Who speaks him thus at Rome.
Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

I do not reject his observation as untrue, much less condemn the person himself as a liar, whensoever it seems to be contradicted.
Byss.

Thy better soul abhors a liar's part.
Wise is thy voice, and noble is thy heart.
Pope, Odes.

LIARD† n. s. [old Fr. liart, gris pomel; Lacombe: Ital. leardo, gray or whitish horse-hair.] Gray: It was common, Mr. Tyrwhitt says, to call a gray horse from the colour, liard, as a bay one bayard. In Scotland liard, or liart, denotes gray-haired; as, he's a liard auld man; auld liart beard, i. e. old gray-beard.

This carter chaffeth his horse upon the croupe—
That was well twight, min own liard boy.
Chaucer, Froth's Tale.

TO LIB. * v. a. [libben, Dutch.] To castrate. Still a northern word.
The bellowing bullock lib, and goat.
Chapman, Heir, (1618.)

LIBATIO. n. s. [libatio, Latin.]

1. The act of pouring wine on the ground in honour of some deity.

In digging new earth pour in some wine, that the vapour of the earth and wine may comfort the spirits, provided it be not taken for a heathen sacrifice, or libation to the earth.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. The wine so poured.
They had no other crime to object against the Christians, but that they did not offer up libations, and the smoke of sacrifices, to dead men.
Stillinger, flect on Rom. Idoltry.

The goblet then she took, with nectar crown'd,
Sprinkling the first libations on the ground.
Dryden, Æn.

LIBBARD. n. s. [libardi, German; leopardus, Lat.] A leopard.
Make the libbard stern,
Leave roaring, when in rage he for revenge did yearn.
Snyder, F. Q.

The libbard and the tiger, as the mole
Rising, the crumbled earth above them threw.
Milton, P. L.

The torrid parts of Africa are by Pto resembled to a libbard's skin, the distance of whose spots represent the dispersions of habitations, or towns of Africa.
Brewster.

LIBERARDS-BANE. n. s. A poisonous plant. Night-shade, moonwort, libbard's-bane.
B. Jonson, Masques.

LIBEL† n. s. [libellus, Latin; libelle, French.]

1. A satire; defamatory writing; a lampoon.
Every seditious sings libels openly; and each man is ready to challenge the freedom of David's ruffians, "Our tongues are our own, who shall control us?" This is not a fiction for Christians, whose tongues must be ranged within the compass as of truth, so of charity and silent obedience.
Byss. Hall, Fictions of the World.

Are we reproached for the name of Christ? that ignominy serves but to advance our future glory; every such libel here becomes panegyric there.
Dreyer of Chr. Picty.

Good heav'n! that sons and knaves should be to vain,
To wish their vile resemblance any remain!

And stand recorded, at their own request,
To future days, a libel or a jest.
Dryden.

2. [In the civil law.] A declaration or charge in writing against a person exhibited in court.

TO LIBEL. v. n. [from the noun.] To spread defamation; written or printed: it is now commonly used as an active verb, without the preposition against.

Sweet scrolls to fly about the streets of Rome:
What's this but libelling against the senate?
Shakespeare.

He, like a priviledg'd spy, whom nothing can Discredit, libels now 'gainst each great man.
Donne.

TO LIBEL. v. a. To satirise; to lampoon.
Is the peerage of England dishonoured when a peer suffers for his treason? If he be libell'd, or a poor way defamed, he has his scandalum magnum to punish the offender.
Dryden.

But what so pure which envious tongues will spare?
Some wicked wits have libell'd all the fair.
Pope.

LIBELLER† n. s. [from libel.] A defamer by writing; a lampooner. "The satirist and libeller differ as much as the magistrate and the murderer. In the consideration of human life, the satirist never falls upon persons who are not glaringly faulty, and the libeller on none but who are conspicuously commendable." Tatler, No. 92.

Our common libellers are as free from the imputation of wit, as of morality.
Dryden, Jus.

The squibs are those who, in the common phrase, are called libellers and lampooners.
Tatler.

The common libellers, in their incentives, tax the church with an insatiable desire of power and wealth, equally common to all bodies of men.
Swift.

LIBELLING. n. s. [from libel.] Act of defaming or abusing.
This is the design and the mischievous issue, which to cover and propagate, the cunning machinator pretends the exaltation of the freedom of that grace which be designs to dishonour and defeat. He raises a mighty cry of free grace, and invites the libellings of divine goodness by the specious name of Finis gratis.
Glaville, Sermon. x. p. 380.

Libelling is not the crime of an illiterate people,
Burke, Speech on Libels.

LIBELLOUS. adj. [from libel.] Defamatory.

It was the most malicious surmise that had ever been brewed, howsoever countenanced by a libellous pamphlet.
Watson.

LIBERAL† adj. [liberalis, Lat.; liberal, Fr.]

1. Not mean; not low in birth; not low in mind.

Where gentle court and gracious delight
She to them made, with mildness virginal
Shewing herself both wise and liberal.
Snyder, F. Q. ii. li. 30.

2. Becoming a gentleman.

3. Munificent; generous; bountiful; not parsimonious.

Her name was Mercy, well known over all,
To be both gracious and also liberal.
Snyder, F. Q. ii. li. 30.

4. Licentious.

Had mine own brother spoke thus liberally,
My fury should have taught him better manners.
Greene, Com. of Tw. Quoque.

TO LIBERATE. v. a. [libero, Lat.] To free; to set free. Upon this word Mr. Mason has rashly observed, that "though this verb, and its derivative noun liberation, are now frequent in periodical publications of news, they are too modern to be found in any dictionary; nor had he met with either, to the best of his recollection, in any writer whom he would produce for an authority." The verb and substantive, however, are both of nearly two hundred

Needs must the power
That made us, and for us this simple world,
Be infinitely good, and of his good
As liberal and free, as infinite.
Milton, P. L.

The liberal are secure alone;
For what we frankly give, for ever is our own.
Graville.

4. It has of before the thing, and to before the person.

There is no art better than to be liberal of praise and commendation to others, in that wherein a man's self hath any perfection.
Bacon, Ess.

Several clergymen, otherwise little fond of obscure terms, are, in their sermons very liberal of all that which they find in ecclesiastical writers, as if it were our duty to understand them. Swift.

5. Gross; licentious; free to excess.

Thou art too wild, too rude, and bold of voice;
Parts, that become thee happily enough,
And in such eyes as ours appear not faulty;
But where thou art not known, why, there they show
Something too liberal.
Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

Is he not a profane and very liberal counsellor?
Shakespeare, Othello.

I might, if it pleas'd me, stand still, and hear
My sister make a may game, might I not?
And give allowance to your liberal jests
Upon his person, whose least anger would Consume a legion of such wretched people.
Bacon, and Pl. Captain.

LIBERALITY. n. s. [liberalitas, Latin; liberalité, French.] Munificence; bounty; generosity; generous profusion.

Why should he despair, that knows his power
With words, his looks, and liberality? Shall.

Such moderation with thy beauty join,
That thou may'st nothing give that is not thine;
That liberality is but cast away,
Which makes us borrow what we cannot pay.
Dehaim.

TO LIBERALISE. v. a. [from liberal.] To make liberal, generous, gentlemanly, open.

He [Mr. Grenville] was bred to the law, which is, in my opinion, one of the first and noblest of human sciences; a science which does more to quicken and invigorate the understanding, than all the other kinds of learning put together; but it is not apt, except in persons very happily born, to open and to liberalise the mind exactly in the same proportion.

Burke, Speech on American Taxation, (1774.)

LIBERALLY† adv. [from liberal.]

1. Bounteously; bountifully; largely.

If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberality, and upbraideth not.
James, i. 5.

2. Not meanly; magnanimously.

3. Freely; copiously.

They invited their father to drink liberally.
Patrick on Gen. xii. 32.

4. Licentiously.

Had mine own brother spoke thus liberally,
My fury should have taught him better manners.
Greene, Com. of Tw. Quoque.

TO LIBERATE. v. a. [libero, Lat.] To free; to set free. Upon this word Mr. Mason has rashly observed, that "though this verb, and its derivative noun liberation, are now frequent in periodical publications of news, they are too modern to be found in any dictionary; nor had he met with either, to the best of his recollection, in any writer whom he would produce for an authority." The verb and substantive, however, are both of nearly two hundred years of age in our language; and may be seen in the old vocabulary of Cockeram.

By what means a man may liberate himself from those fears. Jehon, in Taylor's Sermons.
LIBERATION. * n. s. [liberatio, Lat.] The act of setting free; deliverance.

This mode of analysing requires perfect liberation from all prejudged system.

LIBERATOR. * n. s. [liberator, Lat.] A deliverer.

The exploits of the judges and kings given to the people of God for liberators.

LIBERTINAGE. * n. s. [libertinage, Fr.]
1. Sensuality; dissoluteness.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

2. Licentiousness of opinion.

Erasmus thought he saw, under all their fondness for the language of old Rome, a growing libertinage, which disposed them to think slightly of the christian faith. Worship, Sermon, xlii. verse.

LIBERTINE. * n. s. [libertin, French.]
1. One unconfin'd; one at liberty.

When he speaks

The air, a charter'd libertine, is still;
And the muste word lurketh in men's ears,
To steal his sweet and hoisted sentences.

Shakespeare, Hen. F.

2. One who lives without restraint or law.
Man, the lawless libertine, may rove,
Free and unquested. Rome, Jane Shore.
Want of power is the only bound that a libertine puts to his views upon any of the sex.

Richardson, Clarissa.

3. One who pays no regard to the precepts of religion.

They say this town is full of courage,
Disgraced cheaters, prating mountebanks,
And many such like libertines of sin. Shakespeare.

That word may be applied to some few libertines in the medicine. Cadell, View of the Stage.

4. [In law; libertinus, Lat.] A freedman; or rather, the son of a freedman.

Some persons are forbidden to be accusers on the score of their sex, as women; others on the score of their age, as pupils and infants; others on the score of their condition, as libertines against their patrons. Ayloff, Parergon.

LIBERTINE. adj. [libertin, French.] Licentious; irreligious.

There are men that marry not, but chase rather a libertine and impure single life, than to be happy in marriage. Bacon.

Might not the queen make diligent enquiry, if any person about her should happen to be of libertine principles or morals?

Swiff, Proj. for Advan. of Religion.

LIBERTINISM. * n. s. [from libertine.]
1. Irreligion; licentiousness of opinions and practice.

Modest breathless would hiss this libertinism off the stage. Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. iv. 2.

That spirit of religion and seriousness vanished all at once, and a spirit of libertine libertinism, of infidelity and profaneness, started up in the room of it. Atterbury, Sermon.

2. Privilege or state of a freedman.
Dignified with the title of free-man, and denied the libertinism that belongs to it. Hammond, Works, iv. 486.

LIBERTY. * n. s. [liberté, French; libertas, Latin.]

1. Freedom, as opposed to slavery.

My master knows of your being here, and hath threatened to put me into everlasting liberty, if I tell you of it; for he swears, he'll turn me away. Shakespeare.

Liberty / thou goddess, heavenly bright!
Profuse of bliss, and pregnant with delight,
Eternal pleasures in thy presence reign. Addison.

2. Exemption from tyranny or inordinate government.
Justly thou abhor'st
The son, who, on the quiet state of man,
Such trouble brought, affecting to subdue Rational liberty; yet know'st what Since thy original lapse, true liberty
Is lost, which always with right reason dwells.

Milton, P. L.

3. Freedom, as opposed to necessity.
Liberty is the power in any agent to do, or forbear, any particular action, according to the determination, or thought of the mind, whereby either it is preferred to the other. Lacke.

As it is in the motions of the body, so it is in the thoughts of our minds: where any one is such, that we have power to take it up, or lay it by, according to the preference of the mind, there we are at liberty. Lacke.

4. Privilege; exemption; immunity.
His majesty gave not an intire country to any, much less did he grant jura regalia, or any extraordinary liberties. Davies.

5. Relaxation of restraint: as, he sees himself at liberty to chuse his condition.
License they mean, when they cry liberty. Milton, Sonnet.

6. Leave; permission.
I shall take the liberty to consider a third ground, which, with some men, has the same authority. Lacke.

LIBIDINIST. * n. s. [from libidinous.] One devoted to lewdness or lust.

Nero, being monstrous incontinent himself, verily believed, that all men were most foul libidinists, yes, that there was not a chaste person in all the world. Junius, Sin Signified, (1638), p. 350.

LIBIDINOUS. * n. s. [from libidinous, Latin; libidinosus, Fr.] Lewd; lustful.

It is not love, but strong libidinous will,
That triumphs o'er me. Burton, and Fl. Kn. of Malta.

For his libidinous courses he was slain by his sister's husband.

Gregory, Pastorum. (1650), p. 253.
Thou didst cover,
With a maid's habit, a libidinous lover.

None revolt from the faith, because they must not look upon a woman to least after her, but because they are much more restrained from the perpetration of their lusts. If wanton glances and libidinous thoughts had been permitted by the Gospel, they would have apostatised nevertheless. Bentley.

LIBIDINOUSLY. * adv. [from libidinous.] Lewdly; lustfully.

Simon Magus, and his mystical priests, lived libidinosely; and used all manner of incentives and allurements to venery.

Bp. Linsing, Moravians Compared, p. 104.

LIBIDINOUSNESS. * n. s. [from libidinous.] Lewdness; lustfulness.

They exercise all kinds of lewdness and libidinousness.

Dr. James, Manufact. unto Divinity, (1625), p. 104.
LIBRA. * n. s. [Latin.] The seventh sign in the zodiac; the balance.

From eastern point
Of Libra to the hoary star. Milton, P. L.

LIBRAL. adj. [libralis, Latin.] Of a pound weight. Dict.

LIBRARIAN. * n. s. [librarius, Latin.]

1. One who has the care of a library.
This word is of modern usage; library-keeper being the usual term for the officer of this description, which is used by bishop Barlow, Prideaux, Boyle, Bentley, and others.

It was his inconceivable knowledge of books, that induced the great Duke Cosmo the third to do him the honour of making him his librarian.

Spence, Life of Magliabechi.

2. One who transcribes or copies books.

Charybdis thrice swallows, and thrice refunds, the waves: this must be understood of regular scribes. There are indeed but two sides in a day, but this is the error of the librarian.

Brownie, Notes on the Odyssey.

LIBRARIANSHIP. * n. s. The office of a librarian.

LIBRARY. * n. s. [librairie, Fr.]

1. A large collection of books, publick or private.
Then as they gain his library to view,
And antique registers far to avise,
There chased to the prince's hand to rise
An antique book, bright Brion's monuments.

Spenser, F. Q.
I have given you the library of a painter, and a catalogue of such books as he ought to read.

2. A book-room.
Magliabechi had a local memory of the place where every book stood; as in his master's shop at first, and in several other libraries afterwards.

Spence.

To LIBRATE. v. a. [libro, Lat.] To poise; to balance; to hold in equipoise.

LIBRATION. * n. s. [libratio, Latin; libration, Fr.]

1. The state of being balanced.

This is what may be said of the balance, and the libration of the body. Dryden, DuFrenoy.

In loose libration stretch'd, to trust the void Trembling refuse. Thomson, Spring.

2. [In astronomy.]
Libration is the balancing motion or trepidation in the firmament, whereby the declination of the sun, and the latitude of the stars, change from time to time. Astronomers likewise ascribe to the moon a libratory motion, or motion of trepidation, which they pretend is from east to west, and from north to south, because that, at full moon, they sometimes discover parts of her disk which are not discovered at other times.

These kinds are called, the one a libration in longitude, and the other a libration in latitude. Besides this, there is a third kind, which they call an apparent libration, and which consists in this, that when the moon is at her greatest elongation from the south, her axis being then almost perpendicular to the plane of the ecliptic, the sun must enlighten towards the north pole of the moon some parts which he did not before, and on the contrary, some parts of those which he enlightened towards the opposite pole are obscured; and this produces the same effect which the libration in latitude does. Dict. Trev.

Those planets which move upon their axis, do not all make intire revolutions; for the moon maketh only a kind of liberation, or a reciprocated motion on her own axis.

LABORATORY. adj. [from labor, Latin.] Balancing; playing like a balance.

LICES. the plural of lice.

Red blisters rising on their paps appear,
And flaming carbuncles, and noxious sweat,
And clammy dews that loathsome lice beget;
Till the slow creeping evil eats his way.

LICE'BRANK. n. s. [lice and banc.] A plant.

LICE'NCE. See LICENSE.

LICE'NSABLE. adj. [from To license.]

1. That may be permitted by a legal grant.
I now have another copy to sell, but nobody will buy it because it is not lice'nsable.

Downfall of Temporal Power, (1641), p. 5.

2. Dimissible. Not in use.

Colgrave, and Sherwood.

LICE'NSE. n. s. [license, Latin; lice, Fr.] And our own word is perhaps more frequently written license than license.

1. Exorbitant liberty; contempt of legal and necessary restraint.

Some of the wisest seeing that a popular license is indeed the many-headed tyranny, prevailed with the rest to make Mithridates their chief.

Taunt my faults
With such full license, as with truth and malice
Have power to utter.
They bawl for freedom in their senseless mouths,
And still revile when truth would not stem free;
License they mean, when they cry liberty.

The privilege that ancient poets claim,
Now turn'd to license by too just a name.

Through this be a state of liberty, yet it is not a state of license; though man, in that state, have an uncontrollable liberty to dispose of his person or possessions, yet he has not liberty to destroy himself.

2. A grant of permission.

They sent some to bring them a license from the senate.

Those few abstract names that the schools forged, and put into the mouths of their scholars, could never yet get admittance into common use, or obtain the license of public approbation.

We procured a license of the duke of Parma to enter the theatre and gallery.

3. Liberty; permission.

It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man to die, before that he which is accused have the accusers face to face, and have license to answer for himself.

TO LICE'NSE. v. a. [licencier, Fr.]

1. To permit by a legal grant.

There must be licensing dancers, that no gesture, motion, or deportment, be taught our youth, but what by their allowance shall be thought honest.

The lutes, the violins, the guitars, — must not be suffered to prattle as they do, but must be licensed what they may say.

Wit's titans bray'd the skies,
And the press groan'd with licens'd Vespurgians.

2. To dismiss; to send away. Not in use.

He would play well, and willingly, as some games of greatest attention, which shewed, that when he listed he could license his thoughts.

LICE'NSER. n. s. [from license.] A grantor of permission; commonly a tool of power.

It will ask more than the work of twenty livers to examine all the lutes, the violins, and the guitars, in every house.

It seems probable that these eight verses were supposed by Thomas Norton, Saville's supposed assistant in the play, who was not only an active, and I believe a sensible puritan, but a friend of the publication of books under the commission of the bishop of London.

Warren, Hist. E. P. iii. 370.

LICE'NTIATE. n. s. [licentiatus, low Lat.]

1. A man who uses license. Not in use.

The licentiatus somewhat licentiously, lest they should prejudice poetical liberty, perard themselves for doubting or rejecting a letter, for the same fall aptly.

2. A degree in Spanish universities.

A man might, after that time, use for the degree of a licentiatus or master in this faculty.

3. A term applied to those who receive, in our own country, licences from the college of physicians to practise in the faculty of medicine.

The college of physicians, in July 1687, published an edict, requiring all the fellows, candidates, and licentiatus, to give gratuitous advice to the neighbouring poor.

Johnson, Life of Garth.

TO LICE'NTIATE. v. a. [licentier, Fr.] To permit; to encourage by license.

We may not hazard either the stifling of generous inclinations, or the licentiating of any thing that is coarse.

LICE'NTIATION. n. s. [from licentiate.]

The act of permitting. Not in use.

There is a licentiation or permission of error.

J. Freeman, Sermon, (1643), p. 55.

LICE'NTIOUS. adj. [licencicus, French; licentiosus, Latin.]

1. Unrestrained by law or morality.

Later ages' pride, like corn-fed steed,
And his plenty, and his swells increase,
And to licentious lust, and gain exerce.

The measure of her mean, and natural first need.

How would it touch thee to the quick,
Should'st thou but hear I were licentious?

And that this body, consecrate to thee,
With ruffian lust should be conteminate?

2. Presumptuous; unconfin'd.

The Tyber, whose licentious waves,
Often overflow'd the neighbouring fields,
Now runs a smooth and inoffensive course.

LICE'NTIOUSLY. adv. [from licentious.]

With too much liberty; without just restraint.

The licentiatus, somewhat licentiously, will pardon themselves.

LICE'NTIOUSNESS. n. s. [from licentious.] Boundless liberty; contempt of just restraint.

One error is so fruitful, as it begetteth a thousand children, if the licentiousness thereof be not timely restrained.

This custom has been always looked upon, by the wisest men, as an effect of licentiousness, and not of liberty.

During the greatest licentiousness of the press, the character of the press was insulted.

LICH. adj. [lic, Sax. similis.] Like; resembling; equal. Obsolete.

As one lie two coffins make
Of one semblance, and of one make,
So lich, that no life thilke throwe,
That one may fro that other knowe.

Greene, Con. Am. B. 5.
[He] rather joy'd to be than seem'd rich,
For both to be and seeme to him was labour'd rich.

LICH. n. s. [lice, Sax.] A dead carcase; whence lichwake, the time or act of watching by the dead; lichgate, the gate through which the dead are carried to the grave; Lichfield, the field of the dead, a city in Staffordshire, so named from martyred Christians. Salvo, magna, parens! Lichwaks is still retained in Scotland in the same sense.

LICH'EN. n. s. [lichen, Fr.] Liverwort.

I observed nothing but several curious lichen, and plenty of gale (or Dutch myrtle) performing the borders of the lake.

LICH'OW. n. s. [lich and owl.] A sort of owl, by the vulgar supposed to foretell death.

LIC'IT. adj. [licitus, Lat.] Lawful.

A just and licit thing.

LIC'ITLY. adv. [from licit.] Lawfully.

The question may be licitly discussed.

LIC'ITNESS. n. s. [from licit.] Lawfulness.

TO LICK. v. a. [liccian, Saxon, lecken, Dutch.]

1. To pass over with the tongue.

Esculapius went about with a dog and abogot, both which he used much in his cure; the first for licking all ulcerated wounds, and the goat's milk for the diseases of the stomach and lungs.

A bear's a savage beast;
Welp'd without form, until the dam
Has lick'd it into shape and frame.

He with his tepid rays the rose renews,
And licks the drooping leaves, and dries the dews.

I have seen an antiquary lick an old coin, among other trials, to distinguish the age of it by its taste.

2. To lap; to take in by the tongue.

At once pluck out
The multitudinous tongue; but let them not lick
The sweet which is their poison.

3. To lick up. To devour.

Now shall this company lick up all that are round about us, as the ox licks up the grain.

When luxury has lick'd up all thy self,
Curs'd by thy neighbours, thy trustees, thyself;
Think how posterity will treat thy name.

LICK. n. s. [from the verb.] A wash; what is smenored over. Not in use.

My face, which you behold so flaming red, is done over with licks of ladies.

TO LICK. v. a. [laegga, Sw. Goth. to strike.] To beat. Common, as a colloquial expression, in many parts of England.

LICK. n. s. [from the preceding verb, which Dr. Johnson has not noticed.] A blow; rough usage; a low word.

He turned upon me as round as a chafed bowl, and gave me a lick across the face.

LICKER. n. s. [from lick; Fr. licheur.] One who licks or laps up.

LICK'ERISH. adj. [licceps, a glutton, LICKERIOUS.] Saxon. This seems to be the proper way of spelling the word, which has no affinity with liquor.

Johnson. — An old form of writing it is also licorice, and licorish; as, in Huloet's old dictionary, and by Cornwallis in his Notes on Seneca, 1601. See also LICKERISHNESS. The etymology also may rather be referred to the Su. Goth. licker, or lecker, delicatus, mollis.]

1. Nice in the choice of food.

The licentious palate of the glutton ranges through seas and lands for unseasonal delicacies.

Rp. Hall, St. Paul's Combat.

Voluptuous men sacrifice all substantial satisfaction to a licentious palate. L'Extrange.

2. Eager; greedy to swallow; eager not with hunger but gust.

It is never tongue-tied, where fit commendation, whereof womankind is so licentious, is offered unto it. Sidney.

Strephon, fond boy, delighted, did not know, That it was love that shin'd in shining maid; But licentious, poison'd, fair to her would go. Sidney.

Certain rare manuscripts, sought in the most remote parts by Expenses, the most excellent linguist, had been left to his widow, and were upon sale to the Jesuits, licentious chapmen of all such ware. Watson.

In vain be proffer'd all his goods to save His body, destin'd to that living grave The licentious hand rejects the gift with scorn, And nothing but the man would serve her turn. Dryden.

To some provinces there was no licentious after men's flesh, that they would suck the blood as it run from the dying man. Locke.

3. Nice; delicate; tempting the appetite. This sense I doubt.

Some burst with the plenty and abundance they have, and would sell paradise out of hand for a licentious morsel. Harnor, Tr. of Beza, (1587.) p. 36.

Wouldst thou seek again to trap me here With licentious baits, fit to ensnare a brute? Milton, Comus.

LICKERISHNESS.† } n. s. [from lickerish, LICKERISHNESS.† } and lickerous.] Nice-LICKERISHNESS. } ness of palate; daintiness of taste.

Barret, and Sherwood.

As earnest to devour delicate things, as a porcupine of Licorice; so to refuse things usual and profitable, is madness. Woolton, Christian Manual, (1576.) sign. H. li. b.

LICKERISHLY.* } adv. [from lickerish.] LICKERISHLY.* } Daintily; deliciously.

Gloss. Urry's Chaucer.

LICORICE. n. s. [γλωκκίς; licorice, Italian.] A root of sweet taste.

Liquorice root is long and slender, externally of a dusky reddish brown, but within of a fine yellow, full of juice, and of a taste sweeter than sugar; it grows wild in many parts of France, Italy, Spain and Germany. The inspissated juice of this root is brought to us from Spain, and Holland; from the first of which places it obtained the name of Spanish juice. Hill, Materia Medica.

LICTOR. n. s. [Latin.] A beadle that attends the consuls to apprehend or punish criminals.

Stacy letters
Will catch at us like strumpets.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Proconsuls to their provinces Hasting, or on return, in robes of state, Lictors and rods the ensigns of their power. Milton, P. R.

Democritus could feed his spleen, and shake His sides and shoulders till he felt 'em ache; Though in his country-down no licious words.

Nor rods, nor axe, nor tribune. Dryden, Jun. LID. n. s. [hlit, Saxon; lid, German.]

1. A cover; any thing that shuts down over a vessel; any stoppel that covers the mouth, but not enters it.

Hope, instead of flying off with the rest, stuck no close to the lid of the cup, that it was shut down upon her. Milford.

2. The membrane that, when we sleep or wink, is drawn over the eye.

Do not for ever with thy veiled lids, Seek for thy noble father in the dust. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Our eyes have lids, our ears still open we keep. Devis.

That eye dropp'd sense distinct and clear, As any muse's tongue could speak; When from its lid a poorly tear Ran trickling down her bewitching cheek. Prior.

The rod of Hermes To sleep could mortal eye-lids fix, And drive departed souls to Styx: That rod was just a type of Sill's, Which o'er a British senate's lids Could scatter opium full as well, And drive as many souls to hell. Swift.

LIE. n. s. [lie, French.] Any thing impregnated with some other body; as, soap or salt.

Chamber-lie breeds fleas like a loach. Shakspeare.

All liquid things concocted by heat become yalow; as lye, wort, &c. Prochem on Draining.

LIE. n. s. [lye, Saxon.] 1. A criminal falsehood.

— Thou liest, abhorred tyrant; with my sword I'll prove thee false. Shakespeare, Macb.

A lye is properly an outward signification of something contrary to, or at least beside, the inward sense of the mind; so that when one thing is signified or expressed, and the same thing not meant or intended, that is properly a lye. Smith.

Truth is the object of our understanding, as good is of our will; and the understanding can no more be delighted with a lye, than the will can have an apparent evil. Dryden.

When I hear my neighbour speak that which is not true, and I say to him, This is not true, or this is false, I only convey to him the naked idea of his error; this is the primary idea; but if I say it is a lye, the word lye carries also a secondary idea, for it implies both the falsehood of the speech, and my reproach and censure of the speaker. Watts, Logic.

2. A charge of falsehood: to give the lie, is a formulary phrase.

The lie shall lye us heavy on my sword, That it shall render vengeance and revenge; Till thou the lie giver, and that lie, rest In earth as quiet as thy father's skull. Shakespeare, Rich. II.

It is a contradiction to suppose, that whole nations of men should unanimously give the lie to what, by the most invincible evidence, every one of them knew to be true. Locke.

Men will give their own experience the lie, rather than admit of any thing disagreeing with those tenets. Locke.

3. A fiction. This sense is ludicrous.

The cock and fox, the fool and knave imply; The truth is moral, though the tale a lie. Dryden.

To lye. v. n. [leogan, Sax. liegen, Dutch; lyge, Su. Goth. "consent, reliquis distinct. Celto-Scythicis." Serenius. Ben Jonson, in his English Grammar, observes, under the letter y, that "we usually difference to lye, or feign, from to lie along, by the use of the y;" a distinction, which has very commonly been made, and which, though not here adopted by Dr. Johnson, seems, as Mr. Nares has remarked, an useful one.]

1. To utter criminal falsehood.

I know not where he lodges; and for me to devise a lodging, or say he lies here, or he lies there, were to lie in mine own throat. Shakespeare, Othello.

If a soul lye unto his neighbour in that which was delivered him to keep, he shall restore. Leviticus.

Should I lye against my right? Job, xxiv. 6.

2. To exhibit false representation. Inform us, will the carpenter treat? Or do the prints and paper lie? Swift.

To LIE. v. n. pret. I lay; I have lain or lied. [leagan, Saxon; lygen, Dutch.]

1. To rest horizontally, or with very great inclination against something else.

Lie heavy on him, earth, for he Laid many a heavy load on thee. Epiaphr. on Farnburgh.

3. To be repositied in the grave.

All the kings of the nations lie in glory, every one in his own house, Isa. xlv. 16.

I will lie with my fathers, and thou shalt carry me out of Egypt, and bury me in your burying place. Gen. xlvii. 30.

4. To be in a state of decumbiture.

How many good young princes would say so; their fathers lying so sick as you are at this time is. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

My little daughter lieth at the point of death; I pray thee come and lay thy hands on her, that she may be healed. St. Mark.

5. To pass the time of sleep.

The watchful traveller, That by the moon's mistaken light did rise, Lay down again, and clos'd his weary eyes. Dryden.

Forlorn he must, and persecuted fly; Climb the steep mountain, in the cavern lie. Prior.

6. To be laid up or repositied.

I have seen where coppers is made great variety of them, divers of which I have yet lying by me. Boyle.

7. To remain fixed.

The Spaniards have but one temptation to quarrel with us, the recovering of Jamaica, for that has ever lied at their hearts. Temple.

8. To reside.

If thou dost well, shalt thou not be accepted? and if thou dost not well, sin lieth at the door. Gen. iv. 7.

9. To be placed or situated with respect to something else.

Deverts, where there lye no way. Wisdom.

To those happy climes that lie, Where day never shuts his eye. Milton, Comus.

There lies our way, and that our passage home. Dryden.

Envy lies between beings equal in nature, though unequal in circumstances. Culver of Envy.

The business of a tutor, rightly employed, lies out of the road. Locke on Education.

What lies beyond our positive idea towards infinity, lies in obscurity, and has the undetermined confusion of a negative idea. Locke.

10. To press upon affectively.

Thy wrath lieth hard upon me, and thou hast afflicted me with all thy waves. Psalms.

He that commits a sin shall find The pressing guilt lie heavy on his mind, Though bribes or favour shall assert his cause. Creech.

- Shew the power of religion, in abating that particular anguish which seems to lie so heavy on Lancers. Addition.
11. To be troublesome or tedious.
Suppose kings, besides the entertainment of luxury, should have spent their time, at least what they upon their hands, in chemistry, it cannot be denied but princes may pass their time advantageously that way. Temple.
I would recommend the studies of knowledge to the female world, that they may not be at a loss how to employ those hours that lie upon their hands. Addition. Shakespeare, Towards my Wife.
12. To be judicially imputed.
If he should intend his voyage towards my guidance, I would turn her loose to him; and what he gets more of her than sharp words, let it lie on my head. Shakespeare.
13. To be in any particular state.
If money go before, all ways do lie open. Shakespeare.
The highways lie waste, the wayfarer man caseth. Isaiah.
The seventh year thou shalt let it rest and lie still. Ezekiah.
Do not think that the knowledge of any particular subject cannot be improved, merely because it has lain without improvement. Watts, Improv. of the Mind.
14. To be in a state of concealment.
Many things in them lie concealed to us, which they who were concerned understood at first sight. Locke.
15. To be in prison.
Your imprisonment shall not be long; I will deliver you, or else lie for you. Shakespeare, Rich. III.
16. To be in a bad state.
Why will you lie pining and pinching yourself in such a lonesome, starving course of life? L'Estrange, Feb.
The generality of mankind lie pecking at one another, till one by one they are all torn to pieces. L'Estrange, Feb.
Are the gods to do your drudgery, and you lie bellying with your finger in your mouth? L'Estrange, Feb.
17. To be in a helpless or exposed state.
To see a hated person superior, and to lie under the anguish of a disadvantage, is far enough from diversion. Collier.
It is but a very small comfort, that a plain man, lying under a sharp fit of the stone for a week, receives from this fine sentence. Tillotson, Sermon.
As a man should always be upon his guard against the vice which he is most exposed to, so we should take a more than ordinary care not to lie at the mercy of the weather in our moral conduct. Addison, Freeholder.
The maintenance of the clergy is precarious, and collected from a most miserable race of farmers, at whose mercy every minister lies to be defrauded. Swift.
18. To consist.
The image of it gives me content already; and I trust it will grow to a most prosperous perfection. — It lies much in your holding up. Shakespeare.
He that thinks that diversion may not lie in hard labour, forgets the early rising, and hard riding of huntmen. Locke.
19. To be in the power; to belong to.
Do'st thou cadaverous, as much as in thine lies, to preserve the lives of all men? Dryden, Rules for Devotion.
He shews himself very malicious if he knows I deserve credit, and yet goes about to blast it, as much as in him lies. Stillingfleet on Idolatry.
Mars is the warrior's god, he in it lies on whom he favours to confer the prize. Dryden.
20. To be valid in a court of judicature; as, an action lies against one.

21. To cost; as, it lies me in more money.
22. To LIE at. To importune; to tease.
23. To LIE by. To rest; to remain still.
Every thing that heard him play,
Even the billows of the sea,
Hug his head, and then lay by;
To sweet music is such art,
Killing care and grief of heart,
Fall asleep, or hearing die. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.
24. To LIE down. To rest; to go into a state of repose.
The leopard shall lie down with the kid. Job. xi. 6.
The needy shall lie down in safety. Ist. xiv. 30.
25. To LIE down. To sink into the grave.
His bones are full of the sin of his youth, which shall lie down with him in the dust. Job. xxi. 11.
26. To LIE in. To be in childbed.
As for all other good women that love to do but little work, how handsome it is to lie in and sleep, or to loose themselves in the sun-shine, they that have been but a while in Ireland can well witness. Spenser on Ireland.
You confine yourself most unreasonably. Come; you must go visit the lady that lies in. Shakespeare, Coriol.
She had lain in, and her right breast had been spotted. Watts, Surgery.
When Flaminio design'd to lie privately in;
She chose with such prudence her pains to conceal,
That her nurse, say her midwife, scarce heard her once squeal. Prior.
Hysterical affections are contracted by accidents in lying in. Arbushnot on Diet.
27. To LIE under. To be subject to; to be oppressed by.
A generous person will lie under a great disadvantage. Saunders, Sermon.
This mistake never ought to be imputed to Dryden, but to those who suffered so noble a genius to lie under necessity. Pope.
Europe lies then under a deep lethargy, and was no otherwise to be rescued but by one that would cry mightily. Atterbury.
28. To LIE upon. To become the matter of obligation or duty.
Those are not places merely of favour, the charge of souls lies upon them; the greatest account whereof will be required at their hands. Bacon, Adv. to Filippi.
It should lie upon him to make out his matter, by undirected motion, could at first necessarily fall, without ever erring or misarrying, into such a curious formation of human bodies. Hentley, Sermon.
29. To LIE with. To converse in bed.
Pardon me, Balamio,
For by this ring the lay with me. Shakespeare.
30. It may be observed of this word in general, that it commonly implies something of sluggishness, inaction, or staidness, applied to persons; and some gravity or permanency of condition, applied to things.
- LIEF, adj. [loef, Saxon; written by our old authors, leef, and lefe. See LIEF, and LEVER. Lief, however, follows the form of the Goth. liufs, and the Germ. liep; which signify beloved.] Dear; beloved. Obsolete.
My lieft lord she thus beguiled him,
For he was flesh; all flesh doth frailty breed. Spenser, F. Q.
You, with the rest,
Cautious have laid diags on my head;
And with your best endeavour have stir'd up
My lieft lady to be mine enemy. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

- LIEF, adv. Willingly; now used only in familiar speech.
If I could speak as wisely under an arrest, I would send for certain of my creditors; and yet to say the truth, I had as lof have the foppery of freedom, as the morality of imprisonment. Shakespeare, Mess. for Mess.
- LIEFE, SANT. See LIEUTENANT.
- LIEGE, adj. [liege, French; liege, Italian; ligius, low Lat.].
1. Bound by some feudal tenure; subject: whence liegeman for subject.
2. Sovereign. [This signification seems to have accidentally risen from the former, the lord of liege men, being by mistake called liege lord.]
Did not the whole realm acknowledge Henry for their king and liege lord? Spenser on Ireland.
My lady liege, said he.
What all your ear desires is sovereignty. Dryden.
So much of it as is founded on the law of nature, may be stiled natural religion; that is to say, a devoutness unto God our liege lord, and so to act in all things according to his will. Crowe, Canon, Sacra.
- LIEGE, n. s. Sovereign; superior lord; scarcely in use.
O pardon me, my liege! but for my tears
I had forestall'd this dear and deep reluctance. Shakespeare.
The other part reserv'd I by consent,
For that my sovereignty liege was in my debt. Shakespeare.
The natives, dubious whom
They must obey, in consternation wait
Till rigid conquest will pronounce their liege. Philips.
- LIEGEMAN, n. s. [from liege and man.]
A subject: not in use.
This liegeman can to war more bold,
And when he felt the folly of his lord,
In his own kind, he gave himself unfold. Spenser, F. Q.
Sith then the ancestors of those that now live,
Yielded themselves their subjects and liegemen,
Shall it not try their children to the same subjection? Spenser on Ireland.
Stand, ho! who is there?
— Friends to this ground, and liegemen to the Duke. Shakespeare.
- LIE'GER, n. s. [more proper legier, or ledger.] A resident ambassador.
His passions and his fears
Lie legiers for you in his breast, and there Negotiate your affairs. Dehnam, Sapph.
- LIE'S, the participle of lie.
One of the people might lightly have lien with his wife. Gen. xxvi. 10.
- LIENT, rick, adj. [from lientry.] Pertaining to a lientry.
There are many medicinal preparations of iron, but none equal to the tincture made without acids; especially in obstructions, and to strengthen the tone of the parts; as in lienteric and other like cases. Gerus, Muenster.
- LIENTERY, n. s. [from lien, lave, smooth, and trip, intestine, gut; lienteric, French.] A particular looseness, or diarrhoea, wherein the food passes so suddenly through the stomach and guts, as to be thrown out by stool with little or no alteration. Quincy.
- LIE'N, n. s. [from lie.] One that rests or lies down; or remains concealed.
There were liens in ambush against him behind the city. Jer. viii. 14.

LIEU. n. s. [French.] Place; room: it is only used with in lieu, instead.

God, of his great liberality, had determined, in lieu of man's endeavours, to bestow the same by the rule of that justice which best bestoweth him.

Hooker.

In lieu of such an increase of dominion, it is our business to extend our trade.

Addison, Freetholder.

LIEVE. adv. [See LIEF.] Willingly.

Speak the speech, I pray you, as I pronounced it to you, trippingly on the tongue; but if you mouth it, as many of our players do, I had as here the town crier had spoke my lines.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Action is death to some sort of people, and they would as live hanging as work.

L'Estrange.

LIEUTENANT. n. s. [Lieutenant, French; from lieutenant.]

1. The office of a lieutenant.

If such tricks as these strip you out of your lieutenantcy, it had been wiser you had not kissed your three fingers so oft.

Shakespeare, Othello.

2. The body of lieutenants.

The list of undisciplined masters, is hardly so long as the list of the lieutenantcy of our metropolises.

Fulton on the Clericals.

LIEUTENANT. n. s. [Lieutenant, Fr.]

Often pronounced, and formerly written, lieutenant, "Mr. Secretary used lieutenant Spencer exceeding honourably." Sidney State-Pap. vol. i. p. 207, under the year 1600. Again, ibid. p. 257, the same spelling. And so in other old books.]

1. A deputy; one who acts by vicarious authority.

Exhibiting himself into the hands of Christ vicar or lieutenant.

Martin, Mar. of Priests, (1554.) N. iv. b.

Whether away so fast?

—No farther than the tower,

We'll enter all together,

And in good time here the lieutenant comes.

Shakespeare.

I must put you in mind of the lords lieutenants, and deputy lieutenants, of the counties: their proper use is for ordering the military affairs, in order to oppose an invasion from abroad, or a rebellion or sedition at home.

Bacon.

Killing, as it is considered in itself without all undue circumstances, was never prohibited to the lawful magistrate, who is the viceregent or lieutenant of God, from whom he derives his power of life and death. By Bromfield against Hobbes. Sent by our new lieutenant, who in Rome, And since from me, has heard of your reason: I come to offer peace.

Philips, Brutus.

2. In war, one who holds the next rank to a superior of any denomination; as, a general has his lieutenant generals, a colonel his lieutenant colonel, and a captain simply his lieutenant.

It were meet that such captains only were employed as have formerly served in that country, and been at least lieutenants there.

Spencer on Ireland.

According to military custom the place was good, and the lieutenant of the colonel's company might well pretend to the next vacant captainship.

Watson.

The earl of Essex was made lieutenant general of the army; the most popular man of the kingdom, and the darling of the sword men.

Clarendon.

His lieutenant, engaging against his positive orders, being beaten by Lyander, Alcibiades was again banished.

Snuff.

Canst thou so many gallant soldiers see,

And captains and lieutenants slight for me? Gay.

LIEUTENANTSHIP. n. s. [from lieutenant.]

The rank or office of lieutenant.

Though we should grant him the lieutenantship be precluded to have.

Hornar, Tr. of Bens, (1587.) p. 405.

LIFE. n. s. plural lives. [lif, lyf, Saxon; hpan, to live; lyf, Su. Goth.]

1. Union and co-operation of soul with body; vitality; animation, opposed to an inanimate state.

On thy life no more.
—My life I never held but as a pawn

To wage against thy fate. Shakespeare, L. Lear.

She shows a body rather than a life.
A statue than a breather. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Let the waters living forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life. Gen. i. 20.

The identity of the same man consists in nothing but a participation of the same continued life, by constantly fleeting particles of matter, in succession vitally united to the same organised body.

2. Present state; as distinct from other parts of human existence.

O life, thou nothing's younger brother!
So like, that we may take the one for t'other!

Dreams of a shadow! a reflection made
From the false glories of the gay reflected bow,

To wage against thy fate, than thou!
Thou wank built isthmus, that do'st proudly rise

Up betwixt two eternities:
Yet canst not wave nor wind sustain,

But, broken and cleftwinded, the ocean meets
When I consider life 'tis all a cheat,

Yet fold'd by hope men favour the deceit,
Live on, and think to-morrow will repay;

To-morrow's false than the former day;
Live more; and when it says we shall be lost

With some new joy, t'ant what we possess.
Strange cozenage! none would live past years

again,
Yet all hope pleasure in what yet remain;

Then swartest gas through his veins to inspire
What the first sprightly running could not give:

I'm tir'd of waiting for this chemic gold,
Which fools us young, and beggars us when old.

Howe'er 'tis well that while mankind
Through life's perverse meanders errs,

He can imagin'd pleasures find,
To combat against real cares.

So peaceful shall thou end thy blissful days,
And seal thyself from life by slow decays.

3. Enjoyment, or possession of existence, as opposed to death.

Then swartest gas through his veins to inspire
His greedy flames, and kindle life devouring fire.

Their complot is to have my life:
And, if my death might make his island happy,

I would expend it with all willingness. Shakespeare.

Nor love thy life nor hate; but what thou liv'st
Live well, how long or short permit to heaven.

He entreated me not to take his life, but exact
A sum of money. Brownie on the Odyssey.

4. Blood, the supposed vehicle of life.

His gushing entrails smok'd upon the ground,
And the warm life came issuing through the wound.

5. Conduct; manner of living with respect to virtue or vice.

His faith perhaps in some nice tenets might
Be wrong, his life I'm sure was in the right.

Henry and Edward, brightest sons of fame,
And virtuous Alfred, a more sacred name;

After a life of glorious toils endur'd,
Chok'd their long lives with a sigh.

I'll teach my family to lead good lives.

6. Condition; manner of living with respect to happiness and misery.

Such was the life the frugal Sabines led;
So Remus and his brother god were bred.

7. Continuance of our present state; as, half the life was spent in study.

Some have not any clear ideas all their lives.

Unto'd and fierce the tiger still remains,
And tires his life with biting on his chain.

The administration of this bank is for life, and partly in the hands of the chief citizens.

8. The living form: opposed to copies.

That is the best part of beauty which a picture cannot express, no, nor the first sight of the life.

Let him visit eminent persons of great name abroad, that he may tell how the life agreeth with the face.

He would be a master, must draw by the life as well as copy from originals, and join theory and experience together.

9. Exact resemblance: with to before it.

I believe no character of any person was ever better drawn to the life than this.

Rich carvings, portraiture, and imagery,
Where e'er thy figure to the life express'd

The godhead's power.

He saw in order pointed on the wall
The wars that famous day the world had blown,
All to the life, and e'er'y leader known.

10. General state of man.

Studious they appear
Of arts that polish life; inventors rare!

Unmindful of the life that's past,
Rich carvings, portraiture, and imagery,
Where e'er thy figure to the life express'd

The godhead's power.

He saw in order pointed on the wall
The wars that famous day the world had blown,
All to the life, and e'er'y leader known.

11. Common occurrences; human affairs; the course of things.

This I know, not only by reading of books in my study, but also by experience of life abroad in the world.

Not to know at large of things remote
From use, obscure and subtle; but to know
That which before us lies in daily life,
Is the prime wisdom.

12. Living person.

Why should I play the Roman fool, and die
On my own sword? whilst I see Æars the gaubes
Do better upon them.

13. Narrative of a life past.

Plutarch, that writes his life,
Tells us, that Cato dearly lov'd his wife.

14. Spirit; briskness; vivacity; resolution.

The Helots beat thitherward with a new life of resolution, as if their captain had been a root out of which their courage had sprung.

They have no notion of life and fire in fancy and in words; and any thing that is just in grammar and in measure is as good oratory and poetry to them as the best.

Not with half the life and life,
With which he kin'd Amphyrion's wife.

15. Animal, animated existence; animal being.

Full nature swarms with life.

16. System of animal nature.

Lives through all life.

17. Life is also used of vegetables, and whatever grows and decays.

LIFELOOD. n. s. [life and blood.] The blood necessary to life; the vital blood.

This sickness doth infect
The very lifeblood of our enterprise.

Shakespeare, Ham. IV.
How could'st thou drain the lifeblood of the child?
Shakespeare.

His forehead struck the ground,
Lifeblood and life rush'd mingled through the wound.

They loved with that calm and noble value which dwells in the heart, with a warmth like that of lifeblood.

Money, the lifeblood of the nation,
Corrupts and stagnates in the veins,
Unless a proper circulation,
Its motion and its heat maintains.

LIFELOOD.* adj. Necessary as the blood to life; vital; essential.

To set at naught and trample under foot all the most sacred and lifeblood laws, statutes, and acts of parliament.

LIFEVERLA*TING. An herb. Ainsworth.
LIFEGIVING. adj. [life and giving.] Having the power to give life.

His own heat,
Kindled at first from heaven's life-giving fire.

He set deviling death
To them who lov'd it; nor on the virtues thought
Of that life-giving plant.

LIFEGUARD. n. s. [life and guard.] The guard of a king's person.

Such a noble and useful courage, as will render you a life-guard to your prince, a wall and bulwark to your country, and make your famous artillery ground a sanctuary to your city.

LIFELESS.† adj. [lifeless, Saxon.]

1. Dead; deprived of life.
I who make the triumph of to-day,
May of to-morrow's pomp once part appear,
Ghastly with wounds, and lifeless on the bier.

2. Unanimated; void of life.
Was I to have never parted from thy side?
As good have grown there still a lifeless rib!

Thus began
Outrage from lifeless things.

The power which produces their motions, springs from something without themselves: if this power were suspended, they would become a lifeless, an unactive heap of matter.

And empty words she gave, and sounding strain,
But senseless, lifeless, & idol void and vain.

3. Wanting power, force, or spirit.
Hopeless and helpless death.

But to procrastinate his lifeless end.
Unknowing to command, proud to obey
A lifeless king, a royal shade I lay.

4. Wanting or deprived of physical energy.
The other victor-fame a moment shod,
Then fell, and lifeless left th' extinguish'd world.

LIFELESSLY. adv. [from lifeless.] Without vigour; frigidly; jejunely.

LIFE LIKE. adj. [life and like.] Like a living person.

Minerva, lifeless, on embodied air
Impress'd the form of Iphigenia's hair.

LIFE STRING. n. s. [life and string.] Nerve;
strings imagined to convey life.

These lines are the veins, the arteries,
The undecaying lifelines of those hearts
That still shall pant, and still shall exercise
The motion spirit and nature both impart.

LIFETIME. n. s. [life and time.] Continuance or duration of life.

Jordan talked prose all his life-time, without knowing what it was.

LIFEWARY. adj. [life and weary.] Wretched; tired of living.

Let me have
A dram of poison, such soon-speeding gear
As will dispense itself through all the veins,
That the life-taker may fall dead.

TO LIFT.† v. a. I lifted, or lift; I have lifted, or lift. [lyfta, Swedish; lofter, Danish; levo, Latin, to lift or hold up;
hence a lever, that which lifts up; but perhaps our word may be referred to the Sax. lyft, the air. See also LOFT, and ALLOFT.]

1. To raise from the ground; to heave;
to elevate; to hold on high.

Is it not as this month should tear this hand
For lifting food to it?

Your guests are coming;
Lift up your countenance, as 'twere the day
Of celebration of that nuptial.

Prop'd by the spring, it lifts aloft the head,
But of a sickly beauty soon to shed,
In summer living, and in winter dead.

2. To bear; to support. Not in use.
So down he fell, that th' earth him underneath
Did groan, as feeble so great load to bear.

3. To rob; to plunder. Whence the term shop-lifter. [aliftus, Gothick, a thief. See also also the acuter verb, and the substantive
LIFTER.]

So weary bees in little cells repose,
But if night robbers lift the well-stor'd hive,
An humming through their wazen city grows.

4. To exalt; to elevate mentally.
His heart was lift up in the ways of the Lord.

5. To raise in fortune.
The eye of the Lord lifted up his head from misery.

6. To raise in estimation.
Neither can it be thought, because some lessons are chosen out of the Apocalypse, that we do offer disgrace to the word of God, or lift up the writings of men above it.

7. To exalt in dignity.
See to what a godlike height
The Roman virtues lift up mortal man!

8. To elevate; to swell, as with pride.
Lifted up with pride,
Our successes have been great, and our hearts have been too much lifted up by them, so that we have reason to humble ourselves.

9. Up is sometimes emphatically added to lift.
He lift up his spear against eight hundred,
who were slew at one time.

Arise, lift up the lad, and hold him in thine hand.

TO LIFT.† v. n.
1. To strive to raise by strength.
Pinch cattle of pasture while summer doth last,
And lift at their tails ere a winter be past.

2. To practise theft.
The mind, by being engaged in a task beyond its strength, like the body strained by lifting at a weight too heavy, has often its force broken.

One other peculiar virtue you possess, in lifting, or legier-du-main? B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

LIFT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The manner of lifting.
Is the lift of the feet, when a man goeth up the hill, the weight of the body heareth most upon the knees.

2. The act of lifting.
The goat gives the fox a lift, and out he springs.

3. Effort; struggle. Dead lift is an effort to raise what with the whole force cannot be moved; and figuratively any state of impotence and inability.

Myself and Trulla made a shift
To help him out at a dead lift.

Mr. Doctor had puzzled his brains
In making a ballad, but was at a stand:
And you freely must own, you were at a dead lift.

4. Lift, in Scotland, denotes a load or surcharge of any thing; as also, if one be disguised much with liquor, they say,
He has got a great lift.

5. [In Scottish.] The sky; for in a starry night they say, How clear the lift is!

6. Lifts of a sail are ropes to raise or lower them at pleasure.

LIFTER.† n. s. [from lift.]

1. One that lifts.
Thou, O Lord, art my glory, and the lifter up of mine head.

2. One that lifts with a lever.
3. A thief. See the third sense of the verb active LIFT.

Broker or pandor, cheater or lifter.
Hollett's Leguerr, (1633).

LIFTING.* n. s. [from lift.] The act of lifting; assistance.

I cannot forbear doing that author the justice of my public acknowledgements for the great helps,
and liftings, I had out of his incomparable piece,
while I was penning this treatise.

Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 5.

TO LIG.† v. n. [Goth. ligan, Sax. liggan, liggan, Germ. liggen, Dan. ligge, Dutch, liggen.] To lie. Still used in our northern counties.

What bounds liggen on the floor adown.
Chaucer, An. Tale.

Thou kinst the great care
I have of thy health and thy welfare,
Which many wild beasts liggen in wait
For to entrap in thy tender state.

Swearing, Shep. Cal.
Vowing that never he in bed again
His limbs would rest, no lig in one embomb,
Till that his lady's sight be mote attaine.

LIGAMENT. n. s. [ligamentum, from ligo, Latin; ligament, French.]

1. Ligament is a white and solid body, softer than a cartilage, but harder than a membrane; they have no conspicuous cavities, neither have they any sense, lest they should suffer upon the motion of the joint: their chief use is to fasten the bones, which are articulated together for motion, lest they should be dislocated with exercise.

Be all their ligaments at once unbound,
And their disjointed bones to powder ground.

The incus is one way joined to the malleus, the other end being a process is fixed with a ligament to the stapes.

2. [In popular or poetical language.] Any thing which connects the parts of the body.

Though our ligaments sometimes grow weak, We must not force them till themselves they break. Drummond.

3. Bond; chain; entanglement.

Men sometimes, upon the hour of departure, do speak and reason above themselves; for then the soul, beginning to be freed from the ligaments of the body, reasons like herself, and discourses in a strain above mortality. Addison, Spect.

LIGAMENTAL.† n. s. [from ligament.]

LIGAMENTAL.† Composing a ligament.

The urachus or ligamentum passage is derived from the bottom of the bladder, whereby it discharges the watery and urinary part of its aliment. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The clavicula is inserted into the first bone of the sternum, and bound in by a strong ligamentum membrane. Wicmann.

LIGATION.† n. s. [ligatio, Latin.]

1. The act of binding.

2. The state of being bound.

This ligation of senses proceeds from an inhibition of spirits, the being stopped by which they should come. Burton, Anat. of Med. p. 24.

There is a peculiar religion attends friendship; there is, according to the etymology of the word, a ligation and solemn tie, the rescinding whereof may be truly called a severance. Howell, Lett. ii. 46.

Swift, if perfect and sound, is the ligation of all the senses. Smith on Old Age, p. 101.

The slumber of the body seems to be but the waking of the soul: it is the ligation of sense, but the liberty of reason. Addison.

LIGATURE. n. s. [ligature, French; ligatura, Latin.]

1. Any thing tied round another; bandage.

He deludeth us also by philters, ligatures, charms, and many superstitious ways in the cure of diseases. Brown.

If you slit the artery, and thrust into it a pipe, and cut a strand ligature upon that part of the artery; notwithstanding the blood hath free passage through the pipe, yet will not the artery beat below the ligature; but do but take out the ligatures, it will beat immediately. Ray on Creation.

The many ligatures of our English dress check the circulation of the blood. Speiden.

I found my arms and legs very strongly fettered on each side to the ground; I likewise felt several slender ligatures across my body, from my arm-pits to my thighs. Swift, Gull. Trav.

2. The act of binding.

The fatal noose performed its office, and with most strict ligature squeezed the blood into his face. Arbuthnot, J. Bull.

Any stoppage of the circulation will produce a dropy, as by strong ligature or constriction. Arbuthnot on Diet.

3. The state of being bound. Not very proper.

Sand and gravel grounds easily admit of heat and moisture, for which they are not much the better, because they let it pass too soon, and contract no ligature. Morison, Husbandry.

LIGHT.† n. s. [Iscor. Sax. from leohtan, to light, viz. the third person singular, Iscor. Mr. H. Tooker. But it is the Goth. liuhata, or liuhata, whence also the Germ. licht, Dutch, licht, and the Sax. liht, Iscor. Serenius notices the Icel. light, liht; and deduces it from hlaa, to shine.]

1. That material medium of sight; that body by which we see; luminous matter.

Light is propagated from luminous bodies in time, and spends about seven or eight minutes of an hour in passing from the sun to the earth. Newton, Opticks.

2. State of the elements, in which things become visible; opposed to darkness.

God called the light day; and the darkness he called night. Genesis.

So askis thou driv'st away

Light and darkness, night and day. Curran.

3. Power of perceiving external objects by the eye; opposed to blindness.

My strength faileth me; as for the light of mine eyes, it also is gone from me. Psalms.

If it be true

That light is in the soul,

She all in every part; why was the sight

To such a tender ball as the eye contain'd,

So obvious and so near to be quell'd?

And not, as feeling, through all parts diffus'd;

That she might look at will through every pore. Milton, S. A.

4. Day.

The murderer rising with the light killeth the prey. Job.

Ere the third dawning light

Return, the stars of morn shall see him rise

Out of his grave, fresh as the dawning light. Milton, P. L.

5. Life.

Infants that never saw light.

Swift roll the years, and rise the expected morn,

O spring to light, auspicious babe be born! Pope.

6. Artificial illumination.

Seven lamps shall give light. Numbers.

7. Illumination of mind; instruction; knowledge.

Of those things which are for direction of all the parts of our life needful, and not impossible to be discerned by the light of nature itself, are there not many which few men's natural capacity hath been able to find out? Hooker.

Light may be taken from the experiment of the horse-tooth ring, how that those things which assuage the strife of the spirits, do help diseases contrary to the intention desired. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

I will place within them as a guide

My unspite conscience, when if they will hear

Light after light well us'd they shall attain,

And to the end perishing safe arrive. Milton, P. L.

I opened Ariosto in Italian, and the very first two lines gave me light to all I could desire. Dryden.

If internal light, or any proposition which we take for inspired, be conformable to the principles of reason, or to the word of God, which is attested revelation, reason warrants it. Locke.

The ordinary words of language, and our common use of them, would have given us light into the nature of our ideas, if considered with attention. Locke.

The books of Vueso concerning navigation are lost, which no doubt would have given us great light in those matters. Arbuthnot on China.

8. The part of a picture which is drawn with bright colours, or in which the light is supposed to fall.

Never admit two equal lights in the same picture; but the greater light must strike forcibly on those places of the picture where the principal figures are; diminishing as it comes nearer the bottom. Dryden, Dryden.

9. Reach of knowledge; mental view.

Light, and understanding, and wisdom, like the wisdom of the gods, was found in him. Dana, v. 11.

We saw as it were thick clouds, which put us in some hope of land, knowing how that part of the South Sea was utterly unknown, and might have misled or confounded that hitherto were not come to light. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

They have brought in light not a few profitable experiments. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

10. Point of view; situation; direction in which the light falls.

Frequent considerations of a thing wears off the strangeness of it; and shews it in its several lights, and various ways of appearance, to the view of the mind. South.

It is impossible for a man of the greatest parts to consider any thing in its whole extent, and in all its variety of lights. Speiden.

An author who has not learned the art of ranging his thoughts, and setting them in proper lights, will lose himself in confusion. Speiden.

11. Publick view; publick notice.

Why am I ask'd what next shall see the light? Heavens! was I born for nothing but to write? Pope.

12. The publick.

Evanes epistles bringing vice to light, Such as a king might read, a bishop write. Pope.

13. Explanation.

I have endeavour'd throughout this discourse, that every former part might give strength unto all that follow, and every latter bring some light unto all before. Hooker.

We should compare places of Scripture treating of the same point: thus one part of the sacred text could not fail to give light unto another. Locke, Ess. on St. Paul's Epistles.

14. Any thing that gives light; a pharos; a taper; any luminous body.

That light we see is burning in my hall; How far that little candle throws his beams, So shines a good deed in a naughty world. Shakespeare.

Then be called for a light, and sprang in, and fell down before Paul. Acts, xli. 29.

I have set thee to be a light of the Gentiles, for salvation unto the ends of the earth. Acts, xlii. 47.

Let them be for signs,

For seasons, and for days, and circling years;

And let them be for lights, as I ordain

Their office in the firmament of heaven,

To give light to the earth. Milton, P. L.

I put as great difference between our new lights and ancient truths, as between the sun and a meteor. Glauville.

Several lights will not be seen,

If there be nothing else between;

Men doubt because they stand so thick 't' the sky,

If show be stars that point the galaxy. Cowley.

I will make some efforts at their safety, by fixing some marks like lights upon a coast, by which their ships may avoid all known rocks. Temple.

He still must mourn

The sun, and moon, and every starry light,

Eclipse'd to him, and lost in everlasting night. Prior.

Light.† adj. [liht, Saxon.]

Not tending to the centre with great force; not heavy.

Hot and cold were in one body first,

And soft with hard, and light with heavy mixt. Dryden.

These weights did not exert their natural gravity till they were laid in the golden balance, inasmuch that I could not guess which was light or heavy whilst I held them in my hand. Addison, Spect.

2. Not burdensome; easy to be worn, or carried, or lifted; not onerous.

Horse, oxen, plough, tumbrel, cart, waggon, and wain,

The lighter and stronger the greater thy gains. Taucher.

It will be light, that you may bear it
Under a cloak that is of any length. Shakespeare.
A king that would not feel his crown too heavy, must wear it every day; but if he think it too light, he knoweth not of what metal it is made.
Bacon, Ess.

3. Not afflictive; easy to be endured.

Every light and common thing incident to any part of man's life. Hooker.
Light sufferings give us leisure to complain,
We groan, but cannot speak, in greater pain.
Dryden.

4. Easy to be performed; not difficult.

What is lighter to say to this yk man in palesey, seems to be forgiven to thee; or to say, rise, take thy bed and walk? Widdif, St. Mark, ii.
Well pleas'd were all his friends, the task was
light,
The father, mother, daughter, they invite.
Dryden.

5. Easy to be acted on by any power.

Apples of a ripe flavour, fresh and fair,
Mellow'd by winter from their cruder juices,
Light of digestion now, and fit for use.
Dryden, Jun.

6. Not heavily armed.

Paulus Bactrianus, with a company of light horsemen, lay close in ambush, in a convenient place for that purpose. Knelles.

7. Active; nimble.

He so light was at leguendains,
That what he touch'd came not to light again.
Spenser.
Anabel was as light of foot as a wild roe.
S. Sam. ii. 16.

There Stamford came, for his honour was lame
Of the gout three months together;
But it prov'd, when they fought, but a running gout,
For heels were lighter than ever. Densham.
Yecilia, a blooming band,
Light bounding from the earth at once they rise,
Their feet half viewless quiver in the skies.
Pope, Odyssey.

8. Unencumbered; unembarrassed; clear of impediments.

Unmarried men are best masters, but not best subjects; for they are light to run away. Bacon.

9. Slight; not great.

A light error in the manner of making the following trials was enough to render some of them unsuccessful. Dryde.

10. Not dense; not gross.

In the wilderness there is no bread, nor water,
and our soul loatheth this light bread. Namk. xii. 5.

Light flames are merry, greater flames are sad,
Both are the reasonable soul run mad. Dryden.

11. Easy to admit any influence; unsteady; unsettled; loose.

False of heart, light of ear, bloody of hand.
Shakespeare.
These light vain persons still are drunk and mad
With surfeits, and pleasures of their youth.
Davies.

They are light of belief, great listeners after news. Hemell.

There is no greater argument of a light and inconsiderate person, than profusely to scoff at religion. Tillotson.

12. Gay; airy; wanting dignity or soli- dity; trifling.

Seneca cannot be too heavy, nor Plautus too
light. Forgius.
If scilicet light I mix with truth divine,
And fill these lines with other praise than thine.
Fulford.

13. Not chaste; not regular in conduct.

Let me not be light,
For a light wife doth make a heavy husband. Shakespeare.

I have spent some evenings among the men of wit of that profession (the clergy) with an inexpressible delight. Their habitual care of their character gives such a chastisement to their fancy, that all which they utter in company is as much above what you meet with in other conversation, as the charms of a modest are superior to those of a light woman. Tatler, No. 570.

14. [From light, n. s.] Bright; clear.

As soon as the morning was light, the men were sent away. Gen. xlv. 3.
The horses ran up and down with their tails and mians on a light fire. Knelles.

15. Not dark; tending to whiteness.

In painting the light and a white colour are but one and the same thing; no colour more resembles the air than white, and by consequence no colour which is lighter. Dryden.
Two cylindric bodies with annular sulci, found with sharks' teeth, and other shells, in a light colloured clay. Woodward.

LIGHT, adv. [from lightly, by colloquial cor- ruption.] Lightly; cheaply.

Shall we set light by that custom of reading, from whence so precious a benefit hath grown?
Hooker.

To Light. † v. a. [from light, n. s.] pret.
and part. lighted, light, and lit. "This verb in the past time and participle is pronounced short, light or lit; but the regular form is preferable, and prevails most in writing." Lowth, Eng. Gram.
See Lit.

1. To kindle; to enflame; to set on fire; to make flame.

Swinging coals about in the wire, thoroughly lighted them. Dryde.
This truth shines so clear, that to go about to prove it were to light a candle to seek the sun.
Glennville.

The same candle that refreches when it is first light, smells and offends when it is going out.
South, Sermon. vii. 596.

The maids, who waited her commands,
Ran in with lighted tapers in their hands. Dryde.
Be witness, gods, and strike Jove's dead,
If an immodest thought or love desire, Infam'd my breast since first our loves were lighted. Dryden.

Absence might cure it, or a second mistress
Light up another flame, and put out this.
Addison, Cato.

2. To give light to; to guide by light.

A beam that falls,
Fresh from the pure glance of thine eye,
Lighting to eternity. Cromaker.
Ah! hopeless, lighting flames! like those that burn
To light the dead, and warm the unfruitful air.
Pope.

3. To illuminate; to fill with light.

The sun was set, and vesper to supply
His absent beams, had lighted up the sky. Dryde.

4. Up is emphatically joined to light.

No sun was lighted up the world to view. Dryden, Ovid.

5. [From the adjective.] To lighten; to ease of a burthen.

Land some of our passengers
And light this weary vessel of her load. Shakespeare, P. Q.

To Light. v. n. pret. lighted, or light, or lit. [light, chance, Dutch.]

1. To happen to find; to fall upon by chance: it has on before the thing found.

No more settled in light than disposed to justice, if either they had valued on a better friend, or could have learned to make friendship a child,
and not the father of virtue. Sidney.

The prince, by chance, did on a lady light.
That was right fair and fresh as morning rose. Spenser.

Happily, your eye shall light upon some toy
You have desire to purchase. Shakespeare.

As in the tides of people once up, there want not stirring wiles to make them more rough; so this people did light upon two ringleaders. Spenser.

Of late years, the royal oak did light upon count Rhodophilus. Howell, Vex. For.

The way of producing such a change on colours may be easily enough lighted on, by those conversant in the solutions of mercury. Boyle on Colours.

He sought by arguments to sooth her pain;
Nor those avail'd: at length he lights on one,
Before two moons their urbs with light adorns,
If heaven allow me life, I will return. Mind.

Truth light upon this way, is of no more avail to us than error; for what is so taken up by us, may be false as well as true; and he has not done his duty, who has thus stunted upon truth in his way to perdition. Locke.

Whoever first lit on a parcel of that substance we call gold, could not rationally take the bulk and figure to depend on its real essence. Locke.

As wily reward walk'd the streets at night,
On a tragedian's mask he couch'd; so light,
Turning it with a dea, he mutter'd with disdain,
How vast a head is here without a brain! Addison.

A weaker man may sometimes light on notions which have escaped a wiser. Watts the Mend.

2. To fall in any particular direction; with on.

The wounded steed curves: and, rain'd upright,
Lights on his feet before; his hoofs behind
Spring up in air aloft, and lash the wind. Dryden, Æn.

3. To fall; to strike on; with on.

He at his foe with furious rigour smites,
That strongest oak might smite to overthrow;
The stroke upon his shield so heavy lights,
That to the ground it doubteth him fall low. Spenser.

At an uncertain lot none can find themselves
griev'd on whomsoever it lights. Howell.
They shall hang on no more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any beast. Rev. vii. 16.

On me, me only, as the source and spring
Of all corruption, all the blame lights due. Milton, P. I.

A curse lights upon him presently after: his great arm is utterly ruined, he himself slain in it, and his head and right hand cut off, and hang up before Jerusalem. South.

4. [alighcan, Sax.] To descend from a horse or carriage.

When Naman saw him running after him, he lighted down from the chariot to meet him. 2 Kings, v. 21.

I saw 'em salute on horseback,
Beheld them when they lighted, how they clung
In their embracement. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

Behewah lifted up her eye, and when she saw Isaac, she lighted off the camel. Gen. xxiv. 64.

The god laid down his fowls rays,
Then lighted from his glittering coach. Swift.

5. To settle; to rest; to stoop from flight.

I piec'd a quire of such enticing birds,
That she will light to listen to their lays. Shakespeare.

Then as a tree which among weeds doth fall,
Which seem sweet flowers, with lustre fresh and
gay,

She lights on that, and this, and tasteth all.
But pleas'd with none, doth rise and soar away.

Davies.

Plant trees and shrubs near borne, for bees to pitch on at their swarming, that they may not be in danger of being lost for want of a lighting place.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

LIGHT-A'ARMED.* adj. [light and armed].
Not heavily armed.

They around the flag
Of each his faction, in their several clans,
Light-arm'd or heavy, sharp, smooth, swift, or slow,
Swarm populous.

Milton, P. L.

LIGHT-BEARER.* n. s. [light and bearer].
A torch-bearer.

The masquers were twelve nymphs, &c. attended by so many of the Ocean's, which were their light-bearers.

B. Jonson, Masquer at Court.

LIGHT-BRAIN.* n. s. [light and brain]. A trifling, empty-headed person.

Being, as some were, light-brains, runnagates,
unskilfuls, and riotours.

Martin, Mass. of Priests, (1554,) L. l. iii.

To LIGHTEN v. v. [lilian, Saxon; like lilic, it lightens.].

1. To flash, with thunder.

This dreadful night,

That thunders, lightens, opens graves, and roars,
As doth the lion.

Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

Although I joy in thee,
I have no joy of this Ocean to-night;
It is too rash, too unadvised, too sudden,
Too like the lightning, which doth cease to be Ere one can say it lightens.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

The lightning that lightens out of the one part under heaven, sheweth unto the other part.

St. Luke, xvi. 24.

2. To shine like lightning.

3. Figuratively, to dart out words with vehemence; as to thunder is to emit them with noise and terror. Of this usage of lighten Dr. Johnson takes no notice. ἡτταπαιεν, ἡτταπαιεν
ἡτταπαιεν ἡτταπαιεν

Now then, my lords, upon these frail and weak foundations they come to build the sentences of their prescription; and here they lay out all their tragic eloquence; they thunder, they lighten, they storm and rage!

Apul. or Df. of the P. of Orange, (1581,) sign. N. 4. b.

4. To fall, to light, [from light].

O Lord, let thy storey light upon us, as we do put our trust in thee.

Common Prayer.

To LIGHTEN v. v. [lilian, Saxon].

1. To illuminate; to enlighten.

Upon his bloody finger he doth wear
A precious ring, that lightens all the hole.

Shaks.

Thou art my lamp, O Lord: and the Lord will lighten my darkness.

2 Sam. xxi. 29.

Lighten our darkness, we beseech thee, O Lord.

Common Prayer.

O light, which mak'st the light which makes the
day,

Which sett'st the eye without, and mind within;
Lighten my spirit with an clear heavenly ray,
Which now to view itself doth first begin.

Davies.

A key of fire ran all along the shore,
And lighten'd all the river with a blaze.

Dryden.

Nature from the storm
Shines out afresh; and through the lighten'd air
A higher lustre, and a clearer

Thomson, Summer.

Diffusive tremble.

2. To dart like lightning.

Yet looks he like a king: behold his eye,
As bright as is the eagle's, lightens forth Controlling majesty.

Shakespeare, Rich. II.

3. To exonerate; to unload. [from light,
adj.]

The mariners were afraid, and cast forth the wares that were in the ship into the sea, to lighten it of them.

Jon. i. 7.

4. To make less heavy.

Long since with woe
Nearer acquainted, now I feel, by proof,
That fellowship in pain divides not smart,
None lightens aught each man's peculiar load.

Milton, P. R.

Strive

In offices of love how we may lighten
Each other's burden.

Milton, P. L.

5. To exhilarate; to cheer.

A trusty villain, very oft,
When I am dull with care and melancholy,
Lightens my humour with his merry jest. Shaks.
The audience are grown weary of continued melancholy scenes; and yet tragical shall succeed in this age, if they are not lightened with a course of mirth.

Dryden.

LIGHTER.* n. s. [from light, to make light. Dr. Johnson. — It is probably from the Saxon, lita, a vessel, a ship;
whence lithman, a shipman; Lithmen of Lubeck, Chron. Saxon; shipmen of London. Dr. Johnson defines the word merely as "a heavy boat into which ships are lightened or unloaded."]

1. A large open vessel, usually managed with oars; a kind of barge: common on the river Thames, and employed to convey goods to or from a ship; and usually to carry ballast.

They have cockboats for passengers, and lighters for burthen. Cressy, Bore of Cornwall.
He climb'd a stranded lighter's height,
Shot to the black abyss, and plung'd downright.

Pope.

2. [from light.] One who communicates light; as, a lamp-lighter.

This sweet view from half past five to six,
Our long wax candles, with short cotton wicks,
Touch'd by the lamp-lighter's Promethean art,
Start into light, and make the lighter start!

Rejected Address.

LIGHTERMAN.* n. s. [lighter and man].
One who manages a lighter.

Where much shipping is employed, whatever becomes of the merchant, multitudes of people will be gainers; as shipwrights, butchers, carmen, and lightermen.

Child.

LIGHTLY*GERED.* adj. [light and finger].
Nimble at conveyance; thievish.

LIGHTFOOT.* adj. [light and foot]. Nimble in running or dancing; active.

Him so far had born his lightfoot steed,
Pricked with wrath and fiery fierce disdain,
That him to follow was but fruitless pain. Spenser.
And all the troop of lightfoot Naiades
Flock all about to see her lovely face. Spenser.

Why, you think I can run like light-foot Ralph.

B. Jonson, Staple of News.

LIGHTFOOT.* n. s. Venison. A cant word.

LIGHTFOOTED.* adj. [from lightfoot].

Nimble in running.

Wood-nymphs mixt with her lightfoot Fauns.

Dryden, Fodgah. S. 11.

To say nothing how excellent he is at the swimming any water, and how he can tread the very air, he is so high-mettled and light-footed!

More, Ant. against Idiots, Pref.

LIGHTHEAD.* adj. [light and head].

1. Unsteady; loose; thoughtless; weak.

The English Liturgy, how piously and wisely soever framed, had found great opposition; the ceremonies had wrought only upon light-headed, weak men, yet learned men excepted against some particulars.

Clarendon.

2. Delirious; disordered in the mind by disease.

When Belvidera talks of "lutes, laurels, sea of milk, and ships of amber," she is not mad, but light-headed.

Walpole.

LIGHTHEADEDNESS.* n. s. Deliriousness; disorder of the mind.

LIGHTHEARTED.* adj. [light and heart].

Gay; merry; airy; cheerful.

LIGHTHOUSE.* n. s. [light and house]. An high building, at the top of which lights are hung to guide ships at sea.

He charged himself with the rigour of such vessels as carried corn in winter; and built a pharos or lighthouse.

Build two poles to the meridian, with immense
light-houses on the top of them. Arbutnot and Pope.

LIGHTLEGGED.* adj. [light and leg]. Nimble;
swift.

Lightlegged Pax has got the middle space.

Sidney.

LIGHTLEAS.* adj. [from light]. Wanting light; dark.

The lightless fire,
Which, in pale embers hid, lurks to aspire.

Shakespeare, Rape of Lucrece.

LIGHTLY.* adj. [from light].

1. Without weight.

This grave parakes the fleshy birth,
Which o'er lightly, gentle caries. B. Jonson.

2. Without deep impression.

The soft ideas of the cheerful note,
Lightly mix'd, were easily forgot.

Prior.

3. Easily; readily; without difficulty; of course; commonly.

At many seasons in the year, lightly every shyrde dye.

By. Fisher, Ser. 1.

If they write or speak publicly but few words,
one of them is lightly about the dangerous estate of the church of England in respect of abused revenues.

Hoad.

Believe't not lightly that your son
Will not exceed the common, or be caught
With cantelous balls and practices.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

Short summers lightly have a forward spring.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

4. Without reason.

Flatter not the rich; neither do thou willingly or lightly appear before great personages.

By. Taylor, Guide.

Let every man that hath a calling be diligent in pursuance of its employment, so as not lightly, or without reasonable occasion, to neglect it.

By. Taylor, Holy Living.

5. Without dejection; cheerfully.

With such solace the travel and weariness of pilgrims in lightly and merrily borne out.

Fair, Acts and Mon. of W. Thorpe.

But that welcome
Which comes to punish us, and we punish it,
Seeming to bear it lightly.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

6. Not chastely.

If I were lightly disposed, I could still perhaps have offers, that some, who hold their heads higher, would be glad to accept.

Scott, Story of an injured Lady.

7. Nimble; with agility; not heavily or tardily.

I belid the mountains, and lo, they trembled;
and all the hills moved lightly.

Methought I stood on a wide river's bank;
When on a sudden Torimond lightly d'
Gave me his hand, and led me lightly o'er;

Leaping and bounding on the billows' heads,
Till safely we had reach'd the farther shore.

Dryden.

8. Gaily; airily; with levity; without heed or care.

Matrimony — is not by any to be taken in hand unadvisedly, lightly, or wantonly. Common Prayer.

- LIGHTMIND'ED. adj. [light and mind.] Unsettled; unsteady.

He that is hasty to give credit is light-minded. Ecc. xii. 4.

- LIGHTNESS. n. s. [from light.]

1. Want of weight; absence of weight: the contrary to heaviness.

Some are for masts of ships, as fir and pine, because of their length, straightness, and lightness. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Suppose many degrees of lightness and lightness in particles, so as many might float in the air a good while before they fell. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

2. Inconstancy; unsteadiness.

For, unto knight there is no greater shame, Than lightness and inconstancy in love.

Symon, F. Q.

Of two things they must chase one; namely, whether they would, to their endless disgrace, with ridiculous lightness, dismiss him, whose restitution they had to no inopportune manner desired, or else condescending unto that demand. Hooker.

As I blow this feather from my face,
Obeying with my wind when I do blow,
And yielding to another when it blows,
Commanded always by the greatest gale;
Such is the lightness of you common men. Shaks.

3. Unchastity; want of conduct in women.

It is the dishonour of any estate, or of the opinion of my lightness, that emboldened such base fancies towards me? Sidney.

That modesty may more betray our sense,
Than women's lightness! Shaks. Measure for Measure.

4. Agility; nimbleness.

- LIGHTNING. n. s. [from lighten, lightning, lightning.]

1. The flash that attends thunder.

Lightning is a great flame, very bright, extending every way to a great distance, suddenly darting upwards, and there ending, so that it is only momentaneous. Machenbrock.

Sense thinks the lightning born before the thunder;

What tells us then they both together are? Dantes.

Salmon, suffering cruel pains, I found
For emulating Jove; the rattling sound
Of mimic thunder, and the glittering blaze
Of pointed lightnings, and their forked rays.

Dryden, Æn.

No warning of the approach of flame,
Swiftly, like sudden death, it came;
Like travellers by lightning kill'd,
I burnt the moment I beheld. Graville.

2. Mitigation; abatement; [from to lighten, to make less heavy.]

How oft, when men are at the point of death,
Have they been merry! which their keepers call'd
A lightning before death. Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

We were once in hopes of his recovery, upon a kind message from the widow; but this only proved a lightning before death. Addison, Spect.

- LIGHTS. n. s. [supposed to be called so from their lightness in proportion to their bulk.] The lungs; the organs of breathing; we say, lights of other animals, and lungs of men.

The complaint was chiefly from the lights, a part as of no quick sense, so no acut for any sharp discourse. Hagyard.

- L'OUTSOME. adj. [from light.]

1. Luminous; not dark; not obscure; not opaque.

Neither the sun, nor any thing sensible is that light itself, which is the cause that things are light-some, though it make itself, and all things else, visible; but a body most enlightened by whom the neighbouring region, which the Greeks call æther, the place of the supposed element of fire, is affected and qualified. Raleigh.

White walls make rooms more lightsome than black. Bacon.

Equal posture, and quick spirits, are required to make colours lightsome. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The sun
His course exalted through the Ram had run,
Through Taurus and the lightsome realms of love. Dryden.

2. Gay; airy; having the power to exhilarate.

It suiteth so fitly with that lightsome affection of joy wherein God delighteth when his saints praise him. Hooker.

The lightsome passion of joy was not that which now often usurps the name; that trivial, variable, superficial thing, that only gilds the apprehension, and plays upon the surface of the soul. South.

- L'OUTSOMENESS. n. s. [from lightsome.]

1. Luminousness; not opacity; not obscurity; not darknessness.

It is to the atmosphere that the variety of colours, which are painted on the skies, the lightsomeness of our air, and the twilight, are owing. Chrys, Philo. Prin.

2. Cheerfulness; merriment; levity.

- LIGNA'LOES. n. s. [lignum aloes, Latin.] Aloes wood.

The vallies spread forth as gardens by the river's side, as the trees of lign-aloes which the Lord hath planted, and as cedar trees beside the water. Numb. xiv. 6.

Numb. xiv. 6.

- L'IGNEOUS. adj. [ligneus, Latin; ligneus, French.] Made of wood; wooden; resembling wood.

It should be tried with aloes of vines, and roots of red roses; for it may be they, being of a more ligneous nature, will incorporate with the tree itself. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Ten thousand seeds of the plant harts-tongue, hardly make the bulk of a pepper-corn; now the covers, and the true body of each seed, the parenchymous and ligneous part of both, and the fibres of those parts, multiplied one by another, afford a hundred thousand millions of formed seeds. Grey.

- L'IGNOUS. adj. [lignous, Latin.] Of a woody substance.

By trees then is meant a ligneous woody plant, &c. Erasmus, b. i. ch. 2. § 5.

- LIGNUMVITÆ. n. s. [Latin.] Guaiacum; a very hard wood.

- L'ICURE. n. s. A precious stone.

The third row a ligure, an agate, and an amethyst. Erasmus, xviii. 19.

- LIKE. A frequent termination of adjectives in our language, from the Saxon form of lic; as zoëlic, mæmëlic, heopenlic, eomëhlic, i. e. godlike, maidenlike, heavenlike, earthlike; softened into the termination of ly, and denoting resemblance, viz. godly, maidenly, heavenly, earthy, and the like.

- LIKE'LY. adj. [lic, Saxon; lik, Dutch; lik, Su. Goth.]

1. Resembling; having resemblance.

Whom art thou like in thy greatness? Ezek. xxi. 2.

His son, or one of his illustrious names,
How like the former, and almost the same!

Dryden, Æn.

As the earth was designed for the being of men, why might not all other planets be created for the like use, such for their own inhabitants? Bentley.

This plan, as laid down by him, looks like an universal art than a distinct logic. Baker on Learning.

2. Equal; of the same quantity.

More clerghmen were impoverished by the late war, than ever in the like space before. Spry.

3. [For likely.] Probable; credible.

The trials were made, and it is like that the experiment would have been effectual. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

4. Likely; in a state that gives probable expectations. This, I think, an improper, though frequent, use.

If the duke continues these favours towards you, you are like to be much advanced. Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

He is like to die for hunger, for there is no more bread. Jer. xxxviii. 9.

The yearly value thereof is almost increased double of that it was within three years, and is like daily to rise higher till it amount to the price of our land in England. Ducies.

Hoyton resolved to visit Waller's quarters, that he might judge whether he were like to pursue his purpose. Clarendon.

Many were not easy to be governed, nor like to conform themselves to strict rules. Clarendon.

If his rules of reason be not better suited to the mind than his rules of law, he is fitted to our bodies, he is not like to be much followed. Baker on Learning.

- LIKE. n. s. [This substantive is seldom more than the adjective used elliptically; the like, for the like thing or like person.]

1. Some person or thing resembling another.

He was a man, take him for all in all,
I shall not look upon his like again. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Every like is not the same, O Caesar. Shakespeare.

Though there have been greater fleets for number, yet for the bulk of the ships never the like. Bacon, War with Spain.

Albeit an eagle did bear away a lamb in her talons, yet a raven endeavouring to do the like was held entangled. Hagyard.

One offers, and in offering makes a stay;
Another forward sets, and doth no more;
A third the like. Daniel, Civ. War.

By conversation with his like to help, Or solve his defects. Milton, P. L.

Two fires may be mistaken. L'Estrange.

She'd study to reform the men,
Or add some grains of folly more,
To women than she had before;
This might their mutual fave strike,
Since every being loves his like. Smyth.

2. Used with had; near approach; a state like to another state. A sense common, but not just: perhaps had is a corruption for was.

Report being carried secretly from one to another in my ship, had like to have been my utter overthrow. Raleigh.

- LIKE. adv.

1. In the same manner; in the same manner as it is not always easy to determine whether it be adverb or adjective.

The joyous nymphs, and lightfoot fairies,
Which thither came to hear their music sweet,
Now hearing them so heavily lament,
Like heavily lamenting from them went. Spenser.

Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him. Psalm, ciii. 13.
 Are we proud and passionate, malicious and revengeful? Is this to be likened with Christ, who was meek and lowly? Tullian.
 What will be my confusion, when he sees me Neglected, and forsaken like himself? Philips.
 They roar'd like lions caught in tails, and rag'd: The man knew what they were, who heretofore Had seen the like lie murder'd on the shore. Walker.

2. In such a manner as befits.
 Be strong, and quit yourselves like men. I Sam. iv. 9.
 3. Likely; probably. A popular use not analogical.
 I like the work well, ere it be demanded,
 As like enough it will, I'd have it copied. Shakespeare.

To LIKE.† v. a. [from like, Saxon; liken, Dutch; lika, Sw. Goth.]

1. To chuse with some degree of preference.

As nothing can be so reasonably spoken as to content all men, so this speech was not of them all liked. Kneller.
 He gave such an account as made it appear that he liked the design. Clarendon.
 We like our present circumstances well, and dream of no change. Alderbury.

2. To approve; to view with approbation, not fondness.

Though they did not like the evil he did, yet they liked him that did the evil. Sidney.
 He grew content to mark their speeches, then to marvel at such wit in shepherds, after to like their company. Sidney.
 He proceeded from looking to liking, and from liking to loving. Sidney.

For several virtues
 I have lov'd several women; never any
 With so full soul. Shakespeare, Tempest.
 I took'd upon her with a soldier's eye;
 That liked, but had a rougher task in hand
 Than to drive liking to the name of love. Shakespeare.

Scarcely any man passes to a liking of sin in others, but by first perceiving it himself. South.
 Bounties can like, but not distinguish too.
 Nor their own liking by reflection know. Dryden.

3. To please; to be agreeable to. Now disused.

Well hoped he, ere long that hardy guest,
 If ever covetous hand, or lustful eyes,
 Or lips be laid on thing that hid his best,
 Should be his prey. Spenner, F. Q.
 Say, my fair brother now, if this device
 Do like you, or may you to like coincide. Spenner, Hubb. Tale.

This desire being recommended to her majesty,
 it flint her to include the same within one entire lease.
 He shall dwell where it liketh him best. Deut.
 The musick likes you not. Shakespeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

There let them learn, as, likes them to despise
 God and Messiah. Milton, P. L.

4. [From the adjective like.] To liken.
 And like me to the peasant boys of France. Shakespeare, Hen. VI. P. I.

To LIKE.† v. n.

1. To be pleased with; with of before the thing approved. Obsolete. Dr. Johnson says; but he is mistaken in thinking it disused. Brockett, N. C. Words.

Of any thing more than of God they could not by any means like, as long as whatsoever they knew besides God, they apprehended it not in itself without dependency upon God. Hooker.

The young soldiers did with such cheerfulness like of this resolution, that they thought two days a long delay. Kneller.

2. To chuse; to list; to be pleased.
 The man likes not to take his brother's wife. Deut.

He that has the prison doors set open is perfectly at liberty, because he may either go or stay,
 as he best likes. Locke.

LI'KELIHOOD. † n. s. [from likely.]

1. Appearance; shew. Obsolete.
 What of his heart perceive you in his face,
 By any likelihood he shew'd to-day? Shakespeare.
 — That with no man here he is offended.

2. Resemblance; likeness. Obsolete.
 The mayor and all his brethren in best sort,
 Like to the senators of antique Rome,
 Go forth and fetch their cong'ring Caesar in.
 As by a low, but loving likelihood.
 Were none the general of our gracious express,
 As in good time he may, from Ireland coming,
 How many would the peaceful city quit. Shakespeare, Hen. F.

There is no likelihood between pure light and black darkness, or between righteousness and reprobation. Ridgely.

3. Probability; verisimilitude; appearance of truth.

As it noteth one such to have been in that age, so had there been more, it would by likelihood as well have noted many of their courses. South.
 Many of likelihood informed me of this before, which hug'd so tottering in the balance, that I could neither believe nor misdoct. Shakespeare, All's Well.

It never yet did hurt,
 To lay down likelihood, and forms of hope. Shakespeare.

As there is no likelihood that the place could be so altered, so there is no probability that these rivers were turned out of their courses. Ridgely, Hist. of the World.
 Where things are least to be put to the venture, as the eternal interests of the other world ought to be; there every, even the least, probability, or likelihood of danger, should be provided against. South.

There are predictions of our Saviour recorded by the evangelists, which were not completed till after their deaths, and had no likelihood of being so when they were pronounced by our blessed Saviour. Addison on the Chr. Religion.

Think, in all likelihood, would it be with a libertine who should have a visit from the other world; the first horror it raised would go off, as an over-sensitiveness came on. Alderbury.

LI'KELY.† adj. [from like.]

1. That may be liked; that may please.

These young companions make themselves believe they love at the first looking of a likely beauty. Sidney.
 Sir John, they are your likeliest men; I would have you served with the best. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Those argent fields more likely habitats,
 Translated saints and middle spirits hold Betwixt the angelical and human kind. Milton, P. L.

2. Probable; that may in reason be thought or believed; that may be thought more reasonably than the contrary: as, a likely story, that is, a credible story.

It seems likely that he was in hope of being busy and conspicuous. Johnson, Life of Otway.

- LI'KELY. adv. Probably; as may reasonably be thought.

While man was innocent, he was likely ignorant of nothing that imported him to know. Glanville, Scipion.

To LI'KEN.† v. s. [from like.] The Su-Goth, likan is the same. To represent as having resemblance; to compare.

The prince broke your hand, for likening him to a singing man of Windsor. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

For who, though with the tongue
 Of angels, can relate? or to what things
 Liken on earth conspicuous, that may lift
 Human imagination to such height
 Of God-like power? Milton, P. L.

LI'KENES.† n. s. [from like.] Sax.
licnepe.

1. Representation; parable; comparison.
 He side to them, sothey ye schal saye to use this likenes, letche, heale thyself. Wicliffe, St. Luke, iv.

2. Resemblance; similitude.
 They all do live, and moved as one
 To multiply the likeness of their kind. Spenner.

A translator is to make his author appear as charming as he can, provided he maintains his character, and makes him not unlike himself. Translation is a kind of drawing after the life, where there is a double sort of likeness, a good one and a bad one. Dryden.

There will be found a better likeness, and a worse; and the better is constantly to be chosen. Dryden.

3. Form; appearance.
 Never came trouble to my house in the likeness of your grace; for trouble being gone, comfort should remain. Shakespeare.

It is refer to stand upon our guard against an enemy in the likeness of a friend, than to embrace any man for a friend in the likeness of an enemy.
 L'Estrange.

4. One who resembles another; a copy; a counterpart.

Poor Cupid, sobbing, scarce could speak,
 Indeed, mamma, I do not know ye;
 Alas! I have lost my mistress!
 I took you for your likeness Close. Prior.

LI'KEWISE.† adv. [like and wise.] "In very ancient style, all the words that are now compounded with wise were at one compounded, and had the preposition.

They said 'in like wise' and 'in other wise.' But about the time that our present version of the Scriptures was made,
 the old usage was wearing out.

The phrase 'in like wise' occurs [in this version] but once; (St. Matt. xxi. 24.) which Dr. Johnson has printed likewise, as if one word: whereas the compound term like-wise occurs frequently. We find, in several places, 'on this wise, in this wise, in no wise.' The two first phrases are now obsolete, and the third seems to be in the state which Dr. Johnson calls obsolescent." Campbell, Philosoph. of Rhetoric, i. 580.] In like manner;
 also; moreover; too.

Jesus said unto them, I also will ask you one thing, which, if ye tell me, I in like wise will tell you by what authority I do these things. St. Matt. xxi. 24.

So was it in the decay of the Roman empire, and likewise in the empire of Almanzor, after Charles the Great, every bard taking a feather. Bacon, Ess.

Spirit of virtue poured to pure unmixt serum, conglutates it as if it had been blood. Spirit of sea-salt makes a perfect conglutination of the serum likewise, but with some different phenomena. Arbuthnot, on Aliments.

LI'KING. adj. [Perhaps because plumpness is agreeable to the sight.] Plump; in a state of plumpness.

I fear my lord the king, who hath appointed your meet and your drink; for why should he see you feed worse liling, than the children which are of your sort? Shakspere, Hen. 10.

L'LING.† n. s. [from like.]

1. Good state of body; plumpness.

I'll repent, and that suddenly, while I am in some liling; I shall be out of heart shortly, and then I shall have no strength to repent.

Shakspere, Hen. IV.
Their young ones are in good liling; they grow up with corn.

Cappadocian slaves were famous for their lustiness; and, being in good liling, were set on a stall when exposed to sale, to show the good habit of their body. Dryden, Notes to Pers.

2. State of trial.

The royal soul, that, like the labouring moon, By charms of heart was hurried down;
For'd with regret to leave her native sphere,
Came but a while on liling here. Dryden.

3. Inclination; desire. [liling, wif, Sax.]
Your liling is that I should tell a tale.

Chaucer, Pard. Tale.
Why do you longer feed on leashed light,
Or laking to gaze on earthly moli?

4. Delight in; pleasure in; with to. [liling, pleasure, Saxon.]

There are limits to be set betwixt the boldness and rashness of a poet; but he must understand those limits who pretends to judge, as well as he who undertakes to write; and he who has no liling to the whole, ought in reason to be excluded from censuring of the parts. Dryden.

L'LACH.† n. s. [lilac, lilds, French.] A tree.

The white thorn is in leaf, and the lilac tree. Bacon.

The lilac hangs to view
Its bursting gems in clusters blue. T. Watson, Ode 10.

To LILL.† v. a.

1. To put out; used of the tongue. See To LOLL.

Cerberus
His three deformed heads did lay along,
And lilled forth his bloody flaming tongue. Spenser, F. Q.

2. To assuage pain. [lillare, Lat. to lull.]
A northern word. Craven Dial. and Brockett.

L'LIED.† adj. [from lily.] Embellished with lilies.

Nymphs and shepherds dance no more
By sandy Ladon's lilled banks. Milton, Arcades.

To LILT.† v. n. To do any thing cleverly or quickly. Lancashire, according to Mr. Pegge. The Scotch use lilt in the sense of "sing cheerfully" and "to lilt and dance" is "to dance with great vivacity." See Dr. Jamieson's Goth. Diet. in To LILT. [lulla, Su. Goth. to sing.] Thus to sing, by not using words of meaning, but tuneful syllables only, Brockett's N. C. Words. To jerk, to rise in the gait or song. Craven Dial.

L'LY.† n. s. [lilium, Latin; lila, hlge, Saxon. The etymology warrants lily; but, as Mr. Nares has observed, the analogy of our language not only allows us to double a letter, in order to shorten a preceding vowel, but even requires that we should do it; and indeed it was written lily anciently. The Su. Goth. word is also lillia.]

VOL. II.

There are thirty-two species of this plant, including white lilies, orange lilies, red lilies, and martagons of various sorts. Miller.

Shipwreck'd upon a kingdom where no pity!
No friends! no hope! no kindred weep for me!
Almost on grave allow'd me! like the day,
That once was mistress of the field, and flourish'd,
I'll hang my head, and perish. Shakspere, Hen. VIII.

Arno, a river of Italy, is drawn like an old man, by his right side a lion, holding forth in his right paw a red lily, or flower-de-luce. Pemson on Drawing.

Take but the humblest lily of the field;
And if our pride will to our reason yield;
That on the regal seat great David's son,
Array'd in all his robes, and types of power,
Shines with less glory than that simple flow'r. Prior.

For her the lilies hang their heads, and die. Pope.

L'LY-DAFFODIL. n. s. [lilio-narcissus.] A foreign flower.

L'LYNHANDED.† adj. [lily and hand.]

As they please,
They limb themselves, and colour, shape, and size
Assume, as likes them best, condense, or rare. Milton, P. L.

2. To tear asunder; to dismember.

LIMBECK. n. s. [corrupted by popular pronunciation from almbick.] A still.

Her cheeks, on which this streaming nectar fell,
Still'd through the limbeck of her diamond eyes. Fairfax.

First of Spain, and the line,
Whose countries limbeck to our bodies be,
Canst thou not gain bear? Dennis.

Call up, unbound,
In various shapes, old Proteus from the sea,

The earth, by secret conveyances, lets in the sea, and sends it back fresh, her bowels serving for a limbeck. Hewell.

He first survey'd the charge with careful eyes,
Yet judg'd it, like vapours that from limbeck rise,
It would in richer showers descend again. Dryden.

The warm limbeck draws Salubrious waters from the noontide brood. Philips.

To LIMBECK.† v. a. [from the noun.] To strain as through a still. An uncommon, and not a good expression. Feltham somewhere also uses it.

The greater do nothing but limbeck their brains in the art of alchemie.

See E. Sandys, State of Religion.

LIMBED.† adj. [from limb.] Formed with regard to limbs.

A steer of five years' age, large limbed, and fed,
To Jove's high altars Aguemelon led. Pope, Iliad.

LI'MBO.† n. s. ["Et quod sit limbus in-LI'MBUS." ferorus i' Du Cange; that is, as if the frontier or margin of the other world.]

1. A region bordering upon hell, in which there is neither pleasure nor pain. Popularly hell.

I do closely reject, and esteem as fables, all the limbus of the fathers.

Bp. Hooper, Confess. of Chr. Faith, (1584.) § 25.
No, he is in tartar limbo, worse than hell,
A devil in an everlasting garment hath him.
One whose hard heart is button'd up with steel.

Shakespeare.

O what a sympathy of woe is this!
As far from help as limbo is from bliss.

Shakespeare.

According to the common doctrine of their church, [the church of Rome,] the souls of pious men were held in a limbus, remote from God, to the borders of hell.

Bp. Patrick, Answer to the Touchstone, p. 179.

All these up-whirl'd aloft
Fly o'er the backside of the world far off.
Into a limbo large, and broad, since all'd
The paradise of fools.

Milton, P. L.

2. Any place of misery and restraint.

For he no sooner was at large,
But Trulla straight brought on the charge;
And in the self-same limbo put
Tha knight and squire, where he was shut.

Hudibras.

Frier, thou art come off thyself, but poor I am left in limbo.

Dryden, Span. Frier.

LIME.† n. s. [lim, gelman, Saxon, to glue; lijim, Teut. glue.]

1. A viscid substance drawn over twigs, which catches and entangles the wings of birds that light upon it.

Poor bird! thou'dst never fear the net or lime,
The pitfall, nor the gin.

Shakespeare, Mocketh.

You must lay lime, to tangle her doves,
By wailful sonnets, whose composed rhymes
Should be full fraught with servicable vows.

Shakespeare.

Jollifer of this state
Then are new-benched ministers, be throws,
Like nets or lime-twigs, wherewith he goes,
His title of barrister on every wench.

Donne.

By this means
I knew the foul coxcomb though disguis'd,
Enter'd the very lime-twigs of his spells.

Milton, Curus.

And yet came off.
A thrush was taken with a bush of lime-vice.

L'Estrange.

Then tails for beasts, and time for birds were found.

And deep-mouth'd dogs did forest walks surround.
Dryden.

O court a wife, spread out his wily parts
Like nets, or lime-twigs, for rich widows' hearts.

Pope.

2. An essential ingredient in mortar and some other cements; so called because of its use in cement. [lime, Sax. calx.]

It is one of the alkaline earths, lately shewn to be a metallic oxide. See the Journal of Science, &c. No. 30,
p. 286.

There are so many species of lime atone, that we are to understand by it in general any stone that, upon a proper degree of heat, becomes a white calx, which will make a great ebullition and noise on being thrown into water, falling into a loose white powder at the bottom.

The lime we have in London is usually made of chalk, which is weaker than that made of stone. Hill, Mat. Medica.

They were now, like sand without lime, all bound together, especially so many as were English, who were at a gaze, looking strange one upon another, not knowing who was faithful to their side.

Bozon, Hen. VI.

As when a lofty pile is rais'd,
We never hear the workmen praise'd;
Who bring the time, or place the stones,
But all admire Isigo Jones.

Suiff.

Lime is commonly made of chalk, or of any sort of stone that is not sandy, or very cold. Mortimer.

LIME TREE, or LINDEN. n. s. [linb, Saxon, tilia, Lat.]

1. The linden tree.

The flower consists of several leaves, placed orbicularly, in the form of a rose, having a long narrow leaf growing to the fourth of each cluster of flowers.
From which cup rises the pointal, which becomes testiculated, of one capsule, containing an oblong seed. The timber is used by carvers and turners. These trees continue sound many years, and grow to a considerable bulk. Sir Thomas Brown mentions one, in Norfolk, sixteen yards in circuit.

Miller.

For her the times their pleasing shades deny,
For her the lilies hang their heads, and die.

2. A species of lemon. [lime, French.]

Bear me, Pomona! to thy citron groves!
To where the lemon and the piercing lime,
With the deep orange glowing between them,
Their lighter glories blend.

Thomson, Summer.

To LIME.† v. a. [gelman, Sax.]

1. To entangle; to ensnare.

With attendance, and with business,
Ben we limed both more and less.

Chaucer, Wife of Bath's Tale.

Oh bosom, black as death!
Oh limed soul, that, struggling to be free,
Am ever engaged.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Example, that so terrible shows in the wreck of misdeedhood, cannot, for all that, dissuade succession, but that they are limed with the twigs that threaten them.

Shakespeare.

The bird that hath been limed in a bush,
With trembling wings misdoth both every bush,
And I, the hapless male to one sweet bird,
Have now the fatal object in my eye,

Where my poor young was lim'd, was caught,
and kill'd.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

2. To smear with lime.

Myself have lim'd a bush for her,
And place a quire of such enticing birds,
That she will light to listen to their lays.

Shalp.

Those twigs in time will come to be limed, and then you are all lost if you do but touch them.

L'Estrange.

3. To cement. This sense is out of use.

I will not ruinise my father's house together,
Who gave his blood to line the stones together.

And set up Lancaster.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

4. To manure ground with lime.

Encouragement that abatement of interest gave to landlords and tenants, to improve by draining, marling, and liming.

Chiff.

All sorts of pease love limed or marled land.

Mortimer.

LI'MBERNER.* n. s. [lime and burn.] One who burns stones to lime.

Holcot.

LI'MHOUND.* n. s. [called also lym-limmer, or limmer. See LYM, and LIM-MER. See also Cotgrave, "limier, a bloodhound." Holme, in his old Academy of Armory, deduces our word
limmer from the leam or string with which this kind of dog was led. And so in the Gentleman's Recreation: "The string wherewith we lead a greyhound is called a leece; and that for a leech, and a lyme," p. 16.] A limmer, or large dog used in hunting the wild boar. Kerrey.

But Talus, that could like a limbeck wind
ber,

And all things secrete wisely could bewray.
At length found out, whereas the hidden lay.

Spenser, F. Q. v. ii. 25.

All the limbeckhounds in the city should have drawn after him by the acrot.

B. Jonson, Barthol. Fair.

LI'MKILN. n. s. [lime and kiln.] Kiln where stones are burnt to lime.

The counter gate is as hateful to me, as the reek of a lime kiln.

Shalp. M. Wives of Windsor.

They were found in a lime kiln, and having passed the fire, each is a little vitrified.

Woodward.

LI'MESTONE. n. s. [lime and stone.] The stone of which lime is made.

Fine stone and lime stone, if broke small, and laid on cold lands, must be of advantage.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

LI'ME-TWIG.† See the first sense of LIME.

LI'METWIGGED.* adj. [from lime and twig.] Smear'd with lime; prepared to entangle.

quicks and sophisms of philosophical persons.

L. Addison, W. Barbary, (1671.) Pref.

LIME-WATER. n. s.

Lime-water, made by pouring water upon quick lime, with some other ingredients to take off its ill flavour, is of great service internally in all cutaneous eruptions, and diseases of the lungs.

Hill, Materia Medica.

He tried an experiment on wheat infused in lime water alone, and some in brandy and lime water mixed, and had from each grain a great increase.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

LI'MIT. n. s. [*limite, French; limitor,
Latin.*] Bound; border; utmost reach.

The whole limit of the mountain round shall be most holy.

Ezra, xliii. 12.

We went, great emperor, by thy command,
To view the utmost limits of the land;
Ev'n to the place where no more world is found,
But foaming billows beating on the ground.

Dryden.

To LI'MIT. v. a. [limitor, French, from the noun.]

1. To confine within certain bounds; to restrain; to circumscribe; not to leave at large.

They tempted God, and limited the Holy One of Israel.

Psalm, lxxviii. 41.

Thanks I must you con, that you
Are there's profest; for that is boundless then
In limited professions.

Shakespeare, Timon.

If a king come in by conquest, he is no longer a limited monarch.

Swift.

2. To restrain from a lax or general signification; as, the universe is here limited to this earth.

LIMITA'NEUS. adj. [from limit.] Belonging to the bounds.

DIET. LI'MITARY. adj. [from limit.] Placed at the boundaries as a guard or superintendant.

Then, when I am thy captive, talk of chains,
Proud liminary cherub! Milton, P. L.

LIMITATION.† n. s. [limitation, French; limitatio, Latin.]

1. Restriction; circumscription.

Limitation of each creature, is both the perfection and the preservation thereof. Hooker.

Am I myself,

But, as it were, in sort of limitation? Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

I despair, how this limitation of Adam's empire to his line and posterity, will help us to one heir. This limitation, indeed, of our author, will save these the labour, who would look for him amongst the race of brutes; but will very little contribute to the discovery amongst men. Locke.

If a king come in by conquest, he is no longer a limited monarch; if he afterwards consents to limitations, he becomes immediately king de jure. Shelf.

2. Confinement from a lax or undetermined import.

The cause of error is ignorance, what restraints and limitations all principles have in regard of the matter whereunto they are applicable. Hooker.

3. Limited time.

You have stood your limitation, and the tribunes Endue you with the people's voice. Shakespeare, Cæd.

4. A certain precinct, in which friars were allowed to beg, or exercise their function.

Some [pulpits] have not had four sermons these five or six hundred years, since friars left their limitations. Bp. Gilling, Sermon before K. Edward VI. p. 25.

LIMITEDLY.* adv. [from limited.] With limitation.

Some person or number of persons were vested with a sovereign authority, subordinate to our Lord, to be managed in a certain manner, either absolutely according to pleasure, or limitedly according to certain rules. Barrow, Unity of the Church.

LIMITER.* n. s. [from limit.]

1. One who restrains within certain bounds; that which circumscribes.

Calling the same god "Joven terminalem," that is, Jupiter the limiter or the bounder of all things. Fisher, Atchem, (1625), p. 176.

It appears, that the sea is not that infinite limiter, which gives several gifts, and seteth several bounds to all other things. Ibid., p. 180.

A law so good and moral, the limiter of sin. Milton, Terentianus.

2. A friar who had a licence to beg within a certain district, or whose duty was confined to a certain district. Obsolete.

Almost every fryer limitour caryeth it written in his boosome. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. Feb. 68.

Then will crown

With limitless renown. Sidney, Astrophel and Stella.

Now to this use of city-commonwealth, Limitless London, am I come obscur'd. Daniel, Wm's Pilgrimage, H. 4. b.

Ye never alone
A limicer desire to what may make
The settled quiet of a peaceful state. Browne, Virg. Past. ii. 4.

LIMMER.† n. s.

1. [limier, French.] A limo-hound. See

LIMO-HOUND. "A limmer is a mungrel dog, half a cur, and half a hound or spaniel." Huloet. And thus Ainsworth calls this dog a mongrel. Mr. Tyrwhitt has admitted this word into his Glossary to Chaucer from the preceding one subjoined to Urry's edition of the old poet, and defines it "a blood-hound," with a reference, in proof of the assertion, to both words in the following lines; in which, however, the second usage of limmer means not the hound, but the lad or servant that led this kind of dog, which was accustomed to be so brought into the field.

There overtake I a grete rout
Of hunters and of foresters,

And many relies and liners,
That bid 'hem to the forest fast,

And I with 'hem; so at the last
I aakid one lad, a lymcer,

Say felowe, who shal tustin here? Dreng of Chaucer, 560.

A lymer, or limmer, so called from the lean or line wherewith he is led, is a middle-sized hound between a harrier and a greyhound both for kind, and frame of body, being active, light, and nimble. Holme, Academy of Armory.

2. [limar, plural of lim, Icel. boughs of trees. See LIMBERS.] A thill or shaft. "Limmers, a pair of shafts." North. Grose.

3. [limonier, Fr.] A thill-horse; a "limmer." Sherrwood.

TO LIMN. v. a. [enluminer, French, to adorn books with pictures.] To draw; to paint any thing.

His eye doth his effigies witness,
Most truly limn'd, and living in thy face. Shakespeare.

Emblems limned in lively colours. Pemham.

How are the glories of the field spun, and by what pencil are they limned in their unaffected beauty? Glover.

LIMNER. n. s. [corrupted from enluminer, a decorator of books with initial pictures.] A painter; a picture-maker.

That divers limners at a distance, without either copy or design, should draw the same picture to an undistinguishable exactness, is more coercible than that, which is so diversified, should picture itself so unerringly, according to the idea of its kind. Glover.

Poets are limners of another kind,
To copy out ideas in the mind;

Words are the paint by which their thoughts are shown,
And nature is their object to be drawn. Glover.

LIMOUS.* adj. [limous, Latin.] Muddy; slimy.

This country became a gained ground by the muddy and limous matter brought down by the Nilus, which settled by degrees unto a firm land. Brown, Vulg. Err.

They esteemed this natural melancholic acidity to be the limous or slimy facultative part of the blood. Floyer.

LIMP.* adj. [limpio, Italian.]

1. Vapid; weak. Not in use.

The chub eats waterials, and the flesh of him is not firm, limp, and tasteless. Watson, Angler.

2. It is used in some provinces, and in Scotland, for limber, flexible.

TO LIMP.† v. n. [limp-heal, lame, Sax. limpen, limpen, to halt in one's gait.

Lye.] To halt; to walk lamely.

An old poor man,

Who after me hath such a weary step
Limp'd in pure love. Shakespeare, As you like it.

One of sixteen,
Pluck the lin'd crutch from thy old limping sire. Shakespeare.

How far
The substance of my promise doth wrong this shadow
In undervaluing it; so far this shadow
Doth limp behind the substance. Shakespeare.

When Plutus, with his riches, is sent from Jupiter, he limps and goes slowly; but when he is sent by Pluto, he runs, and is swift of foot. Bacon.

Limping death, laid 'on by fate,
Comes up to shorten half our date. Dryden, Hor.

The limping smith observes 'd sudden 'd feast,
And hopping here and there put in his word. Dryden.

Can syllogism set things right?
No: majors soon with minors fight:
Or both in friendly consent join'd,
The consequence limps false behind. Prior.

LIMP.* n. s. [from the verb.] Halt; the act of limping; a colloquial expression; as, he has a limp in his walking.

LIMPER.* n. s. [from limp.] One who limps in his walking. Sherrwood.

LIMPET. n. s. A kind of shell fish. Ainsworth.

LIMPID.* adj. [limpid, French; limpidus, Lat.] Clear; pure; transparent.

The springs which were clear, fresh, and limpid, become thick and turbid, and impregnated with sulphur as long as the earthquake lasts. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

The brook that purils along
The vocal grove, now fretting e'er a rock,
Gently diffus'd into a limpid plain. Thomson, Summer.

LIMPIDNESS. n. s. [from limpid.] Clearness; purity.

LIMPINGLY.* adv. [from limp.] In a lame halting manner. Sherrwood.

LIMPITUDE.* n. s. [limpitude, Latin.] Clearness; brightness. Cockerham.

LIMY.* adj. [from lime.] Viscous; glutinous.

1. Viscous; glutinous.

Striving more, the more in laces strong
Himself he tied, and wrapt his wings twin
In limy snare the subtil locus found. Spenser.

2. Containing lime.

A humus soil covered with the skin, having been buried in some jelly soil, the turned, or turned into a kind of leather. Cree, Museum.

LIN.* n. s. [lyn, Welsh, a lake.] A mere or pool, from which rivers spring.

Drayton.

Recount her rivers from their fons.

Drayton, Polyolb. Song 9.

TO LIN.* v. n. [linna, Linnæ. to cease; ablinna, Sax. the same.] To yield; to cease; to give over. It is still a northern word.

Unto his foe he came,
Resolv'd in mind all suddenly to wile,
Or soon to lose before he once would lin. Spenser, F. Q.

For coarser fire, and it will never linne
Till it breaketh forth; in like, flame and sin. Mir. for Mag. p. 365.

Set a beggar on horseback, he'll never lin till he be a gallop. B. Jonson, Staple of News.

LINCER.* n. s. A ledge; a rectangular projection; whence the term linch-pin, a pin with a linch. The derivations of the word linchpin, by our etymologists, it will be seen are now inadmissible.

Jennings's West Country Words. Mr. Jennings, however, offers no etymology for linch; and I am still of opinion that the Saxon word, which I have produced under linchpin, is correct. Formerly, in agreement with my etymology, the word was lingpin. See Cowell's Law Dict. in V. Lingo.

4 m 2

LINCHPIN, n. s. [quasi linch-pin, Skinner.—u. Goth. lunta, paxillus axis. Dr. Jamieson.—It is the Sax. lyngr, axis.] An iron pin, that keeps the wheel on the axle-tree. Dict.

Through which something of a lace or loblin might be drawn, as a nail through the linchpin of an axle-tree to keep the wheel on. Cibb's Amplified.
LINCOLN GREEN, n. s. The colour of stuff or cloth made formerly at Lincoln. All in a woodman's jacket he was clad
Of Lincolne green, belay'd with silver lace.

Spencer, F. Q.

She's in a frock of Lincolne green,
Which colour likes her sight. Dryden, Faints.
LINCOLNE, n. s. [linchpin Lat. from lingo.] Medicine licked up by the tongue.

Confections, treacle, mithridate, eclogia, or linchures. Barton, Anat. of Med. p. 380.

LINCOLN, n. s. [from lingo, Lat.] Medicine licked up by the tongue.

LIND, n. s. [lin, Saxon.] The lime LINDEN, n. tree. See LIME.

As light as leafe on linde. Chaucer, Cl. Tale.
Hard bos, and linden of a softer grain. Dryden.
Two neighbouring trees, with walls encompass'd round.

Dryden.

One a hard oak, a softer linden oak. Dryden.
LINE, n. s. [linca, Latin; lin, u. Goth.]

1. Longitudinal extension.
Even the planets, upon this principle, must graduate on more slowly the sun; so that they would not revolve in curve lines, but fly away in direct tangents, till they struck against other planets. Bentley.

2. A slender string.
Well sung the Roman bard; all human things,
Of dearest value, hang on slender strings;
O see the then sole hope, and in design
Of heav'n our joy, supported by a line. Waller.
A line seldom holds to strain, or draws straight
In length, above fifty or sixty feet. Marsden, Mech. Exercises.

3. A thread extended to other operations.
We as by line upon the ocean go,
Whose paths shall be familiar as the land. Dryden.

4. The string that sustains the angler's hook.
Victorious with their lines and eyes,
They make the fishes and the men their prize. Waller.

5. Lineaments, or marks in the hand or face.
Long is it since I saw him,
But time hath nothing blur'd those lines of favour
Which time had worn. Shakespeare, Cymb.
I shall have good fortune; go to, here's a simple line of life; here's a small tribe of wives. Shaks.
Here, while his scurvy drone-pipe scans'd
The mystick figures of her hand,
He tipsy palimony, and dimes
On all her fortune-telling fancies. Cleveland.

6. Delineation; sketch.
You have generous thoughts turned to such speculations: but this is not enough towards the raising such buildings as I have drawn you here the line of, unless the direction of all affairs here were wisely in your hands. Tenney.
The inventors meant to turn such qualifications into persons as were agreeable to his character, for whom the line was drawn. Pope, Ess. on Homer.

7. Contour; outline.

On looking at those colours may they shioe,
Free as thy stroke, yet faultless as thy line! Pope.
8. As much as is written from one margin to the other; a verse.

To the preceding line, Ulysses speaks of Nauclos, yet immediately changes the words into the masculine gender. Broomer.

In moving lines these few epistles tell
What fate attends the nymph who loves too well. Garrick.

9. Rank of soldiers.
They pierce the broken foe's remotest lines. Addison.

10. Work thrown up; trench.
Now match an hour that favours thy designs,
Uoite thy forces, and attack their lines. Dryden, Æn.

11. Method; disposition.
The heavens themselves, the planets, and this centre,
Observe degree, priority, and place,
Insisture, course, proportion, season, form,
Office, and custom, in all line of order. Shaks.

12. Extension; limit.
Eden stretch'd her line
From Auran eastward to the royal towers
Of great Seleucia. Milton, P. L.

13. Equator; equinoctial circle.
It were the greatest folly in the world to perplex one's self with that, which Providence will never come to pass; but if it should, then God, who sent it, will dispose it to the best; most certainly to his glory; which would satisfy us in our respects to him; and, unless it be our fault, as certainly to our good; which, if we not strangely unreasonable, must satisfy in reference to ourselves and private interests. Besides all this, in the very dispensation God will not fail to give such allies, which, like the cool gales under the line, will make the greatest heats of suffering very supportable. Hammond, in Felt's Life of him, § 2.

When the sun below the line descends,
Then one long night continued darkness joins. Crescent.

14. Progeny; family, ascending or descending. [lin, old French.]
He child the sisters
Who first they put the name of king upon me,
'And had them speak to him; then prophet-like,
They told him father to a line of kings. Shaks.
He sends you this most memorable line,
In every branch truly demonstrative,
Willing you overlook this pedigree. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.
Some lines were noted for a stern, rigid virtue,
Savage, haughty, parsimonious, and unpopular;
Others were sweet and affable. Dryden.
His empire, courage, and his boasted line
Were all prov'd mortal. Rowe, Comm.

A golden bowl
The queen commanded to be crown'd with wine,
The bowl that Belus us'd, and all the Tyrian line. Dryden.

The years
Ran smoothly on, productive of a line
Of wise hereditary kings. Philips.

15. A line is one tenth of an inch. Locke.
16. [In the plural.] A letter; as, I read your lines. Dr. Johnson.—Used also now in the singular; as, I send you a line.

17. Lint or flax. [linum, Latin; linet, Saxon.]
Nor anie weaver, which his work doth boast
To diaper, in damask, or in lyne. Spenser, Maisepeira.

To LINE, v. a. [suggested by Junius from linum, linings being often made of linen.]

1. To cover on the inside.

A box lined with paper to receive the mercury that might be spilt. Boyle.

2. To put any thing in the inside: a sense rather ludicrous.

The charge amounteth very high for any one man's purse, except hind beyond ordinary, to reach unto. Crescent.

Her women are about her: what if I do line one of her hands? Shakespeare, Cymb.
He, by a gentle bow, divid'd
How well a colly's purse was lin'd. Swift.

3. To guard within.
Notwithstanding they had lined some bridges with muskets, they were totally dispersed. Clerendons.

4. To strengthen by inner works.
Line and new repair our towns of war,
With men of courage, and with means defendant. Shakespeare.

5. To cover with something soft.
Son of sixteen,
Pluck the lin's crutch from thy old limping sire. Shakespeare.

6. To double; to strengthen with help.
Who lin'd his crutch with boys,
Eateth the air, on promise of supply. Shakespeare.
My brother Mortimer doth stir
About his title, and hath sent for you
To line his cotterpie. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

The two armies were assigned to the leading of two generals, both of them rather courtiers, and assured to the state, than martial men, yet lined and assisted with subordinate commanders of great experience and valour. Bacon.

7. To impregnate: applied to animals getting.

Thus from the Tyrian pastures lin'd with Jere
He bore Europa, and still keeps his love. Crescent.
LINEAGE, n. s. [linage, French.] Race; progeny; family, ascending or descending.

Both the linage and the certain stir
From which I sprung from me are hidden yet. Symmer.
Joseph was of the house and linage of David. St. Luke, ii. 4.

The Titan comes forth with all his generation or linage, the males before him, and the females following him; and if there be a mother from whose body the whole linage is descended, there is a traverse where she sits. Bacon.
Men of might, great power,
Aod from the immortal gods their linage came. Dryden.

No longer shall the widow's land bemoan
A broken linage, and a doubtful throne,
But boast her royal progeny's increase,
And count the pledges of her future peace. Addison.

This case was infused by God himself, in order to ascertain the descent of the Messiah, and to prove that he was, as the prophets had foretold, of the tribe of Judah, and of the linage of David. Atterbury.

LIN, adj. [linealis, from linea, Lat.]

1. Composed of lines; delineated.
When any thing is mathematically demonstrated weak, it is much more mechanically weak; errors occur more easily in the management of gross materials than lineal designs. Watson, Architecture.

2. Descending in a direct genealogy.
To re-establish, de facto, the right of lineal succession to paternal government, is to put a man in possession of that government, which his father had enjoy'd, and he by lineal succession had a right to. Locke.

3. Hereditary; derived from ancestors.
Peace be to France, if France in peace permit
Our just and lineal entrance to our own. Shakespeare, K. John.

4. Allied by direct descent.

Queen Isabel, his grandmother,
Was lincel of the lady Ermengere.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

O that your brows my laurel had sustain'd!
Well had I been deposed if you had reign'd!
The father had descended for the son;
For only you are lincel to the throne.

Dryden.

LINALLY, adv. [from lincel.] In a direct line.

If he had been the person upon whom the crown had *lincel*ly and rightfully descended, it was father law.

Clarendon.

LINEMENT, n. s. [linement, French; linementum, Latin.] Feature; discriminating mark in the form.

Noble York

Found that the issue was not his begot:
Which well appeared in his linements.
Being nothing like the noble duke, my father.

Shakespeare.

Six wings he wore to shade

His linements divine.

Milton, P. L.

Man be access

In all his linements, though in his face

The glimpses of his father's glory shine.

Milton, P. R.

There are not more differences to men's faces, and the outward linements of their bodies, than there are in the make and tempers of their minds;
only there is this difference, that the distinguishing characters of the face, and the linements of the body, grow more plain with time, but the peculiar physiognomy of the mind is most discernible in children.

Locke.

I may advance religion and morals, by tracing some few linements in the character of a lady, who hath spent all her life in the practice of both.

Swift.

The utmost force of boiling water is not able to destroy the structure of the tenderest plant; the linements of a white lily will remain after the strongest decoction.

Arbutnot.

LINÆAR, adj. [linearis, Latin.] Composed of lines; having the form of lines.

Where-ever it is freed from the sand stone, it is covered with linear strain, tending towards several centres, so as to compose flat stellar figures.

Woodward on Fossils.

LINÆATION, n. s. [lineatio, Latin, from linea.] Draught of a line or lines.

There are in the horse ground two white linæations,
one of a pair of a pale red.

Woodward.

LINEN, n. s. [linum, Latin; linen, lunin,
Saxon; linen peapp, linen warp,
Lye.] Cloth made of hemp or flax.

Here is a basket, he may creep in; throw foul linen upon him, set going to bucking.

Shakespeare.

Unseen, unfold, the fiery serpent skins
Between her linen and her naked limbs.

Dryden, En.

LINEN, adj. [linens, Latin.]

1. Made of linen.

A linen coat on one leg, and a kersy boot hose on the other, garnished with a red and blue list.

Shakespeare.

2. Resembling linen.

Death of thy son! those linen cheeks of thine
Are counsellors to fear. What soldiers, why face?

Shakespeare.

LINENDRAPE, n. s. [linen and draper.]

He who deals in linen.

Dealt with the linen-draper.

B. Jonson, Dr. in Ar.

Charles Cambrick, linendrawer in the city of Westminster, was indicted for speaking obscenely to the lady Fenshope Touchwood. Tatler, No. 355.

LINEMER, n. s. [linen and man.] A linen

LINEMAN, n. s. [linen and man.] A linen

LINEMAN, n. s. [linen and man.] A linen

LINEMAN, n. s. [linen and man.] A linen

LINEMAN, n. s. [linen and man.] A linen

LINEMAN, n. s. [linen and man.] A linen

LINEMAN, n. s. [linen and man.] A linen

If she show good clothes or dressing, have your learned council about you very morning, your French tailor, barber, linemer, &c.

B. Jonson, Epitome.

I have in a table
With curious punctuality set down
To a hair's breadth, how low a new-stamp'd countrier

May well to a country gentleman, and by Gradation, to his merchant, mercer, draper,
His lineman and tailor.

Messinger, Emp. of the East.

LING, n. s. The termination notes commonly diminution; as, linging, and is derived from klein, German, little; sometimes a quality; as, lingling, in which sense
Skinner deduces it from langen, old
Teutonic, to belong.

Johnson.

When Skinner and Johnson, after puzzling about the derivation of this termination, referred it to the old Teut.
langen, or Germ. klien, they never ad-verted, that it was immediately derived from the Saxon ling, a common termination, used in the same manner, as in the old English and Scottish. See Somner and Lye.

G. Chalmers.

LING, n. s. [ling, Icelandic.]

1. Heath. This sense is retained in the northern counties; yet Bacon seems to distinguish them.

Heath and ling, and edges. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. [linghe, Dutch.] A kind of sea fish.

When harvest is ended take shipping, or ride,
Ling, salt fish, and herring, for Lent to provide.

Tusser.

Our English bring from thence good store of fish, but especially our deepest and thickest ling, are therefore called inland ling.

Abbott, Deccr. of the World.

LINGEL, n. s. See LINGLE.

TO LINGER, v. n. [from lenz, Saxon,
long.]

1. To remain long in languor and pain.
Like wretches, that have linger'd long,
We'll snatch the strongest cordial of our love.

Dryden.

Better to rush at once to shades below,
Than linger life away, and nourish woe.

Pope, Ode.

2. To hesitate; to be in suspense.

Perhaps thou lingere, in deep thoughts detain'd
Of th' enterprise so hazardous and high.

Milton, P. R.

3. To remain long. In an ill sense.

Let order die,
And let this world no longer be a stage
To feed contention in a lingering act.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Ye brethren of the lyre, and tuneful voice,
Lament his lot; but at your own rejoice.
Now live secure, and linger out your days;
The gods are pleas'd alone with Purcell's lays.

Dryden.

Your very fear of death shall make you try
To catch the shade of immortality;
Wishing on earth to linger, and to save
Part of its prey from the devouring grave.

Prior.

4. To remain long without any action or determination.
We have lingered about a match between Anne Page and my cousin Blunder, and this day we shall have our answer.

Shakespeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

5. To wait long in expectation or uncertainty.

I must solicit

All his concerns as mine:

And if my eyes have power, he should not see
In vain, nor linger with a long delay.

Dryden, Clotemnes.

6. To be long in producing effect.

She doth think, she has strange ling ring poisons.

Shakespeare.

TO LINGER, v. a. To protract; to draw out to length. Out of usage.

I can get no remedy against this consumption of the purse. Borrowing only lingers and lingers it out, but the disease is incurable.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

She lingers my desires.

Shakespeare.

Let your brief pleasures be mercy,
And linger not your sure destructions on. Shak.

LINGERER, n. s. [from linger.] One who lingers.

Barret.

Lingerers, persons who do not indeed employ their time criminally, but are such pretty innocents, who, as the poet says, "Waste away, in gentle inactivity, the day!"

Guarison, No. 151.

LINGERING, n. s. [from linger.] Tardiness.

Lest with a whip of scorpions I pursue
Thy lingering.

Milton, P. L.

LINGERINGLY, adv. [from lingering.] With delay; tediously.

Of poison, some kill more gently and linger- ingly, others more violently and speedily, yet both kill.

Hale.

LINGET, n. s. [from linget; lingot, Fr.]

A small mass of metal.

Other matter hath been used for money, as among the Lacedemonians, iron lingets quenched with vinegar, that they may serve to no other use.

Cassius.

Seville has at present more business, as being nearer the source of riches, the port of Cadix, where the lingets of America are landed.

Seiburne, Treat. through Spain, L. 44.

LINGLE, n. s. [linguel, Fr. cotgrave;

lingula, Lat.] Shoemaker's trough.

Cockeram.

His sale and lingel in a thong.

His tar-bore on his broad belt bong.

Dryden, Shep. Carl. (1595).

LINGO, n. s. [Portuguese.] Language;

tongue; speech. A low cant word.

I have thoughts to learn somewhat of your lingo, before I cross the seas.

Congreve, Way of the World.

LINGUACIOUS, adj. [linguax, Lat.] Full of tongue; loquacious; talkative.

LINGUADE, n. s. [lingua and dens, Lat.] Uttered by the joint action of the tongue and teeth.

Ph and Bh, (or ph and Bh) are labiodental; T and Dh are gingival; Th and Fh are lingual.

Holten, Elem. of Speech, p. 71.

LINGUIST, n. s. [from lingua.] A man skillful in languages.

Though a linguist should pride himself to have all the tongues that Babel cleft the world into, yet,
if he had not studied the solid things in them, as well as the words and lexicons, he were nothing so much to be esteemed a learned man, as any yeoman or tradesman competently wise in his mother dialect only.

Milton on Education.

Our linguist received extraordinary rudiments towards a good education.

Addison, Spect.

LINGWORT, n. s. An herb.

LINGY, n. s. adj. This word has very opposite senses applied to it, as a northern expression; by Grose, in the sense of limber; which is repeated in the Craven Glossary with the additions of tall and flexible; but by Mr. Brockett, in the senses of active, strong, able to bear fatigue.

LINIMENT. n. s. [liniment, French; linimentum, Lat.] Ointment; balsam; unguent.

The nostrils, and the jugular arteries, ought to be anointed every morning with this liniment or balsam.

The wise author of nature hath provided on the rump two glandules, which the bird catches hold upon with her bill, and squeezes out an oily sap or liniment, fit for the anointment of the feathers.

Ray on Creation.

LINING. n. s. [from line.]
1. The inner covering of any thing; the inner double of a garment.

Was I deceived, or did a sable cloud,
Turn forth her silver lining on the night?

Milton, Comus.

The fold in the grille of the nose is covered with a lining, which differs from the facing of the tongue.

Grew, Comal. Sacra.

The gown with stiff embroidery shining,
Looks charming with a lighter lining.

Prior.

2. That which is within.
The lining of his coffers shall make coats
To deck our soldiers for those Irish wars.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

LINK. n. s. [gelencke, Germ.]
1. A single ring of a chain.

The Roman state, whose course will yet go on
The way it takes, cracking ten thousand curbs
Of more than links asunder, than can ever
Appear in your impediment.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

The moral of that poetical fiction, that the uppermost link of all the series of subordinate causes, is fastened to Jupiter's chair, signifies an useful truth.

Hale.

Truths hang together in a chain of mutual dependence; you cannot draw one without attracting others.

Glauville.

While she does her upward flight sustain,
Touching each link of the continued chain,
At length she is oblig'd and forc'd to see
A bird, a source, a life, a deity.

Prior.

2. Any thing doubled and closed together.
Make a link of horse hair very strong, and fasten it to the end of the stick that springs.

Martimer, Husbandry.

3. A chain; any thing connecting.
Nor airless dungeon, nor strong links of iron,
Can be retentive to the strength of spirit.

Shakspeare.

I feel
The link of nature draw me; first of flesh,
Bonds of my bone thou art.

Milton, P. L.

Fire, food and earth, and air, by this were bound,
And love, the common link, the new creation
crown'd.

Dryden, Kn. Tole.

4. Any single part of a series or chain of consequences; a gradation in ratiocination; a proposition joined to a foregoing and following proposition.

The thread and train of consequences in inductive ratiocination is often long, and chained together by divers links, which cannot be done in imaginative ratiocination by some attributed to brutes.

Judge Hale.

5. A series; this sense is improper.
Addison has used link for chain.

Though I have here only chosen this single link of martyrs, I might fold out others among those names which are still extant, that delivered down this account of our Saviour in a successive tradition.

Addison on the Christian Religion.

6. [from λύσις.] A torch made of pitch and hard.

O, thou art an everlasting bonfire light; thou hast saved me a thousand marks in links and torches, walking with thee in the night betwixt tavern and tavern.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Whereas history should be the torch of truth, he makes her in divers places a fuliginous leaf of lies.

Hoevel.

Round as a globe, and liquor'd every chink,
Goodly and great he calls behind his link.

Dryd.

One that bore a link
On a sudden clasp'd his flaming eyelid,
Like linstock, to the horse's touch-hole.

Hudibras.

7. Perhaps in the following passage it may mean lampblack.
There was no link to colour Peter's hat.

Shakspeare.

TO LINK. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To complicate; as, the links of a chain.

Descending tread us down
Thus drooping; or with linked thunderbolts
Transfix us to the bottom of this gulph.

Milton, P. L.

Against ending cares,
Lap me in soft Lydian sin;
Married to immortal verse,
Such as the meeting soul may pierce
In notes, with many a winding bout
Of linked sweetness long drawn out.

Milton, L'Al.

2. To unite; to conjoin in concord.
They're two links in friendship.

Shakspeare.

That young prince Edward marries Warwick's daughter.

3. To join; to connect.
Link towns to towns with avenues of oak,
Inclose whole downs in walks, 'tis all a joke.

Pope.

So from the first eternal order ran,
And creature link'd to creature, man to man.

Pope.

4. To join by confederacy or contract.
They make an offer of themselves into the service of that enemy, with whose servants they link themselves in to near a band.

Hobbes.

Be advised for the best,
Ere thou thy daughter link in holy band
Of wedlock, to that new unknown guest.

Spenser, P. Q.

Blood in princes link'd not in such sort,
As that is of any pow'r to toy.

Daniel, Civ. Wars.

5. To connect; as concomitant.
New hope to spring
Out of despair; joy, but with fear yet link'd.

Milton, P. L.

God has link'd our hopes and our duty together,
Decay of Chr. Duty.

So gracious hath God been to us, as to link together our duty and our interest, and to make those very chief instances of our obedience, which are the natural means and causes of our happiness.

Tillotson.

6. To unite or concatenate in a regular series of consequences.

These things are linked, and, as it were, chained one to another: we labour to eat, and we eat to live, and we live to do good; and the good which we do is as seed sown, with reference unto a future harvest.

Hobbes.

Tell me which part it does necessitate?
I'll show the other; there I'll link 't effect;
A chain, which fools to catch themselves project!

Dryden.

By which chain of ideas thus visibly linked together in train, i. e. each intermediate idea agreeing on each side with those two, it is immediately placed between, the ideas of men and self-determination appear to be connected.

Locke.

TO LINK. v. n. To be connected; with in.

All the productions of the earth link in with each other.

Darke on Scorpio.

LINKBOY. } n. s. [link and boy.] A boy
LINKMAN. } that carries a torch to accommodate passengers with light.

What a ridiculous thing it was, that the continued shadow of the earth should be broken by sudden miraculous displays of light, to prevent the efficaciousness of the linkboy!

Merr.

Though thou art tempted by the linkman's call,
Yet trust him not along the lonely wall.

Gay.

In the black form of cinder which she came.
O may'st no linkboy interrupt their love!

Gay, Trium.

LINSEY. } n. s. [linetecp, Saxo;] Grey, believed to be from linet, flax, on the seed of which the bird feeds; linotte, French; linaria, Latin.] A small singing bird.

The swallows make use of celandine, the linnet of euphrasia, for the repairing of their sight.

Merr., Andris, against Andris.

Is it for thee the linnet hours his throat? Pope

LINSEY. } n. s. [linetecp, Saxo;] sermen lini, Latin.] The seed of flax, which is much used in medicine.

LINSEY. } n. s. [a corruption of linen.]
LINSEY-WOOLSEY. } stuff made of linen and wool mixed.

No matter for the stuff, whether linsey or woolsey.

Bentley, Phil. Lips.

Here is a very great trade in worsted stockings, some linsey, and a coarse kind of linsey.

Pennant.

LINSEY-WOOLSEY. } n. s. [a corruption of linen and wool.] Stuff made of linen and wool mixed; light or coarse stuff; hence what is mean, vile, unsuitable.

He gave them coats of linsey-woolsey, said he, that is good and warm for winter, good and light for summer.

Bp. of Chester, Two Kerns. (1576.) sign. C.8.b.

Barbed and barelegged, only clothed in linsey-woolsey.

Homilies, Serm. P. II. for Whituesday.

If among the covetous there is linsey woolsey, as far as will make for their profit, so far, and no longer, they love God.

Lor. Biss of Br. Beauvis, (1614.) p. 15.

LINSEY-WOOLSEY. } adj. [linen and wool.] Made of linen and wool mixed. Vile; mean; of different and unsuitable parts.

Luther himself being accompanied a very papist, and the Lutheran an ass in a tuchet, a linsey woolsey bishop.

Steyden, Four of the Faith, (1565.) fol. 102. b.

This sense may seem to have a ground from the like prohibition of linsey-woolsey garments, and the sowing of a field with mingled seed.

Gregory, Notes on Script. ch. 19.

That linsey-woolsey intermixture of comick mirth with tragic seriousness.

Phillips, Theatr. Poet. Pref.

A lawless linsey-woolsey brother,
Half of one order, half another.

Hudibras.

I've'd, patch'd and yrebad, linsey-woolsey brothers.

2. Linen scraped into soft woolly substance to lay on sores.

I dressed them up with anguentum basilicum visello ori, upon pledges of fin.

Wierman, Surgery.

LINTEL. n. s. [linetel, French.] That part of the door frame that lies across the door posts over head.

Take a bunch of hyssop, and dip it in the blood that is in the basin, and strike the linetel and the two side posts. End.

When you lay any timber on brick work, as linets over windows, lay them in loam, which is a great preserver of timber.

Mason, Mech. Exercis.

Silver the linetel dead projecting o'er,
And gold the ringlets that command the door.

Pope, Odys.

LION. n. s. [lion, French; leo, Latin.] 1. The fiercest and most magnanimous of fourfooted beasts.

Be lion-mettled; proud, and take no care
Who chafes, who frets, or where conspirers are;
Macbeth shall never vanquish'd be.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

The sphinx, a famous monster in Egypt, had the face of a virgin, and the body of a lion.

Proclamation on Drawing.

They rejoice
Each with their kind, lion with lioness;
So fly they in pairs too last com'd in.

Milton, P. L.

See lion-hearted Richard,
Proudly valiant, like a torrent swell'd
With wintry tempests, that disdains all mounds, Breaking away impetuous, and involves
Within its sweep trees, houses, men, he press'd!
Amidst the thickest battle. Philip.

2. A sign in the zodiac.

The lion for the honours of his skin,
The squeezing crab, and stinging scorpion shins
For aching heav'n, when giants dar'd to brave
The threatened stars. Creech, Monist.

LIONESS. n. s. [feminine of lion.] A she lion.

Under which bush's shade, a lioness
Lay couching head on ground, which catlike watch
When that the sleeping man should stir.

Shakespeare.

The furious lioness,
Forgetting young ones, through the fields doth roar. May.

The greedy lioness the wolf pursues,
The wolf the kid, the wanton kid the browse.

Dryden.

If we may believe Poly, lions do, in a very severe manner, punish the adulteries of the lioness.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

LIONLEAF. n. s. [leontopetalon, Latin.] A plant.

Müller.

LION'S-TAIL.† }

LIP. n. s. [lippe, Saxon.]

1. The outer part of the mouth, the muscles that shoot beyond the teeth, which are of so much use in speaking, that they are so used for all the organs of speech.

Those happiest smiles

That play'd on her ripe lip, seem'd 'not to know
What guests were in her eyes. Shelop. K. Lear.
No falsehood shall delude my lips with lies,
Or with a veil of truth disguise.

Soudy, Paraph. on Job.

Her lips bluish deeper sweets. Thomson, Spring.

2. The edge of any thing.

In many places is a ridge of mountains some distance from the sea, and a plain from their roots to the shore; which plain was formerly covered by the sea, which bounded against those hills as its first ramparts, or as the ledges or lips of its vessel.

Burvet, Theory of the Earth.

In wounds, the lips sink and are flaccid; a gleet follows, and the flesh within withers.

Wierman, Surgery.

3. To make a lip. To hang the lip in silliness and contempt.

A letter for me! It gives me an estate of seven years' health; in which time I will make a lip at the physician.

Shakespeare.

To LIP. v. a. [from the noun.] To kiss.

Obsolete.

A hand, that kings

Have lip, and trembled kissing.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Oh! 'tis the fond's arch mock,
To lip a wanton, and suppose her chaste. Shelop.

LIP-DEVOTION.* n. s. [lip and devotion.]

Devotion uttered by the lips without concurrence of the heart.

Lip-devotion will not serve the turn; it undervalues the very thing it prays for. It is indeed the begging of a denial, and shall certainly be answered in what it begs. South, Sermon. v. 336.

LIP-GOOD.* adj. [lip and good.] Good in talk without practice.

Men are deceiv'd, who think there can be thrall
Beneath a virtuous prince. Wish'd liberty
Ne'er lover lies than under such a crown:

But when his grace is merely but lip-good,

And that no longer than he aims himself

Ahead in public, there to seem to shun

The strokes and stripes of flatterers, which within

Are lecherous unto him, and so feed

His brutish sense with their afflictive sound,

As dead to virtue, he permits himself

Be carried like a pitcher by the ears

To every act of vice; This is a case

Deserves our fear, and doth prevenge the night

And close approach of blood and tyranny.

B. Brown, Scenars.

LIP-LABOUR.† n. s. [lip and labour.] Action of the lips without concurrence of the mind; words without sentiments.

Christ calleth your Latyne howers illness, hypocrysey, moche babylinge, and lippe-laboure.
Bale, Yet a Courte. f. c. (1543.) fol. 24. b.

Fasting, when prayer is not directed to its own purposes, is but lip-labour.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of Holy Living.

LIP-LABORIOUS.* adj. [from lip-labour.]

Uttering words without sentiments; hypocritical.

The lower the times grew, the worse they were at the bottom: the Bramins grew hypocritical and lip-laborious.

Lord's Hist. of the Bonians, (1630.) p. 66.

LIPOTHYMOUS. adj. [λίπην and θύμος.]

Swooning; fainting.

If the patient be surpris'd with a lipothyמוש languor, and great oppression about the stomach and hypochondriacs, expect to relief from cordials.

Harey on the Plague.

LIPOTHYMY. n. s. [λιποθυμία.] Swoon; fainting fit.

The senators falling into a lipothyמוש, or deep swooning, made up this pageantry of death with a representing of it unto life.

Bp. Taylor, Worlthy Communicant.

In lipothyמוש or swoonings, he used the friction of this finger with saffron and gold.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

LIPFED. adj. [from lip.] Having lips.

LIPFITUDE. n. s. [lippitude, French; lippitudo, Latin.] Blearedness of eyes.

Diseases that are infectious, are such as are in the spirits and not so much in the humours, and therefore pass easily from body to body; such are pestilences and lippitudes.

Bacon.

LIP-WISDOM. n. s. [lip and wisdom.] Wisdom in talk without practice.

I find that all is but lip-wisdom, which wants experience; I now, woe is me, do try what love can do.

Scidney.

The common opinion hath been, that crystal is nothing but ice and snow concentered, and by duration of time, congealed beyond liquefaction.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

To LIPQUATE. v. n. [liquo, Latin.] To melt; to liquefy.

If the salts be not drawn forth before the clay is baked, they are apt to lipuate.

Woodward on Fossils.

LIQUEFACTION. n. s. [liquefactio, Latin; liquefaction, French.] The act of melting; the state of being melted.

Heat dissolveth and melteth bodies that keep in their spirits, as in divers liquefactiones; and so doth time in honey, which by age waxeth more liquid.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The burning of the earth will be a true liquefaction or dissolution of it, as to the exterior region.

Burnet.

LIQUEFABLE. adj. [from liquefy.] That may be melted.

There are three causes of fixation, the even spreading of the spirits and tangible parts, the closeness of the tangible parts, and the juncioneness or extreme continuation of spirits: the two first may be joined with a nature liquefiable, the last not.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To LIPQUEFY. v. a. [liquefy, French; liquefactio, Latin.] To melt; to dissolve.

That degree of heat which is in time and ashes, being a smothering heat, is the most proper, for it doth neither liquefy nor rarely; and that is true maturation.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To LIPQUEFY. v. n. To grow liquid.

The blood of St. Januarius liquefyed at the approach of the saint's head.

Addison on Italy.

Aptness to melt.

LIQUESCENT. adj. [liquefcentia, Latin.] Melting.

LIQUEUR.* n. s. [French.] A most affected and contemptible expression, much used of late for what is in fact a dram, a draught of some spirituous and high-flavoured liquid, by those whose gentility recoils at the vulgar phrase.

Know what conserves they choose to eat,
And what liqueurs to sipple.

Shenstone, To the Virtuosi.

L'IQUID. adj. [liquide, French; liquidus, Latin.]

1. Not solid; not forming one continuous substance; fluid.

Gently rolls the liquid glass.

Dr. Daniel.

2. Soft; clear.

Her breast, the sugared nest

Of her delicious soul, that there does lie,

Bathing in streams of liquid melody. Crashaw.

3. Pronounced without any jar or harshness.

The many liquid consonants give a pleasing sound to the words, though they are all of one syllable.

Dryden, Elia.

Let Carolins smooth the tuneful lay,
Lull with Amelia's liquid name the noise.

And sweetly flow through all the royal line.

Pope, Hor.

4. Apparent; manifest.

If a creditor should appeal to hinder the burial of his debtor's corpse, his appeal ought not to be received, since the business of burial requires a quick dispatch, though the debt be entirely liquid.

Boyle, Purgeign.

L'IQUID. n. s. Liquid substance; liquor.

Be it thy choice, when summer heats annoy,

To sit beneath her leafy canopy,

Quaffing rich liquids.

Philips.

TO L'IQUIDATE. v. a. [from liquid.] To clear away; to lessen debts.

If our epistolary accounts were fairly liquidated, I believe you would be brought in considerable debt.

Ld. Chesterfield.

LIQUIDATION. n. s. [from to liquidate.] Act of lessening debts.

LIQUIDITY. n. s. [from liquid.] Subtlety; thinness.

The spirits, for their liquidity, are more incapable than the fluid medium, which is the conveyer of sounds, to persevere in the continued repetition of vocal airs.

Glanville.

L'IQUIDNESS. n. s. [from liquid.] Quality of being liquid; fluency.

Oil of aniseeds, in a cool place, thickened into the consistence of white butter, which, with the least heat, resumed its former liquidity.

Boyle.

L'IQUOR. n. s. [liquor, Latin; liqueur, French.]

1. Any thing liquid: it is commonly used of fluids incrusting, or impregnated with something, or made by decoction.

Nor everted them the grape

Whose head: that turbulent liquor fills with fumes.

Milton, S. A.

Sin taken into the soul, is like a liquor poured into a vessel; so much of it as it fills, it also seasons.

South, Sermon.

2. Strong drink; in familiar language.

TO L'IQUOR. v. a. [from to noun.] To drench or moisten.

Cart wheels squeak not when they are liquored.

Bacon.

lisping.

I overheard her answer, with a very pretty lisp;

O! Stephon, you are a dangerous creature.

Taylor.

L'ISPER. n. s. [from lisp.] One who lisps.

Huloet.

L'ISPLYNG. adv. [from lisping.] With a lisp; imperfectly.

Show him that T is clone; but this lets breath;

and with often trial he will hit on it, though at first it may be lisping or imperfectly.

Holder, Elem. of Speech, p. 144.

L'ISSOM. adj. [probably from lissom, Sax.

to loose; lisse, reflexion.] Limber;

supple; relaxed; loose; free. Pegge, without any etymology, confines this word to the north of England, where it is rather lissome, that is lightsome; as in Cheshire and part of Yorkshire, where lissom means active, agile. See Wilbraham's Chesh. Gloss. and Craven Dial.

Lissom, however, is common, in several parts of England, in the former meanings.

LIST. n. s. [liste, French.]

1. A roll; a catalogue.

He was the ablest emperor of all the list.

Bacon.

Some say the loadstone is poison, and therefore in the lists of poisons we find it in many authors.

Bacon.

Bring next the royal list of Stuns forth,
Undaunted minds, that roll'd the rugged north.

Prior.

2. [lice, French.] Enclosed ground in which tilts are run, and combats fought.

Till now alone the mighty nations strove,

The rest at gaze, without the list did stand;

And threat'ning France, plac'd like a painted Jove,

Kept idle thunder in his lifted hand.

Dryden.

Part thy son, and Sparta's king advance,

In measure'd lists to toss the weighty lance;

And who his rival shall to arms subdue,

His be the dame, and his the treasure too.

Pope, Iliad.

3. [lirt, Sax. the verge or border of any thing.] Bound; limit.

The ocean, overtopping of his list,

Eats not the flats with more impetuous haste

Than young Laertes in a riotous head

O'er-bears your officers.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

She within lists my ranging mind hath brought,

That new beyond myself I will not go.

Dryden.

4. [lirtan, Saxon.] Desire; willingness;

choice; pleasure. See LUST.

—Too much;

I find it still when I have list to sleep.

Shakespeare, Othello.

Nothing of passion or peevishness, or list to contradict, shall have any bias on my judgement.

King Charles.

He saw false reward where he lay full low;

I need not swear he had no list to crow.

Dryden.

5. [lirt, Saxon, the same.] A strip of cloth.

A linen stock on one leg, and a kersey boot bore on the other, gartered with a red and blue list.

Shakespeare.

Instead of a list of cotton, or the like fibre, made use of a siphon of glass,

A list the cobbler's temple ties,

To keep the hair out of his eyes.

Bufl.

6. A border.

They thought it better to let them stand as a list, or marginal border, unto the Old Testament.

Hooker.

TO LIST. v. v. [lirtan, Saxon.]

1. To chuse; to desire; to be disposed; to incline.

To fight in field, or to defend this wall,

Point what you list, I nought refuse at all.

Spenser, F. Q.

Unto them that add to the word of God, what them listeth, and make God's will submit unto their will, and break God's commandments for their own tradition's sake, unto them it seemeth not good.

Hooker.

They imagine, that laws which permit them to do as they would, will endure them to speak as they list.

Hooker.

Let other men think of your devices as they list,

in my judgement they bemoan fairness.

Walsley.

Now by his mother, or star, or what I list.

Shakespeare.

Kings, lords of times, and of occasions, may

Take their advantage when, and how, they list.

Daniel.

When they list, into the world

That bred them they return; and howl, and gnaw

My bowels, their repent.

Milton, P. L.

2. Used as an impersonal verb; it pleased.

Frequent in our old writers.

When him list the prouder looks subdue,

He would them gazing blind, or turn to other bevy.

Spenser, F. Q.

TO LIST. v. a. [from list, a roll.]

1. To enlist; to enrol or register.

For a man to give so near to Christianity in those days, was to list himself a martyr, and to bid farewell not only to the pleasures, but also to the hopes of this life.

South.

They list with women each dog's name
Who dares not hazard life for future fame.

Dryden, En.

2. To retain and enrol soldiers; to enlist.
The lords would, by listing their own servants, persuade the gentlemen in the town to do the like.

Clarendon.

The king who raised this wall appointed a million of soldiers, who were listed and paid for the defence of it against the Tartars.

Temple.

Two hundred horse he shall command;
Though few, a warlike and well-chosen band,
These in my name are listed.

Dryden.

5. [From list; enclosed ground.] To enclose for combats.

How dares your pride presume against my laws,
As in a listed field to fight your cause?

Unask'd the royal grant. Dryden, An. Tole.

4. [From list, a shred or border.] To sew together, in such a sort as to make a particoloured shew.

Some may wonder at such an accumulation of benefits, like a kind of embroidery or listing of one favour upon another.

Wotton, Life of Buckingham.

5. [Contracted from listen.] To hearken to; to listen; to attend.

Then weigh, what loss your honour may sus-tain,
If with too credent ear you list his songs;

Or lose your heart, or your chaste treasure open
To his unmaster'd importunity. Shaksp. Hamlet.

I, this sound I better know;
List / I would I could hear so. B. Jonson.

- Li'STEN. adj. Striped; particoloured in long streaks.

Over his head beholds

A dewy cloud, and in the cloud a bow
Conspicuous, with seven listed colours gay.

Betokening peace from God, and car'nt new,
Milton, P. L.

As the show'ry arch

With listed colours gay, or azure, gold,
Delights, and puzzles the beholder's eyes. Phillips.

- To Li'STEN.† v. n. [hlytan, and lytan, Sax.] To hear; to attend. Obsolete.

Lady, vouchsafe to listen what I say.

One cried, God bless us! and, amen! the other;
As they had seen me with these hangman's hands,
Listening their fear I could not say, amen.

Shakspere.

He, that no more must say, is listened more Than they whom youth and ease have taught to glose.

Shakspere.

The wonted roar was up amidst the woods,
And fill'd the air with barbarous dinomance,
At which I caw'd and listen'd there a while.

Milton, Comus.

- To Li'STEN. v. n. To hearken; to give attention.

Listen to me, and if you speak me fair,
I'll tell you news. Shakspere, Tem. of the Shrew.

Antagonus used often to go disguised, and listen at the tents of his soldiers; and at a time heard some that spoke very ill of him: whereupon he said, If you speak ill of me, you should go a little farther off.

Racon, Apophthegms.

Listen, O ladies, unto me, and hearken, ye people.

Isid. Alex.

When we have occasion to listen, and give a more particular attention to some sound, the symposium is drawn to a more ordinary tension.

Follier, Elem. of Speech.

On the green bank I sat, and listen'd long;
Nor till her lay was ended could I move.

But wish'd to dwell for ever in the grove. Dryden.

He shall be receiv'd with more regard,
And listen'd to, than modest truth is heard.

Dryden.

To this humour most of our late comedies owe their success: the audience listens after nothing else.

Li'STENER. n. s. [from listen.] One that hearkens: a hearer.

They are light of belief, great listeners after news.

Listeners never hear well of themselves.

If she constantly attends the tea, and be a good listener, she may make a tolerable figure, which will serve to draw in the young chaplain.

The hush word, when spoke by any brother in a lodge, was a warning to the rest to have a care of listeners.

Li'STUL.† adj. [from list, in the sense of listen.] Attentive.

Thereby they both did frankly condescend
And to his doom with kindred cares did both attend.

Li'STLESS. adj. [from list.] Without inclination; without any determination to one thing more than another.

Intemperance and sensuality clog men's spirits,
make them gross, listless, and unactive.

If your care to wheat alone extend,
Let Myra with her sisters first descend,
Before you trust in earth your future hope.

Or else expect a listless, lazy crop. Dryden, Virg.

Lazy lolling sort
Of ever listless loiterers, that attend
No cause, no trust.

I was listless, and desponding.

Careless; heedless: with of.

The sick for air before the portal gap,
Or bide in their empty hives remain,
Besumb'd with cold, and listless of their gain.

Li'STLESSLY. adv. [from listless.] Without thought; without attention.

To know this perfectly, watch him at play, and see whether he be stirring and active, or whether he lazily and listlessly dreams away his time.

Li'STLESSNESS.† n. s. [from listless.] In-attention; want of desire.

It may be the palate of the soul is indisposed
by listlessness or sorrow.

This habit, [cloth] rooted in the child, grows up and adheres to the man, producing a general
listlessness and aversion from labour.

Li'STLESSLY.† n. s. [from listless.] In-
attention; want of desire.

It may be the palate of the soul is indisposed
by listlessness or sorrow.

This habit, [cloth] rooted in the child, grows
up and adheres to the man, producing a general
listlessness and aversion from labour.

Li'STLESSLY.† n. s. [from listless.] In-
attention; want of desire.

It may be the palate of the soul is indisposed
by listlessness or sorrow.

This habit, [cloth] rooted in the child, grows
up and adheres to the man, producing a general
listlessness and aversion from labour.

up and adheres to the man, producing a general
listlessness and aversion from labour.

Of their army, whose list hearse more,
I shall rehearse, so as I can, a list.

Li'TERAL. adj. [literal, French; literal, Lat.]

1. According to the primitive meaning, not figurative.

Through all the writings of the ancient fathers,
we see that the words, which were, do continue;
the only difference is, that whereas before they had a literal; they now have a metaphorical use, and are as so many notes of remembrance unto us, that what they did signify in the latter, is accomplished in the truth.

A foundation, being primarily of use in architecture, hath no other literal notation but what belongs to it in relation to an house, or other building, nor figurative, but what is founded in that, and deduced from thence.

Following the letter, or exact words.

The fitted for public audience are such as,
following a middle course between the rigour of literal translations and the liberty of paraphrases, do with greater shortness and plainness deliver the meaning.

Consisting of letters; as, the literal notation of numbers was known to Europeans before the cyphers.

Li'TERAL. n. s. Primitive or literal meaning.

How dangerous it is in sensible things to use metaphorical expressions unto the people, and what secret conceits they will swallow in their literals, an example we have on our profession.

Li'TERALISM. n. s. [from literal.] What accords with the letter or exact word.

If none of these considerations, with all their weight and gravity, can avail to the disposing him of his precious literals, let some one or other treat him but to read on.

Li'TERALIST. n. s. [from literal.] One who adheres to the letter or exact word.

Let the extreme literalist sit down now, and resolve whether this in all necessity be not the due result of our Saviour's words; or, if he persist to be otherwise opinioned, let him well advise, lest thinking to gripe fast the Gospel, he be found instead with the canon law in his fist.

I shall substitute the sense of Mr. Mede, which the context literalist cannot but see.

Li'TERALITY. n. s. [from literal.] Original meaning.

Not attaining the true deuterocopy and second intention of the words, they are fain to omit their superconceptions, euhemerisms, figures, or tropo-logies, and are not sometimes persuaded beyond their literalities.

Those who are still bent to hold this obstinate literalities.

Li'TERALITY. adv. [from literal.]

1. According to the primitive import of words; not figuratively.

That a man and his wife are one flesh, it can be comprehended; yet literally taken, it is a thing impossible.

2. With close adherence to words; with by word.

Endeavouring to turn his Nisus and Euryalus as close as I was able, I have performed that episode too literally; that giving more scope to Me-neus and Lausus, that version, which has more of the majesty of Virgil, less of his consciousness.

So wild and ungovernable a poet cannot be translated literally; his genius is too strong to bear a chain.

Li'TER. n. s. A little; a small portion.

This also is a northern phrase.

LITERARY.† adj. [literarius, Lat.] Respecting letters; pertaining to literature; regarding learning. Literary history is an account of the state of learning, and of the lives of learned men. Literary conversation is talk about questions of learning. Literary is not properly used of missive letters. It may be said, this epistolary correspondence was political often than literary.

He has long outlived his century, the term commonly fixed as the test of literary merit.

Johnson, Prof. to Shakespeare.

The former of these appears with too much distinction in the literary as well as the politic world, to make it necessary I should enlarge upon this subject.

Mason, Life of Gray.

Soon after his (Dr. Johnson's) return to London, which was in February, 1764, was founded that club which existed long without a name, but at Mr. Garrick's funeral became distinguished by the title of the literary club. Sir Joshua Reynolds had the merit of being the first proposer of it, to which Johnson acceded; and the original members were Sir Joshua Reynolds, Dr. Johnson, Mr. Edmund Burke, Dr. Nugent, Mr. Henrich, Mr. Langton, Dr. Goldsmith, Mr. Chamier, and Sir John Hawkins. Reynolds, Life of Johnson.

LITERATE.* adj. [literatus, Latin.] Learned.

Cockeram.

This is the proper function of literate elegance; to figure virtue in so fresh and lively colours, that our imagination may be so taken with the beauty of virtue, as it may invite our minds to make love to her in solitude.

W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. I. (1648.) p. 348.

In literate nations, though the pronunciation, and sometimes the words of common speech, may differ, as now in England, compared with the south of Scotland, yet there is a written dialect which pervades all dialects, and is understood in every province: But where the whole language is colloquial, he that has only one part, never gets the rest, as he cannot get it but by change of residence. Johnson, Jour. Western Isles.

LITERATI. n. s. [Italian.] The learned.

I shall consult some literati on the project sent me for the discovery of the lithium. Beaumont.

LITERATOR.* n. s. [literator, Lat.] A petty schoolmaster.

In this age of light, they teach the people, that preceptors ought to be in the place of gallants. They systematically corrupt a very corruptible race, (for some time a growing nation amongst you,) a set of petulant literators, to whom, instead of their proper but severe unostentatious duties, they assign the brilliant parts of men of wit and pleasure, of gay, young, military sparks, and danglers at toilets. Burke, Lett. to a Member of the Fr. Nat. Assembly.

LITERATURE. n. s. [literatura, Lat.]

Learning; skill in letters.

This kingdom hath been famous for good literature; and if preferment attend deservers, there will not want supply. Bacon.

When men of learning are acted by a knowledge of the world, they give a reputation to literature, and convince the world of its usefulness. Addison, Freeholder.

LITH.* n. s. [lith, Sax. Lithin, Gothick.]

A joint; a limb. Obsolete.

Chamterlers, taken in every lit.

Chaucer, N. Pr. Tale.

LITHARGE. n. s. [litharge, French; lithargyrum, Lat.]

Litharge is properly lead vitrified, either alone or with a mixture of copper. This recement is of two kinds, litharge of gold, and litharge of silver.

It is collected from the furnaces where silver is separated from lead, or from those where gold and silver are purified by means of that metal. The litharge sold in the shops is produced in the copper works, where lead has been used to purify that metal, or to separate silver from it. Hill, Materia Medica.

I have seen some parcels of glass adhering to the test or cupel as well as the gold or litharge.

Boyle.

If the lead be blown off from the silver by the bellows, it will, in great part, be collected in the form of a darkish powder; which, because it is blown off from silver, they call litharge of silver.

Boyle.

LITHET.† adj. [lith, Saxon; from lith, a joint. See LITH.] Limber; flexible; soft; pliant; easily bent.

To make lithet that erst was hard.

Chaucer, House of Fame, B. I.

The unweildy elephant.

To make them mirth, w'd all his might, and wreath'd
His lithet proboscis. Milton, P. L.

TO LITHET.* v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To smooth; to soften; to palliate.

Chaucer so uses it, Troil. and Cress. iv. 754. Obsolete; except that, in some parts of the north of England, it is applied to their way of mixing oatmeal with milk.

2. [lyda, Su. Goth.] To listen; to attend.

Lyth ye, that is, hark ye. Yorkshire Gloss. And so lyth in Cumberland.

LITHETES. n. s. [from lith.] Limberness; flexibility.

LITHET.† adj. [from lith.]

1. Soft; pliant.

Thou unick, death,
Two Talbots winged though the lithet sky,
In thy despite shall 'scape mortality. Shaksp.

2. [lyth, Saxon.] Bad; sorry; corrupt.

It is in the work of Robert of Gloucester written luther. Dr. Johnson. — Chaucer also uses it in the sense of wicked; but its more general acceptation is that of slothful, lazy, idle, indisposed to do any thing; which the Saxon word warrants. It is used in the north of England.

Nis lyther in business, ferovete in spiritie.

Woolton, Chr. Manual, (1576.) K. vi.

Winter making men lithet and idle.

Lary, lithet, idle, slothful, careless, negligent.

Colgrave, and Sherwood.

LITHETLY.* adv. [from lithet.] Slowly; lazily.

Lithetly, and Cockeram.

LITHETNESS.* n. s. [from lithet.] Idleness; laziness; lack of spirit to do any thing.

Barret, Colgrave, and Sherwood.

LITHOGRAPHY. n. s. [litho, and grapho.]

The art or practice of engraving upon stones.

LITHOMANCY. n. s. [litho, and man.]

Prediction by stones.

As strange must be the lithomancy, or divination, from this stone, whereby Heleus the prophet foretold the destruction of Troy.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

LITHONTRIPTICK. adj. [litho, and triptik.]

lithontriptique, Fr.] Any medicine proper to dissolve the stone in the kidneys or bladder.

LITHOTOMIST. n. s. [litho, and tomos.] A chirurgeon who extracts the stone by opening the bladder.

LITHOTOMY. n. s. [litho, and tomos.] The art or practice of cutting for the stone.

LITHY.* adj. [from lithet.] Pliable; bending easily.

Huolot.

LITIGANT. n. s. [litigans, Latin; litigant, French.] One engaged in a suit of law.

The cast litigant sits not down with one cross verdict, but recommends his suit.

Decay of Chr. Piety.

The litigant tear one another to pieces for the benefit of some third interest. L'Estrange, Fab.

LITIGANT. adj. Engaged in a juridical contest.

Judicial acts are those writings and matters which relate to judicial proceedings, and are sped in open court at the instance of one or both of the parties litigant. Ayliffe, Parergon.

TO LITIGATE.* v. a. [litigo, Latin.] To contest in law; to debate by judicial process; to bring into litigation.

What scruples, lest some future birth
Should designate a span of earth. Shenstone.

TO LITIGATE. v. n. To manage a suit; to carry on a cause.

The appellant, after the interposition of an appeal, still litigates in the same cause.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

LITIGATION. n. s. [litigatio, Latin; from litigare.] Judicial contest; suit of law.

Never one clergyman had experience of both litigations, that both not confound, he had rather have three suits in Westminster-hall, than one in the arches. Clerendon.

LITIGIOUS. adj. [litigieux, French.]

1. Inclined to law-suits; quarrelsome; wrangling.

Soldiers find wars, and lawyers find still litigious men, who quarrels move. Dome.

His great application to the law, had not infected his temper with any thing positive of litigious. Adams.

2. Disputable; controvertible.

In litigious and controverted causes, the will of God is to have them to do whatsoever the sentence of judicial and final decision shall determine.

Hodder, bounds.

No fences parted fields, nor marks nor bounds,
Distinguish'd acres of litigious grounds.

Dryden, Georg.

LITIGIOUSLY. adv. [from litigious.] Wranglingly.

LITIGIOUSNESS.* n. s. [from litigious.] A wrangling disposition; inclination to vexatious suits.

Dr. Smalridge, who succeeded him [Atterbury] both at Carlisle and Christchurch, is said to have lamented his hard fate, in being forced to carry water after him, to extinguish the flames which his litigiousness had every where occasioned.

Storhouse.

LITEN.* n. s. [litcan, Saxon, a burying ground; from lic, a corpse, lit, Su. Goth. and tun, Icel. tuna, Su. Goth. a field, an enclosed place.] A place where the dead are reposit: the church-lit is yet an expression in several parts of England.

LITTEK. n. s. [liiter, French.]

1. A kind of vehicular bed; a carriage capable of containing a bed hung between two horses.

 That draw the litter of close-curtain'd sleep.

Here modest matrons in soft litters driv'n,
 In solemn pomp appear. Dryden, Æn.

Litters thick besiege the donor's gate,
 And begging lords and teeming ladies wait
 The prince's dale. Dryden, Jun.

2. The straw laid under animals, or on plants.
 To crouch in litter of your stable planks.

Take off the litter from your kernel bed.

Their litter is not tow'd by sows unclean.

3. A brood of young.
 I do here walk before thee like a sow that hath overwhelmed all her litter but one.

Reflect upon that numerous litter of strange, senseless opinions that crawl about the world.

A wolf came to a sow, and very kindly offered to take care of her litter.

Full many a year his hateful head had been
 For tribute paid, nor since in Cambria seen:
 The last of all the litter 'scap'd by chance,
 And from Geneva first infected France. Dryden.

4. A birth of animals.
 Fruitful as the sow that carry'd
 The thirty pigs at one large litter farrow'd.

5. Any number of things thrown sluttishly about.
 Stripyon, who found the room was void,
 Sole in, and took a select survey
 Of all the litter as it lay.

To LIT'TER, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To bring forth; used of beasts, or of human beings in abhorrence or contempt.
 Then was this island,
 Save for the son that she did litter here,
 A freckled whelp, hag-born, not honour'd with
 A human shape.

My father named me Autolyces, being littered under Mercury, who, as I am, was likewise a snapper up of unconsidered trifles.

The whole of bears are, at first littered, without all form or fashion. Hawkins on Providence.

We might conceive that dogs were created blind, because we observe they were littered so with us.

2. To cover with things negligently, or sluttishly scattered about.
 They found

The room with volumes litter'd round.

 cowhouse.

By Williams, Discov. of Mtd. (1663) p. 977.
 He found a stall where oxen stood,
 But for his once well litter'd was the floor.

4. To supply cattle with bedding.
 Tell them how they litter their jades and exercise merchandise.

Hacker's Life of Alp. Williams, (1693) P. ii. p. 80.
 To LIT'TER, v. n. To be supplied with bedding.

The inn,
 Where he and his horse litter'd.

LIT'TLE, adj. comp. less, and lesser;
 superl. leisile, Goth. liti, Icel.

lycel, Sax. "consent. reliquis dialect.
 Septentrionalibus." Serenius.]

1. Small in extent.
 The coast of Dan went out too little for them.

2. Not great; small; diminutive; of small bulk.
 He sought to see Jesus, but could not for the press, because he was little of stature.

His son being then very little, I considered only as war, to be moulded as one pleases. Locke.

One would have all things little; hence has try'd
 Turkey poults, fresh from th' egg, in batter fry'd.

3. Of small dignity, power, or importance.
 When thou wast little in thine own sight, wast thou not made the head of the tribes?

He was a very little gentleman. Clarendon.
 All that is just ought to seem little to thee,
 because it is so to itself.

4. Not much; not many.
 He must be loosed a little season. Revelations.

A little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleep; so shall poverty come upon thee.

And now in little space
 The confines meet.

By sad experiment I know
 How little weight my words with thee can find.

A little learning is a dangerous thing
 Drink deep, or taste not the Persian spring.

5. Some not none: in this sense it always stands between the article and the noun.

I leave him to reconcile these contradictions, which may plentifully be found in him, by any one who will but read with a little attention.

LIT'TLE, n. s.
 1. A small space.
 Much was in little wit; and all convey'd
 With cautious care, for fear to be betray'd.

2. A small part; a small proportion.
 He that despised little things, shall perish by little and little.

The poor remnant of human seed which remained in their mountains, peopled their country again slowly, by little and little.

By freezing the precipitated matter from the rest by filtration, and diligently grinding the white precipitate with water, the mercury will little by little be gathered into drops.

I gave thee thy master's house, and the house of Israel and Judah; and if that had been too little, I would have given such and such things.

They have much of the poetry of Meccas,
 but little of his liberality.

Not grudge I thee too much that Grecians give,
 Nor murmur take the little I receive.

There are many expressions, which carrying with them no clear ideas, are like to remove but little of thy ignorance.

3. A slight affair.
 As if 'were little from their town to chase,
 I through the seas pursued their exil'd race.

I view with anger and disdain,
 How little gives thee joy or pain:

A hint, a bronze, a flower, a root.

4. Not much.
 These are fitted for, and little else.

5. Representation in a small compass;
 miniature; formerly common. Obsolete.

Give me leave to present you with her picture drawn in little, and in water colours; sullied indeed with tears and the abrupt accents of a real and consonant sorrow; but drawn with a faithful hand, and taken from the life.

Sp. Taylor, Dock of Fun. Ser. to Ld. Carkery, (1650.)

LIT'TLE, adv.
 1. In a small degree.

The received definition of names should be changed as little as possible.

2. In a small quantity.

 endure him with conversative qualities of youth;
 as dancing and fencing.

That patient was infamously bold; this parallel is little better.

Several clergymen, otherwise little fond of obscure terms, yet in their sermons were very liberal of all those which they find in ecclesiastical writers.

LIT'TLENESS, n. s. [from little.]
 1. Smallness of bulk.

All trying, by a love of *little*ness,
 To make abridgements, and to draw to less;

Ev'n that nothing which at first we were.

We may suppose a great many degrees of little- ness and lightness in these early practices, so many of them might float in the air.

2. Meanness; want of grandeur.
 The English and French, lo verse, are forced to raise their language with metaphors, by the pompouness of the whole phrase, to wear off any *little*ness that appears in the particular parts.

3. Want of dignity.
 The angelic grandeur, by being concealed, does not awaken our poverty, nor mortify our *little*ness so much, as if it was always displayed.

LIT'TORAL, adj. [littoralis, Latin.] Belonging to the shore.

LITUR'GICAL, * adj. [liturgique, Fr. See LITUR'GICK.]

LITUR'GICK, * adj. [liturgique.] Belonging to a formula of public devotions.

Which lesson, if it had been well pressed by those that take on them to be somewhat gifted above their brethren, and observed better by their zealous followers, we should have had little need of such surgical deprecations.

6p. Prudent, Euch. p. 228.
 A tedious number of liturgical theologues.

Thus our liturgical version translates rightly,
 "The king shall rejoice."

Mason, on Church Music, p. 168.
 The rest of the liturgical hymns were supposed to be contaminated by their long and antient connection with the Roman mind.

Watson, Hist. E. P. iii. 166.
 LITURGY, * n. s. [liturgie, French; liturgia, Greek, from lairein, publick,
 and tyron, work.] Form of prayers;
 formula of public devotion.

We dare not admit any such form of livary, as either appoints to scripture at all, or very little, to be read in the church. Hooker.

The blessedest of mortal wights began to be impetioned, so that a great part of divine livary was addressed solely to her. Hooker.

It is the greatest solemnity of prayer, the most powerful livary and means of impetration in this world. By Taylor.

To LIVE† v. n. [Gothick, liban; Icel. lifa; Sax. liban, liban, liban; Germ. and Dutch, leben.]

1. To be in a state of animation; to be not dead.

Is't night's predominance, or the day's shame,
That darkness does the face of earth invest,
When living day should light it? Shallop. Macbeth.

To save the living and revenge the dead,
Against one warrior's arms all Troy they led. Dryden.

2. To pass life in any certain manner with regard to habits; good or ill, happiness or misery.

O death, how bitter is the remembrance of thee to a man that liveth at rest! Ecclus. xli. 1.
Dr. Parker, in his sermon before them, touched them so near for their living, that they went near to touch him for his life. Haywood.

The condition required of us is a conjuncture of all gospel graces rooted in the heart, though mixed with much weakness, and perfected with many sins, so they be not willfully lived and died in. Hommond.

If we act by several broken views, we shall live and die in misery. Addison, Spect.

If we are firmly resolved to live up to the dictates of reason, without any regard to wealth and reputation, we may go through life with steadiness and pleasure. Addison.

3. To continue in life.

Our high-placed Macbeth
Shall live the less of nature, and pay his breath
To time and mortal custom. Shakespeare.

See the minutes how they run;
How many makes the hour fall complete,
How many hours bring about the day,
How many days will finish up the year,

How many years a mortal man may live. Shallop.
The way to live long most be, to use our bodies as so is most agreeable to the rules of temperance. Bay on the Crostkin.

4. To live emphatically; to be in a state of happiness.

What greater curse could envious fortune give Than just to die when I began to live? Dryden.
Now three-and-thirty rolling years are fled
Since I began, nor yet begin to live. Brown.

Live while you live, the epicure would say,
And seize the pleasures of the present day;
Live while you live, the sacred preacher cries,
And give to God each moment as it flies;
Lord, in my views let both united be;
I live in pleasure, when I live to thee. Doddridge, in Orton's Life of him.

5. To be exempt from death, temporal or spiritual.

My statutes and judgements, if a man do, he shall live in them. Lev. xviii. 5.
He died for us, that whether we wake or sleep, we should live together with him. 1 Thes. v. 10.

6. To remain undestroyed.

It was a miraculous providence that could make a vessel, so ill manned, live upon sea; that kept it from being dashed against the hills, or overwhelmed in the deeps. Burnet.

Mark how the shifting winds from west arise,
And what collected night involves the skies!
Nor can our shaken vessels live at sea,
Much less against the tempest force their way. Dryden.

How a vessel, formed according to the description given of the structure of the ark, could live, as the seamen's phrase is, in such a tempest of waters. Biblioth. Biblica, Opf. l. 230.

7. To continue; not to be lost.

Men's evil manners live in brass, their virtues
We write in water. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.
Sounds which address the ear are lost and die
In one short hour; but that which strikes the eye
Lives long upon the mind; the faithful sight
Engraves the knowledge with a beam of light. Watts.

The tomb with manly arms and trophies graced,
There high in air memorial of my name
Fix the smooth ear, and bid me live to fame. Pope.

8. To converse; to cohabit; followed by with.

The shepherd swains shall dance and sing,
For thy delight each May morning.
If these delights thy mind may move,
Then live with me, and be my love. Shakespeare.

9. To feed.

Those animals that live upon other animals have their flesh more alkaline than that live upon vegetables. Arbuthnot.

10. To maintain one's self; to be supported.

A most notorious thief; lived all his life-time of spoils and robberies. Spenser.
They which minister about holy things, live of the things of the temple. 1 Cor. ix. 13.
His goods were all seized upon, and a small portion thereof appointed for his poor wife to live upon. Kneller.

The number of soldiers can never be great in proportion to that of people, no more than that of those that are idle in a country, to that of those who live by labour. Temple.

He had been most of his time in good service, and had something to live on now he was old. Temple.

11. To be in a state of motion or vegetation.

In a spacious cave of living stone,
The tyrant Æolus, from his airy throne,
With power imperial curbs the struggling winds. Dryden.

Cool groves and living lakes
Give after toilsome days a soft repose at night. Dryden.

12. To be unextinguished.

Pure oil and incense on the fire they throw:
These gifts the greedy flames to dust devour,
Then on the living coals red wine they pour. Dryden.

LIVE† adj. [from alive.]

1. Quick; not dead.

If one man's ox hurt another that he die, they shall sell the live ox, and divide the money. Exodus.

2. Active; not extinguished.

A louder sound was produced by the impetuous eruptions of the halituous flames of the sulphure, upon casting of a live coal upon it. Boyle.

By thee the various vegetative tribes
Draw in a filmy net, and clasp with leavers,
Wrap the live elder, and imbibe the dew. Thomson, Spring.

3. Vivid; spoken of colour.

Now from the virgin's cheek a fresher bloom
Shoots, less and less, the life carnation round;
Her lips blush deeper sweets. Thomson, Spring.

LIVE† n. s. Life. Obsolete. See ALIVE.

LIV'LESS† adj. [from life.] Wanting life; rather, lifeless.

Description cannot suit itself in words,
To demonstrate the life of such a battle,
In life so livless as it shows itself. Shaks. Hen. V.

A livless, cadaverous, noisome soul.

Hommond, Works, iv. 562.

LIV'ELIHOOD† n. s. [It appears to me corrupted from livecode. Dr. Johnson.]
— In the first sense, which is all that Dr. Johnson notices, this may be the case; but, in the second, it is from lively, and head, or hood, i. e. quality, character. See HOOD.]

1. Support of life; maintenance; means of living.

Ab! luckless babe, born under cruel star,
And in dead parents' hateful womb bred;
Full little wretchest thou what sorrows ares,
Left thee for portion of thy livelihood. Spenser, F. Q.

That rebellion drove the lady from thence, to find a livelihood out of her own estate. Clarendon.
He brings disgrace upon his character to submit to the picking up of a livelihood that strolling way of canting and begging. L'Estrange.

It is their profusion and livelihood to get their living by practices for which they deserve to forfeit their lives. South.

They have been as often banished out of most other places; which must very much dispose a people, and oblige them to seek a livelihood where they can find it. Addison, Spect.

Trade employs multitudes of hands, and furnishes the poorest of our fellow-subjects with the opportunities of gaining an honest livelihood; the skilful or industrious find their account in it. Addison, Freeholder.

2. Living form; appearance of life. Spenser writes it lively-head.

If in that picture dead
Such life ye read, and virtue in vain show;
Of that more ye were, if the true lively-head
Of most glorious visage ye did view. Spenser, F. Q. II. ix. 3.

The tyranny of her sorrow takes all livelihood from her cheek. Shakespeare, All's Well.

LIV'ELLY† adv. See LIVELY.

LIV'ELINESS† n. s. [from lively.]

1. Appearance of life.

What hides while we are living, and among the livinghood, but that we may study to adorn our looks, so as may be most remote from a dreadfulness, and most agreeable by their liveliness to those with whom we live. Sp. Taylor, Art of Handing, p. 70.

That liveliness which is the proof of a poet's makes appear, may seem the living hand of nature. Dryden, DuRamey.

2. Vivacity; spiritliveness.

Give me that wit, whose praise excites, glory puts on, or disgrace grieves: he is to be nourished with ambition, pressed forward with honour, checked with reprehension, and never to be suspected of sloth; though he be given to play, it is a sign of spirit and liveliness. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

Extravagant young fellows, that have liveliness and spirit, come sometimes to be set right, and on make able and great men; but, save and low spirits very seldom attain to any thing. Locke on Education.

LIV'ELUDE† n. s. [live and lode, from lead; the means of leading life. Kellham places livecode among his old French words.] Maintenance; support; livelihood.

She gave like blessing to each creature

As well of worldly livelihood as of life,

That there might be no difference 'twixt us and life. Spenser, Habb. Tale.

Temporal goods they had more than their needed reasonable to their necessary livelihood. Fos. Acts and Mon. of W. Thorne.

LIV'ELONG. adj. [live and long.]

1. Tedious; long in passing.

May a time, and oft,

Have you climb'd up to walls and battlements,

Your infants in your arms; and there have sat

The livelong day, with patient expectation

To see great Pompey pass. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

The obscure bird clamour'd the livelong night.

Shakespeare.

Young and old come forth to play,

On a sun-shine holiday,

Till the livelong daylight fall. Milton, L'Al.

Seek for pleasure in dovery

The sorrows of this livelong night. Prior.

How could she sit the livelong day,

Yet never ask us once to play? Swift.

2. Lasting; durable. Not used.

Thou, in our wander and astonishment,

Hast built thyself a livelong monument.

Milton, En. on Shakespeare.

LIV'ELY. adj. [live and like. Sax. līpce.]

1. Brisk; vigorous; vivacious.

But wherefore comes old Manoa in such haste,

With youthful steps? much livelier than he while

He seems; supposing here to find his son,

Or of him bringing to us some glad news? Milton, E. A.

2. Gay; airy.

Dulness delighted, ey'd the lively dance,

Remembering she herself was pertness once. Pope.

Farm'd by thy converse, happily to sever

From grave to gay, from lively to serene. Pope.

3. Representing life.

Since a true knowledge of nature gives us pleasure, a lively imitation of it in poetry or painting must produce a much greater. Dryden, Dryden.

4. Strong; energetic.

His fish must be not only living, but lively too;

it must be brightened and stirred up by a particular exercise of those virtues specifically requisite to a due performance of this duty. South.

The colours of the prism are manifestly more full, intense, and lively, than those of natural bodies. Newton, Newton.

Imprint upon their minds, by proper arguments and reflections, a lively persuasion of the certainty of a future state. Atterbury.

LIV'ELY. adv.

1. Briskly; vigorously.

They brought their men to the slough, who discharging lively almost close to the face of the enemy, did much amaze them. Hayward.

2. With strong resemblance of life.

That part of poetry must needs be best, which describes most lively our actions and passions, our virtues and our vices. Dryden, Pref. to his St. of Innocence.

In which time of remission of the higher powers,

the lower may advance, and more lively display themselves. Glenville, Pre-cant. p.115.

This sacrament of the eucharist is lively resembles, and so lively falls in with it, that it is indeed itself a supper, and is called a supper. South, Ser. II. 276.

LIV'ER. n. s. [from live.]

1. One who lives.

Be thy affections undisturb'd and clear,

Guided to what may great or good appear,

And try if life be worth the liv'er's care. Prior.

2. One who lives in any particular manner with respect to virtue or vice, happiness or misery.

If any loose liv'er have any goods of his own,

the sheriff is to seize thereupon. Speaner an Interl.

The end of his descent was to gather a church of holy christian liv'ers over the whole world. Hammond.

Here are the wants of children, of distressed persons, of sturdy wandering beggars and loose disorderly liv'ers, at one view represented. Atterbury.

LIV'ER. n. s. [live, Saxon.] One of the entrails.

With mirth and laughter let old wrinkles come:

And let my liv'er rather bend with wine,

Than my heart cool with mortifying gourne. Shakespeare.

Reason and respect

Makes liv'ers pale, and lusthood dojected. Shaks.

LIV'ERCOLOUR. adj. [liv'er and colour.]

Dark red.

The uppermost stratum is of gravel; and then clay of various colours, purple, blue, red, &c. Woodward.

LIV'ER'D. adj. Having a liver; as,

"white-liv'erd." Sherwood. "Lilyliv'erd." Shakespeare. Both these expressions were used to denote faint-hearted, cowardly, mean, dastardly, unmanly.

LIV'ERGROWN. adj. [liv'er and grown.]

Having a great liver.

I enquired what other casualties was most like the rickets, and found that liv'ergrown was nearest. Gravet.

LIV'ERWORT. n. s. [liv'er and wort; lichen.]

A plant.

That sort of liv'ermort which is used to cure the bite of mad dogs, grows on commons, and open heaths, where the grass is short, on declivities, and on the sides of pits. This spreads on the surface of the ground, and, when in perfection, is of an ash colour; but, as it grows old, it alters, and becomes of a dark colour. Miller.

LIV'ERY. n. s. [from liv'er, French.]

1. The act of giving possession. Liv'ery and seisen is delivery and possession.

She gladly did of that name babe accept,

As of her own by liv'ery and seisen. Spenser, P. Q. iv. l. 87.

You do wrongfully seize Hereford's right,

Call in his letters patents that he hath

By his attorneys general in use

His liv'ery, and deny his offered homage. Shaks.

2. It is from wardrobe.

Had the two houses first used their liv'ery, and once effectually redeemed themselves from the wardship of the tumults, I should then suspect my own judgement. King Charles.

3. The writ by which possession is obtained.

4. The state of being kept at a certain rate.

What liv'ery is, we by common use in England know well enough, namely, that it is allowance of horse-meat, as they commonly use the word in stabling; as, to keep horses at liv'ery; the which word, I guess, is derived of liv'ring or delivering forth their nightly food. So in great houses, the liv'ery is said to be served up for all night, that is, their evening allowance for drink; and liv'ery is also called the upper weed which a serving man wears; so called, as I suppose, for that it was delivered and taken from him at pleasure. So it is apparent, that, by the word liv'ery, is there meant horse-meat. Spenser on Ireland.

5. The clothes given to servants; from the scarfs or ribbonds, of chosen colours, given by the ladies of old to knights.

"To such [knights] as were victorious, prizes were awarded by the judges, and presented by the hands of the ladies—with ribbonds, or scarfs, of chosen colours, called liv'eries. Those liv'eries are the ladies' favours spoken of in romance;

and appear to have been the origin of the ribbonds, which still distinguish so many orders of knighthood." Brydson's

Summary View of Heraldry. From the old cavaliers wearing the liv'ery of their mistresses, the custom of people of quality making their servants wear a liv'ery, to denote service, is supposed to be derived.

Liv'ery, in former days, thus seems also to have been used for a cockade.

My mind for weeds your virtue's liv'ery wears. Shaks.

Perhaps they are by so much the more loth to forake this argument, for that it hath, though nothing else, yet the name of Scripture, to give it some kind of countenance more than the pretext of liv'ery costs affords. Hooker.

I think, it is our way,

If we will keep in favour with the king,

To be his men, and wear his liv'ery. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

Yet do our hearts wear Timon's liv'ery,

That see I by our faces. Shakespeare, Timon.

So 'ry lady cloak'd in white,

And crown'd with oak and laurel every knight,

Are servants to the lady, by liv'eries known

Of innocence. Dryden, Fl. and Lenf.

In others 're not her gay liv'ery flings,

're not that sways on party-colour'd dyes;

Tur'd in the sun she cast a thousand dyes,

And as she turns the colours fall or rise. Pope, Dunciad.

If your dinner miscarries, you were teased by the footmen coming into the kitchen; and to prove it true, show a halfpenny of broth on one or two of their liv'eries. Swift.

6. A particular dress; a garb worn as a token or consequence of any thing.

Of fair Urian, fairer than a green,

Prookly bedeck'd in April's liv'ery. Shaks.

Mistake me not for my complexion,

The shadow'd ivory of the burning sun,

To whom I am a neighbour, and near bred. Shaks.

At once came forth whatever creeps the ground,

Insect, or worm; to those wa'd their limber fans,

For wings, and smallest lineaments exact,

In all the liv'eries deck'd of summer's pride,

With spots of gold and purple, scarlet, green,

Milton, P. L.

Now came still evening on, and twilight grey

Had in her sober liv'ery all things clad. Milton, P. L.

It is very proper and humane to put ourselves, as it were, in their liv'ery after their decease, and wear a habit unsuitable to prosperity, while those we loved and honoured are mouldering in the grave. Tuller, No. 184.

7. [In London.] The collective body of liv'ermen.

To Liv'ery,* v. a. [from the noun.] To clothe in a liv'ery; to dress in a garment befoteking any thing.

His rudeness—

Did liv'ry falconers in a pride of truth.

Shakespeare, Love's Complaint.

A thousand liv'ried angles, lovely her.

Milton, Comus.

Our youth, all liv'ried o'er with liv'ry gold,

Before her dance'd. Pope, Epit. to Senn.

The pair arrive; the liv'ried servants wait;

Their lord receives them at the pompous gate. Parwell, Hermit.

LIV'ERYMAN. n. s. [liv'ery and man.]

1. One who wears a liv'ery; a servant of an inferior kind.

The witnesses made oath, that they had heard some of the liverners frequently railing at their ministers.

2. [In London.] A freeman of a company.
LIVES. n. s. [the plural of life.]

So short is life, that every peasant strives,
In a farm house or field, to have three lives.

LI'VID. adj. [lividus, Latin; livide, Fr.]
Discoloured, as with a blow; black and blue.

It was a pestilential fever, not seated in the veins or humours, for there followed no carbuncles, no purple or livid spots, the mass of the blood not being tainted.

Upon my livid lips become a kiss:
O envy not the dead, they need not bliss!
They beat their breasts with many a bruising blow,
Till they turn'd livid, and corrupt the snow.

LI'VIDITY. n. s. [lividité, French; from livid.] Discolouration, as by a blow.

The signs of a tendency to such a state, are darkness or lividity of the countenance.

LI'VIDNESS. * n. s. [from livid.] The state of being livid.

LI'VING. participle adj.

1. Vigorous; active; as, a living faith.
2. Being in motion; having some natural energy, or principle of action; as, the living green, the living springs.

LI'VING. n. s. [from live.]

1. Support; maintenance; fortune on which one lives.

The Areadias fought as in unknown place,
having no succour but in themselves; the Helots,
as in their own place, fighting for their lives,
wives, and children.

All they did cast of their abundance; but she of her want did cast in all that she had, even her living.

2. Power of continuing life.
There is no living without trusting somebody or other, in some cases.

3. Livelihood.

For ourselves we may a living make.

Then may I set the world on wheels, when he can spin for her living.

Isaac and his wife, now dig for your life,
Or shortly you'll dig for your living.

Actors must represent such things as they are capable to perform, and by which both they and the spectator may get their living.

4. Benefice of a clergyman.

Some of our ministers having the livings of the country offered unto them, without pains, will neither for any love of God, nor for all the good they may do, by winning souls to God, be drawn forth from their warm nests.

The parson of the parish preaching against adultery, Mrs. Hull told her husband, that they would join to have him turned out of his living for using personal reflections.

LI'VINGLY. adv. [from living.] In the living state.

In vain do they scruple to approach the dead,
who livingly are cadaverous, or fear any outward pollutions, whose temper pollutes themselves.

LI'VRE. n. s. [Fr.] The sum by which the French reckon their money, equal nearly to our ten-pence.

LI'VIAL. adj. [from livium, Latin.]

1. Impregnated with salts like a livium.
The symptoms of the excretion of the bile viated, were a yellowish colour of the skin, and a livid urine.

2. Obtained by livium.

Helmolt conjectured, that livial salts do not pre-exist in their alkaline form.

LI'VIATRE. * adj. [liviatre, French;
LI'VIATRE] from livium.] Making a livium.

In these the salt and liviatre serosity, with some portion of clover, is divided between the guts and the bladder.

LI'VIATRE salts to which pot-ashes belong, by piercing the bodies of vegetables, dispose them to part readily with their inure.

LI'VIPIUM. n. s. [Latin.] Lye; water impregnated with alkaline salt, produced from the ashes of vegetables; a liquor which has the power of extraction.

I made a livium of fair water and salt of wormwood, and laving from it with snow and salt, I could not discern any thing more like to wormwood than to several other plants.

LI'ZARD. n. s. [lizard, French; laceratus, Lat.] An animal resembling a serpent,
with legs added to it.

There are several sorts of lizards; some in Arabia of a cubit long. In America they eat lizards; it is very probable likewise that they eat in Arabia and Judaea, since Moses ranks them among the unclean creatures.

Thou'rt like a foul mis-shapen stigmata,
Mark'd by the destinies to be avoided,
As venomous toads, or lizards' dreadful stings.

Adder's fork, and blind worm's sting,
Lizard's leg, and owl's wing.

LI'ZARDTAIL. n. s. A plant.

LI'ZARDSTONE. n. s. [lizard and stone.] A kind of stone.

LI'L D. [legum doctor.] A doctor of the canon and civil laws.

Lo't interj. [In Saxon. Dr. Johnson.—
The imperative of look. So the common people say corruptly, 'lo' you there now; 'lo' you there.' Where we now employ sometimes lo, with discrimination, our old English writers used indifferently lo, loke, loke, for this imperative. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Parl. i.
478.] Look; see; behold. It is a word used to recal the attention generally to some object of sight; sometimes to something heard, but not properly; often to something to be understood.

'Lo' within a ken our army lies.
Now must the world point at poor Catherine,
And may, 'lo' there is mad Petruchio's wife.

'Lo' I have a weapon,
A better never did itself sustain
Upon a soldier's thigh.

I am yours for ever.
—Why lo you now, I've spoke to the purpose twice.

For lo! he sung the world's stupendous birth.

'Lo' heave'n and earth combine
To blast our bold design.

LOACH. n. s. [loche, Fr.]

The loach is a most dainty fish; he breeds and feeds in little and clear swift brooks or rills, and lives there upon the gravel, and in the sharpest streams: he grows not to be above a finger long, no thicker than is suitable to that length: he is of the shape of an eel, and has a beard of wattles like a barbel; he has two fins at his side, four at his belly, and one at his tail, dappled with many black or brown spots; his mouth, barbellike, under his nose. This fish is usually full of eggs or spawn, and is by Gesner, and other physicians, commended for great nourishment, and to be very grateful both to the palate and stomach of sick persons, and is to be fished for with a small worm, at the bottom, for he seldom rises above the gravel.

LOAD. n. s. [blat, Saxon; laban, to load.]

1. A burthen; a freight; lading.
Fair plait with fish surcharg'd,
Deignes noise to ease thy load, and taste thy sweet?

Then on his back he laid the precious load,
And sought his wonted shelter.

Let India boast her groves, nor envy we
The weeping arab, and the balmy tree;
While by our oaks the precious loads are born,
And realm commanded which these trees adorn.

2. Weight; pressure; encumbrance.
Jove lighten'd of its load
The enormous mass, the labour of a God.

3. Weight, or violence of blows.
Like iron mov'd they laid on load.
And made a cruel fight.

Far heavier load thyself expect to feel
From my prevailing arm.

And Menæchmus laid hard upon his latrin.

4. Any thing that depresses.
How a man can have a quiet and cheerful mind
under a great burden and load of guilt, I know not, unless he be very ignorant.

5. As much drink as one can bear.
There are those that can never sleep without their load, nor enjoy one easy thought, till they have laid all their cares to rest with a bottle.

The thundering god,
Ev'n he withdrew to rest, and laid his load.

To LOAD. v. a. preterite, loaded; par.
loaden or laden. [laban, Sax.]

1. To burden; to freight.
At last, laden with honour's spoils,
Returns the good Andronicus to Rome.

Your carriages were heavy loaded as they are a burden to the beast.

2. To encumber; to embarrass.
He that makes no reflections on what he reads, only loads his mind with a rhapsody of titles, fit in winter nights for the entertainment of others.

3. To charge a gun.
A mariner having discharged his gun and loading it suddenly again, the powder took fire.

4. To make heavy by something appended or annexed.
The dreadful row, laden with death, still sounds
In my stupor's ear.

LOAD. n. s. [more properly lade, as it was anciently written from laban, Saxon, to lead.] The leading vein in a mine.

The tin lay couched at first in certain strakes amongst the rocks, like the veins in a man's body, from the depth whereof the main load spreadeth out his branches, until they approach the open air.

Their manner of working in the lead mines, is to follow the load as it lieth.

LO'ADER. * n. s. [from load.] One who loads.

Every vice is a loader, but that's a ten.

Dryden, Arg. to Juv. Sat. 6.

Lo'ADMANAG. * n. s. [labman, Saxon, a pilot or guide; and age, the French termination of nouns: it would have been more English, as Mr. Tyrwhitt has observed, to say lodmanship; as, seaman-ship, horsemanship, &c.] In the statute 3 Geo. I. c. 13. loadmanage is repeatedly used in the sense of pilotage. Chaucer describes his shipman's lodmanage, which the Glossary to Urry's edition of the poet calls "the skill or art of navigation."

Lo'ADSMAN. * n. s. [lade and man; from to lead; Saxon, labman; Su. Goth. loadsmann. See LOADSTAR.] He who leads the way; a pilot.

Asking them anon,
If they were broken, or sought wo-begon,
Or had need of loadsmen.

Chaucer, Leg. of Hops, and Medes.
Loadsmen and mayneris, in all things redy.
March, Sec. Title, or Hist. of Beryn.

Lo'ADSTAR. * n. s. [more properly, as it is in Maundeville, lodestar, from leban, to lead.] The polestar; the cynosure; the leading or guiding star.

She was the loadstar of my life; she the blessing
Of mine eyes; she the overcloud of my desires,
And yet the recompence of my overbrow. Sidney.
My Helice, the loadstar of my life. Spenser.

O happy fair!

Your eyes are loadstars, and your tongue sweet air,
More tunable than lark to shepherd's ear
When wheat is green, when lawns burn buds appear. Shakespeare.

That clear majesty
Which standeth fix'd, yet spreads her heavenly worth,
Lodestone to hearts, and loadstar to all eyes. Darwin.

Lo'ADSTONE. * n. s. [properly lodestone or leadingstone. See LOADSTAR.] The magnet; the stone on which the mariner's compass needle is touched to give it a direction north and south.

The lodestone is a peculiar and rich ore of iron, found in large masses, of a deep iron-grey where fresh broken, and often tinged with a brownish or reddish colour; it is very heavy, and considerably hard, and its great character is that of affecting iron. This ore of iron is found in England, and in most other places where there are mines of that metal. Hill, Mat. Medica.

The use of the lodestone was kept as secret as any of the other mysteries of the art. Suff.

LoaD. * n. s. [from laie or laif, Saxon, Dr. Johnson. — So the M. Goth. laibis, laibis; Su. Goth. laif, as noticed by Serenius; to which Dr. Jamieson adds the Germ. laib; Icelandic laif, laif; Fenn. leipa; Lappon. leab; Fris. leef, leef; low Latin, leibo; Latin, libum. Mr. H. Tooke contends, that loaf is the past participle of the Saxon laiban, to raise; and means merely raised; as the M. Goth. laibis is the same participle of laiban, to raise or lift up. Dr. Jamieson refers the word to the Germ. laib, and the cognate terms denoting life; bread being almost universally considered as "the staff of life," but at the same time admits the ingenuity of Mr. Tooke's theory as far as it applies to loaf, viz. "After the bread has been wetted, by which it becomes dough; then comes the leaven, which in the Saxon is termed hæf and hæpen; by which it becomes loaf." Div. of Purl. ii. 157. — Lye considers the Goth laiban, which strictly means to sustain, as derived from laiba, bread. And Leigh speaks of the Saxon laef, to sustain. See LoRD.]

1. A mass of bread as it is formed by the baker: a loaf is thicker than a cake.

Easy it is
Of a cut loaf to steal a shive we know. Shakespeare.
The bread corn in the towns suffered not for six days: herupon the soldiers entered into proportion; and, to give example, the lord Clinton limited himself to a loaf a day. Hayward.
With equal force you may break a loaf of bread into more and less parts than a lump of lead of the same bigness. Digby.

2. Any thick mass into which a body is wrought.

Your wine becomes so limpid, that you may bottle it with a piece of loaf sugar in each bottle. Merrimer.

LoAM. * n. s. [Jim, laam, Saxon; limus, Latin; from laipo, a fen. Junius.] Fat, unctuous, tenacious clay; marl.

The purest treasure
Is spotless reputation; that away,
Met are but gilded loam or painted clay. Shakspeare.
Alexander returns to dust; the dust is earth; of earth we make loam; and why of that loam might they not stop a beer barrel?

We wash a wall of loam; we labour in vain.
Hooker on Religion, § 19.

To LoAM. * v. a. [from the noun.] To smear with loam, marl, or clay; to clay. The joint ends, and girders which be in the walls, must be loamed all over, to preserve them from the corroding of the mortar.

Mason, Mech. Exercises.

Lo'AMY. * adj. [from loam.] 1. Marly.

The mellow earth is the best, between the two extremes of clay and sand, if it be not loamy and binding.

Auricular seedlings best like a loamy sand, or light moist earth; yet rich and shaded. Evelyn, Kul.

2. Smeared with loam.

Petters of gold are but fetters; and the peasant that from his loamy cottage is carried prisoner to a stately castle, though for his homely stall he changes the exchange of a princely building, yet he batters his golden liberty for iron shackles. Haynt, Serm. (1658), p. 195.

LoAN. * n. s. [hlen, Saxon, Dr. Johnson. — Su. Goth. laen; vox usitatissima. Serenius. Icel. the same. M. Goth. laun, merces, remuneratio; leiguan, to lend; whence laena, Su. Goth. leenen, Dutch, and lennan, Saxon, to lend; of which last Mr. H. Tooke pronounces loan to be the past participle.] Any thing lent; any thing given to another, on condition of return or repayment.

The better such ancient revenues may be paid, the less need your majesty ask subsidies, fiorens, and loans. Bacon.

You're on the first,
Because, in so debauch'd and vile an age,

Thy friend and old acquaintance dares discern
The gold you lent him, and forswear the loan.

To LoAN. * v. a. [lænan, Saxon.] To lend. Not now in use. "Loned, mutuos, lent." Huloot.

He delivers up his people to their enemies, sometimes by way of location, loan, or letting; sometimes again by vendition, sale, or utter alienation: By way of location, or loving them out: so we shall read in the Book of Judges; He did often let out his people to the oppressor for their sins. Longius, Serm. (1644), p. 20.

Lo'ANING. * v. z. See LoNE, LoNIN.

LoATH. * adj. [læð, Saxon, Dr. Johnson. — Almost all the citations given by Dr. Johnson, have loath, yet loath is certainly preferable for the sake of preserving the analogy between it and to loathe, unless it be thought better to write that word lothe. The original Saxon laes leaves this matter uncertain. Nares, Elem. of Orthoepey, p. 298.] Unwilling; disliking; not ready; not inclined.

These fresh and delightful brooks, how slowly they slide away, as loath to leave the company of so many things united in perfection! Sidney.

With lofty eyes, half lost to look so low,
She thanked them in her disdainful wise,
No other grace vouchsafed them to show
Of princess worthy. Spenser, F. Q.
When he heard her answers loath, he knew
Some secret sorrow did her heart distress. Spenser, F. Q.

To speak so indirectly, I am loath;
I'd say the truth; but to accuse him so,
That is your part. Shakespeare, Measure for Measure.
Long doth she stay, as loath to leave the land,
From whose soft side the first did issue make,
She tastes all places, turns to ev'ry hand,
Her slowest banks unwilling to forsake. Darwin.

Then will thou not be loath
To leave the paradise but to possess
A paradise within thee, happier far! Milton, P. L.
To pardon willing, and to punish loath;
You strike with one hand, but you heal with both;
Lifting up that one that prostrate lies, you grieve
You cannot make the dead again to live. Wallen.

When Kæna is forced to kill Lausus, the poet shows him compassionate, and is loath to destroy such a master-piece of nature. Dryden, Duferney.
As some fatal pilgrim standing on the shore,
First views the terrace he was to venture on;
And then his inn upon the farther ground,
Loth to wade through, and loth to go round:
Then dipping in his staff does trial make
How deep it is; and, sighing, pulls it back. Dryden.

I know you shy to be oblig'd;
And still more loath to be oblig'd by me. Southern.
To LoATHIE. * v. a. [læthin, Saxon; to detect.]

1. To hate; to look on with abhorrence. Parthenia had learned both liking and misliking, loving and loathing. Sidney.

They with their flintiness
Polluted this name gentle soft long time,
That their own mother loath'd their baselines. Spenser.

How am I caught with an unwary oath,
Not to reveal the secret which I loath.
For thee the lion lacerates the taste of blood,
And roaring huns his fennale through the wood. Dryden.

Now his exalted spirit loathes
Incumbances of food and cloaths. Suff.

2. To consider with the disgust of satiety. Loathing the honey'd cakes, I long for bread. Cowley.

Our appetite is distinguished with the satisfaction, and is succeeded by loathing and satiety. Rayna.

3. To see food with dislike.

Loathing is a symptom known to attend disorders of the stomach; the cure must have regard to the cause. Quincy.

To LOATHET v. n.

1. To create disgust; to cause abhorrence. Obsolete, Dr. Johnson says, citing a corrupted passage from Spenser, viz. "And loathing paddocks," where the true reading is, "And loathed paddocks," i. e. detested paddocks, not paddocks creating disgust. See the edition of Spenser's Works in 1805, vol. i. p. 199.

2. To feel abhorrence or disgust.

The fish in the river shall die, and the river stink; and the Egyptians shall loathe to drink of the water. Eschus.

Why do I stay within this hated place,
Where every object shocks my loathing eyes? Rowe.

LO'ATHER.† n. s. [from loath.] One that loathes. Sherwood.

LO'ATHFUL. adj. [loath and full.]

1. Abhorring; hating.

Which he did with loathful eyes behold,
He would no more endure. Spenser, Heb. Tale.

2. Abhorred; hated.

Above the reach of loathful sinful lust,
Whose base effect, through cowardly distrust
Of his weak wriogs, dare not to heaven lift. Spenser.

LO'ATHING. n. s. [from loath.] Disgust; disinclination; unwillingness; aversion to.

A loathing and detestation of the unjust and tyrannous rule of Harold. Spenser on Ireland.

I can give no reason for my loathing.
More than a lodge'd hate, and a certain loathing,
I bear Antioch. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

On nuptial cinders this receives the fire,
And turns their mutual loathings to desire.

Congreve, Am. Sat. 11.

LO'ATHINGLY. adv. [from loath.] In a fastidious manner.

LO'ATHLINESS. n. s. [from loathly.] What excites hatred or abhorrence.

The lesson [of matters historical] is as it were the mirror of man's life, expressing actually (and as it were at the eye) the beauty of virtue, and the deformity and loathsomeness of vice.

See T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 306. b.
The more ill savour and loathsomeness we can find in our bosom sins, the nearer we come to the purity of that Holy One of Israel, our Blessed Redeemer. Bp. Hall, Rev. p. 168.

LO'ATHLY.† adj. [loath, Saxon.] Hateful; abhorred; exciting hatred.

Thou art so loathly, and so old also.

Chaucer, Wife of Bath's Tale.

An huge great dragon, horrible in sight,
Brod in the loathly lakes of Tartary,
With murder'd ravins. Spenser, F. Q.

The people fear us; for they do observe Unfather'd heirs, and loathly heirs of nature. Shakespeare.

Sour-ey'd disdain, and discord shall bestow
The union of your bed with weeds so loathly,
That you shall hate it. Shakespeare, Tempest.

LO'ATHLY. adv. [from loath.] Unwillingly; without liking or inclination.

The upper streams make such haste to have their part of embreining, that the softer, though loathly must needs give place unto them. Sidney.

Loathly opposite I stood
To his unseasonal purpose. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

This shews that you from nature loathly stray,
That suffer not an artificial day. Donne.

LO'ATHNESS. n. s. [from loath.] Unwillingness.

The fair soul herself
Weigh'd the loathsomeness and obedience,
Which end the beam should bow. Shaks. Tempest.
Should we be taking leave,
As long a term as yet we have to live,
The loathsomeness to depart would grow. Shaks. Cymb.
After they had sat about the fire, there grew a general silence and loathsomeness to speak amongst them; and immediately one of the weakest fell down in a swoon. Batoon.

LO'ATHSOME. adj. [from loath.]

1. Abhorred; detestable.

The fresh young fly
Did much disdain to subject its desire
To loathsomeness cloth, or hours in ease to waste. Spenser.

While they pervert pure nature's healthfulness
To loathsomeness sickness. Milton, P. L.

If we consider man in such a loathsomeness and provoking condition, why is not love enough that he was permitted to enjoy a being? South.

2. Causing satiation or fastidiousness.

The sweetest honey
Is loathsomeness in its own deliciousness,
And in the taste confounds the appetite. Shaks.

LO'ATHSOMELY.† adv. [from loathsomeness.] So as to excite hatred or disgust.

What need I tell you how loathsomeness deformed these fashions of the world make us to appear in the sight of God? Bp. Hall, Fashions of the World.
Neither disdaineth he to enter into the poorest cottage, though he even creep into it, and though it smell never so loathsomeness.

Herbert, Country Parson, ch. 14.

LO'ATHSOMENESS.† n. s. [from loathsomeness.] Quality of raising hatred, disgust, or abhorrence.

The loathsomeness of them [rags] offends me more than the stripes I have received. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

Take her skin from her face, and thou shall see all loathsomeness under it.

Burton, Anat. of Med. p. 566.

The catenaculi must have been [full of stretch and loathsomeness], if the dead bodies that lay in them were left to rot in open niches. Addison.

LOAVES, plural of loaf.

Demetrius, when he lay a dying, caused loaves of new bread to be opened, poured a little wine into them; and so kept himself alive with the odour till a feast was past. Bicon.

LOB.† n. s. [perhaps of the same origin as looby. See LOOBY.]

1. Any one heavy, clumsy, or sluggish; a clown.

Find Esau such a leut or lob.
Forthwith of Jacob and Esau. (1568.)

Farwell, thou lob of spirits, I'll begone,
Our queen and all her elves come here anon.

Shakespeare, Shakespeare.

This is the wonted way for quacks and cheats to gull country folk.

J. Gaudin, Anti-Basil-Drith, (1661), p. 12.

2. Lob's pound; a prison. Probably a prison for idlers or sturdy beggars.

Crowder, whom in leens bound,
Thou loathly threw'st into lob's pound. Hudibras.
If he can once compass him, and get him in lob's-pound, he'll make nothing of him, but speak him a few hard words to him, and perhaps bind him over to his good behaviour for a thousand years. Addison, Dissuader.

3. A big worm.

For the trout the dew worm, which some also call the lob worm, and the brandling are the chief.

Warton, Angler.

To LOB v. a. To let fall in a slovenly or lazy manner.

The horsemen sit like fixed castledicks, —

— And their poor jades

Lob down their heads, dropping the hides and hips.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

LOBBY. n. s. [laube, German.] An opening before a room.

His lobby fill with tendence,
Rain scurried whispering in his ear,
Make sacred even his stirrup. Shakespeare, Timon.

Before the duke's rising from the table, he stood expecting till he should pass through a kind of lobby between that room and the next, where were divers standing him. Walton.

Try your back stairs, and let the lobby wait,
A stranger in war is no deceit. King.

LOBBOCK. n. s. [from lob.] A word of contempt for a sluggish, stupid, inactive person; a lob. It is still a northern word. Sherwood.

Now neat, my gullant youths, farewell!
My lads that oft have cheer'd my heart!

My grief of mind no tongue can tell,
To think that I from you must part!

I oow must leave you all, alas,
And live with some old lobbok ass!

Bretton, Works of a Young Wai, (1577).

LOBE. n. s. [lobb French; λαβή.] A division; a distinct part; used commonly for a part of the lungs.

Nor could the lobes of his rank liver swell
To that prodigious mass for their eternal need. Dryden.

Air bladders form lobuli, which hang upon the bronchia like bunches of grapes; these lobuli constitute the lobes, and the lobes the lungs.

Arbuthnot, on Dissections.

LO'CAL. adj. [local, French; locus, Lat.]

1. Having the properties of place.

By ascending, after that the sharpness of death was overcome, he took the very local possession of glory, and that to the use of all that are here, even as myself before had witnessed, I go to prepare a place for you.

A higher flight the vent'rous goddess tries,
Leaving material world, and local skies. Prior.

2. Relating to place.

The circumference of local presence in them unto us, might imply enforce in us a duty of greater separation from them than from those other.

Hooker.

Where there is only a local circumstance of warship, the same thing would be worshipped supposing that circumstance changed.

Stillingfleet.

3. Being in a particular place.

Dream on thy flight,
As of a duel, or the loud wounds
Of head, or heel.

Milton, P. L.

How is the change of being sometimes here,
sometimes there, made by local motion in vacuum,
without a change in the body moved?

Digby on Bodies.

LOCALITY. n. s. [from local.] Existence in place; relation of place, or distance.

That the soul and angels are devoid of quantity and dimension; and that they have nothing to do with grosser locality, is generally opinioned.

Glanville.

Fond Fancy's eye,
That idly gives locality and form
To what she prizes best. Mason, Eng. Gard. B. 3.

These factions—weakened and distracted the locality of patriotism.

Burke, Thoughts on French Affairs.

LOCALITY. adv. [from local.] With respect to place.

Being succeeded into heaven he is locally there.

Confut. of N. Stanton, (1546.) E. iii. b.

O Saviour, whilst thou now sittest gloriously in heaven, thou dost not less impart thyself unto us, than if thou stoodst visibly by us, than if we stood locally by thee.

By. Hid. Contempl. B. 4.

Whether things in their natures so divers as body and spirit, which almost in nothing communicative, are not essentially divided, though not locally divided, I have to the readers. Glanville.

TO LOCATE. v. a. [loco, locatus, Lat.]
To place.

Under this roof the biographer of Johnson, and the pleasant tourist to Corcoran and the Hebrides, passed many jovial joyous hours; here he has located some of the liveliest scenes, and most important passages in his entertaining anecdotes of his friend Samuel Johnson.

Camden, Memoirs of himself.

LOCATION. n. s. [locatio, old Fr.; locatio, locatio, Lat.] Situation with respect to place; set of placing; state of being placed.

Any determinate location or position of the body.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 6.

To say that the world is somewhere, means no more than that it does exist; thus, though a phrase borrowed from place, signifying only its existence, not location.

Locke.

LOCUT. n. s. [Gael, loch; Irish, loch;
Welsh, lugh; Sax., luh; Lat., locus.]
A lake. Scottish. See LOUGH.

A lake or loch that has no fresh water running into it, will turn into a stinking puddle.

Cheyne, Phil. Principles.

LOCUS. n. s. [loch, French; but the word is originally Arabic.]

1. A liquid confection; a soft medicine, between a syrup and an electuary;
called lochet in our old lexicography;
and also locho, or lochoch, as it is also in French. See LOCHOCK.

2. In the plural, loches, the evacuations consequent on the delivery of a woman in child-bed. [loch, Saxon, Greek.]

LOCK. n. s. [lox, Saxon, the lock of a door; also an enclosure; and a tuft of hair. Serenius deduces it from the Goth., lukon, and Sax., luh, to shut up, to close; and so Mr. H. Tooke calls it the past participle of the latter. But Serenius also cites the West. Goth.
locka, to shut.]

1. An instrument composed of springs and bolts, used to fasten doors or chests.

VOL. II.

No gate so strong, no lock so firm and fast,
But with that piercing noise flew open quit or burst.

We have locks to safeguard necessities,
And pretty traps to catch the petty thieves.

Shakespeare.

As there are locks for several purposes, so are there several inventions in locks, in contriving their wards or guards.

Mason.

2. The part of the gun by which fire is struck.

A gun carries powder and bullets for seven charges and discharges: under the breach of the barrel is one bolt for the powder, a little before the lock another for the bullets; behind the cock a charger, which carries the powder to the further end of the lock.

Greene, Musarm.

3. A hug; a grapple.

They must be practiced in all the locks and grips of wrestling, as need may often be in fight to tug or grapple, and to close.

Milton on Education.

Two locks that graceful hung behind
In equal curls, and well conspir'd, to deck
With shining ringlets her smooth ivory neck. Pope.

6. A tuft.

I suppose this letter will find thee picking of daisies, or smelling to a lock of hay. Addison, Spect.

TO LOCK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To shut or fasten with locks.

The garden, seated on the level floor,
She left behind, and locking every door,
Thought all secure. Dryden.

2. To shut up or confine, as with locks.

I am locked in one of them;
If you do love me, you will find me out. Shakspeare.

Our former sample to our strong barr'd gates.

Those seek to know those things which make us
blest,
And having found them, lock them in thy breast.

Denham.

The log in secret lock. Dryden, Ovid.

If the door to a council be kept by armed men, and all such whose opinions are not liked kept out, the freedom of those which is infringed, and all their acts are as void as if they were decided in.

Dryden, Æn.

One conducts to the poets composing of his work; the other slackens his pace, and locks him up like a knight-errant in an enchanted castle.

Dryden, Ded. to the Æn.

If one third of the money in trade were locked up, must not the landholders receive one third less?

Locke.

Always lock up a cat in a closet where you keep your china plates, for fear the mice may steal to and break them.

Lat.] Power of changing place.

All progression, or animal locomotion, is performed by drawing on, or impelling forward, some part which was before at quiet.

Brown, Fulg. Err.

Many in the set locomotions and movements of their days have measured the circuit of it, [the earth].

An excursion to London, upon the footing that locomotion then was, when an hundred miles were a journey of three days, was a matter of some importance.

Greaves, Recollec. of Situation.

LOCOMOTIVE. adj. [locus and motus,
Latin.] Changing place; having the power of renovating or changing place.

I shall consider the locomotive, or locomotive faculty of animals. Derham, Phys. Theol.

In the right too, oft he ticks,
Or shews his locomotive tricks.

Prior.

An animal cannot well be defined from any particular organical part, nor from its locomotive faculty, for all are subject to rocks.

Arbutnot on Elements.

LOCOMOTIVITY. n. s. [from locomotive.]
Power of changing place.

The most super edifice that ever was conceived or constructed, would not equal the smallest insect, blest with sight, feeling, and locomotivity.

Bryson.

Lo'cust. n. s. [locusta, Latin.] A devouring insect.

The Hebrews had several sorts of locusts which are not known among us: the old historians and modern travellers remark that locusts are very numerous in Africa, and many places of Asia; that sometimes they fall like a cloud upon the country, and eat up every thing they meet with. Moses describes four sorts of locusts. Since there was a prohibition against using locusts, it is not to be questioned but that these creatures were commonly eaten in Palestine and the neighbouring countries.

Calmel.

To-morrow will I bring the locusts into thy courts.
Air replete with the streams of animals, roting, has produced pestilential fevers, such likewise been raised by great quantities of dead locusts.

Arbutnot on Air.

Lo'cust-tree. n. s.

The locust-tree hath a papilionaceous flower, from whose calyx arises the point, which afterwards becomes an uncapular hard pod, including roundish hard seeds, which are surrounded with a fungous stringy substance.

Miller.

Locu'tion.* n. s. [locutio, Lat. locution, Fr. locution.] Discourse; manner of speech; phrase.

Under the shadow of figurate locution in his glories of the persons.

Bate on the Revol. P. II. (1550).

They found shills as well in the one as the other; tropes, hyperbolic locutions, figures of eloquence, and such like toys.

Stapleton, Fort. of Faith, fol. 67. b.

He conformeth it to be a way of locution made use of by very good authors.

Ep. Wren, Monarchy Asserted, p. 139.

TO LODGE. v. a. [logian, Saxon; loger, French.]

1. To place in a temporary habitation.

When he was come to the court of France, the king stiled him by the name of the duke of York; lodged him, and accommodated him in a great state.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

2. To afford a temporary dwelling; to supply with harbour for a night.

Every house was proud to lodge a knight.

Dryden.

3. To place; to plant.

When on the brink the foaming boar I met,
And in his side thought to have lodg'd my spear,
The desperate savage rush'd within my force,
And bore me headlong with him down the rock.

Gray.

He lodg'd an arrow in a tender breast,
That had so often by his own been prest.

Addison, Oe.

In viewing again the ideas that are lodg'd in the memory, the mind is more than passive.

Lake.

4. To fix; to settle.

By whose fell working I was first advanc'd,
And by whose pow'r I well might lodge a fear
To be again displac'd.

Shakespeare.

I can give no reason,
More than a lodg'd hate, and a certain loathing
I bear Antonio.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

5. To place in the memory.

This cunning the king would not understand, though he lodg'd it, and noted it, in some particulars.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

6. To harbour or cover.

The church lodg'd I, I've track'd her to her covert;
Rush in at once.

Addison, Cato.

7. To afford place to.

The memory can lodge a greater store of images, than all the senses can present at one time.

Chayne, Phil. Principles.

8. To lay flat.

Those blessed corn be lodg'd, and trees blown down,
Though castles topple on their warders heads.

Shakespeare.

We'll make foul weather with desquied terrors;
Our sighs, and they, shall lodge the summer corn,
And make a dearth in this revolting land.

Shakespeare.

TO LODGE. v. n.

1. To reside; to keep residence.

Care keeps his watch in ev'ry old man's eye,
And where care lodgeth, sleep will never lie.

Shakespeare.

Something holy lodges in that breast,
And with these raptures moves the vocal air
To testify his hidden residence.

Milton, Comus.

And dwells such rage in soft bosoms then?
And lodg' such daring souls in little men? Pope.

2. To take a temporary habitation.

Why commands the king,
That his chief followers lodge in towns about him,
While he himself keepeth in the cold field?

Shakespeare, Othello.

My father is a man of war, and will not lodge with the people.

Samuel.

3. To take up residence at night.

And soldiers, stay and lodge by me this night.

Shakespeare.

Oh, that I had in the wilderness a lodging place of wayfaring men, that I might leave my people!

Jeremiah.

Here thou art but a stranger travelling to thy country; it is therefore a huge folly to be afflicted, because thou hast a less convenient inn to lodge in by thee flat.

By Taylor.

4. To lie flat.

Long come whom they reckon in Oxfordshire bent for rack clays; and its straw makes it not subject to lodge, or to be mildew'd.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

LODGE. † n. s. [logis, French; lodge, Dan. a hut, a shed; log, Celt. a place.]

1. A small house in a park or forest.

He brake up his court, and retired himself, his wife and children, into a certain forest thereby, which he call'd his desert, wherein he built build two fine lodges.

Sidney.

I found him as melancholy as a lodge in a warren.

Shakespeare.

He and his lady both are at the lodge,
Upon the north side of this pleasant chase.

Shakespeare.

Thus at their shady lodge arriv'd, both stood,
Both turn'd, and under open sky ador'd
The God that made both sky, air, earth.

Milton, P. L.

Wherever I am turned out, my lodge descends upon a lowprinted family.

Swift.

2. Any small house appendant to a greater; as, the porter's lodge.

LO'DGEABLE.* adj. [from lodge; French, logéable.] Capable of affording a temporary dwelling.

Colgrave, and Sherwood.

At the furthest end of the town eastward, the ambassador's house was appointed, but not yet (by default of some of the king's officers) lodgible.

See J. Fawcett, Phileas. (1636), p. 164.

The house is old-fashioned and irregular, but lodgible and commodious.

Smollett, Humph. Chisler.

LO'DGEMENT. n. s. [from lodge; logement, French.]

1. Disposition or collocation in a certain place.

The various lodgement and inoculation of the auditory nerves.

Berham.

2. Accumulation; collection.
An appended diaphragm from a mere lodgement of extravasated matter.

3. Possession of the enemy's work.

The military pedant is making lodgements, and fighting battles, from one end of the year to the other.

Addison.

LO'DGER. n. s. [from lodge.]

1. One who lives in rooms hired in the house of another.

Base tale, call'st thou me host? now I scorn the term; nor shall my Nell keep lodgers.

Shakespeare, Hen. F.

There were in a family, the man and his wife, three children, and three servants or lodgers.

Granat.

Those houses are soonest infected that are crowded with multiplicity of lodgers, and many families.

Harvey.

The gentlewoman begged me to stop; for that a lodger she had taken in was run mad.

Tatler.

Sylvia was reproached by his fellow lodger, that whilst the fellow lodger paid eight pounds, one shilling and five-pence halfpenny for the uppermost story, he paid for the rest twenty-four pounds four shillings and four-pence halfpenny.

Arbutnot.

2. One that resides in any place.

Look in that breast, most dirty D—! be fair; Say, can you find but one such lodger there?

Pope.

LO'DGING. n. s. [from lodge.]

1. Temporary habitation; rooms hired in the house of another.

I will in Cassio's Lodging lose this napkin,
Let him find it.

Shakespeare, Othello.

Let him change his lodging from one end of the town to another, which is a great advantage of acquaintance.

Bacon.

At night he came
To his known lodgings, and his country dame.

Dryden.

He desired his sister to bring her away to the lodgings of his friend.

Addison, Guardian.

With take lodgings in the sound of Bow.

Pope.

2. Place of residence.

Fair bosom fraught with virtue's richest treasure,
The seat of love, the lodging of delight;
The bower of him, the paradise of pleasure,
The sacred harbour of that heavenly spirit.

Spenser.

3. Harbour; covert.

The bounds were uncoupled; and the stag thought it better to trust to the blindness of his feet, than to the slender fortification of his lodging.

Sidney.

4. Convenience to sleep on.

Their feathers serve to stuff our beds and pillows, yielding us soft and warm lodging.

Ray on Creation.

LOE'† n. s. See LOWE.

TO LOFFE.* v. n. To laugh. See TO LAUGH.

The whole quire hold their hips, and loffe.

Shakespeare, Mids. N. Dream.

A man who sets up for a judge in criticism, should have a clear and logical head.

Addison, Spectator.

LOGICALLY. adv. [from logical.] According to the laws of logic.

How can her old good man

With honour take her back again?

From hence I logically gather,

The woman cannot live with either.

Prior.

LOGICIAN. n. s. [logicien, French; logicus, Latin.] A teacher or professor of logic; a man versed in logic.

If a man can play the true logician, and have as just judgement as invention, he may do great matters.

If we may believe our logicians, man is distinguished from all other creatures by the faculty of laughter.

Each staunch polemic stubborn as a rock,
Each fierce logician still expelling Locke,

Came whip and spur.

Pope, Dunciad.

A logician might put a case that would serve for an exception.

Swift.

The Arabian physicians were subtle men, and most of them logicians; accordingly they have given method, and shed subtilty upon their author.

Baker.

LOGMAN. n. s. [log and man.] One whose business is to carry logs.

For your sake

Am I this patient logman?

Shakespeare, Tempest.

LOGOGRIFFE. n. s. [logos, discourse, and griffe, an enigma, from griffe, a net, Gr.] A sort of riddle.

Had I compil'd from Amadis de Gaul,—

Or spun out riddles, and weav'd fifty tones

Of logogriffes, and curious palindromes,—

Thou then hadst had some colour for thy flames

On such my serious foliages.

B. Jonson, Discourses.

LOGOMACHY. n. s. [λογμαχία, Gr. logomachie, Fr.] A contention in words; a contention about words.

Forced terms of art did much puzzle sacred theology with distinctions, trivia, quiddities; and so transformed her to a mere kind of sophistry and logomachy.

Hovell.

The contentions of the eastern and western churches about this subject, are but a mere logomachy, or strife about words.

Mrs. Dringhall, Schism Guarded, p. 403.

I shall not enter into a mere logomachy, or strife about sounds and phrases.

Thray, Poetry truly stated, P. ii. § 1.

LOGWOOD. n. s.

Logwood is of a very dense and firm texture; it is the heart only of the tree which produces it. It is very heavy, and remarkably hard, and of a deep, strong, red colour. It grows both in the East and West Indies, but no where so plentifully as on the coast of the bay of Campeachy.

Hill, Mat. Med.

To make a light purple, mingle ceruse with logwood water.

Peaschem on Drawing.

LOHOCK. n. s.

Lohock is an Arabian name for those forms of medicines which are now commonly called eclegmas, lambatives, or linctues.

Quincy.

Lohocks and pectorals were prescribed, and venesection repeated.

Wierman, Surgery.

LOIN. n. s. [lwyn, Welsh. Dr. Johnson.—Our word was originally lend; lends being the loins. See LEND. Callander derives the Sax. and Germ. lendeu, and lenden, from leinga "to extend, the loins being the length of the trunk of the body."] 1. The back of an animal carved out by the butcher.

So have I seen in larger dark
Of veal a lucid loin.

Replete with many a brilliant spark,

As wise philosophers remark,

At once both sink and shine.

Ld. Dorset.

2. Loins; the reins.

My face I'll grime with filth,

Blanket my loins.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Thou slander of thy heavy mother's womb!

Thou lost issue of thy father's loins!

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

Virgin mother, hail!

High in the love of heaven! yet from my loins

Thou shalt proceed, and from thy womb the Son

Of God Most High.

Milton, P. L.

A multitude, like which the populous north

Pour'd never from her frozen loins, to pass

Rhene, or the Danaw, when her barbarous sons

Came like a deluge on the world.

Milton, P. L.

LOITER. v. n. [leuteren, loteren, Teut. to linger; lata, Gothick, tardy, slow.] To linger; to spend time carelessly; to idle.

Sir John, you loiter here too long, being you are to take soldiers up in the countries.

Shakspeare.

Whence this long delay?

You loiter while the spoils are thrown away.

Dryden.

If we have gone wrong, let us redeem the mistake; if we have loitered, let us quicken our pace, and make the most of the present opportunity.

Regis.

LOITER.* v. a. To consume in trifles; to waste carelessly.

Mark how he spends his time, whether he unactively loiters it away.

Locke.

In life's summer hours, delectable

As the long day so loiter'd.

Hurdia, Village Curate.

LOITERER. n. s. [from loiter.] Alinger; an idler; a lazy wretch; one who lives without business; one who is sluggish and dilatory.

Give gloves to thy reapers a lesson to cry,

And daily to loiterers have a good eye.

Tracer, p. 10.

The poor, by idleness or unfrithfulness, are riotous spenders, vagabonds, and loiterers.

Where hast thou been, thou loiterer?

Though my eyes clos'd, my arms have been open'd.

To search if thou wert come.

Otway.

Providence would only enter mankind into the useful knowledge of her treasures, leaving the rest to employ our industry, that we live not like idle loiterers, and tramps.

Merr.

Ever listen loiterers, that attend

No cause, no trust, no duty, and no friend.

Pope.

TO LOLL. v. n. [Of this word the etymology is not known. Perhaps it might be contemptuously derived from lollard, a name of great reproach before the Reformation; of whom one tenet was, that all trades not necessary to life are unlawful. Dr. Johnson.—Serenius, with great probability, cites the Icelandic lolla, to be slowly moved, loll, a slow step, as the origin of our word.]

1. To lean idly; to rest lazily against any thing.

So hangs and lolls, and weeps upon me: so shakes and pulls me.

Shakespeare, Othello.

He is not looting on a lewd love bed,

But on his knees at meditation.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

Close by a softly murmuring stream,

Where lovers used to loil and dream.

Hudibras.

To loil on couches, rich with cyron steds,

And lay your guilty limbs in Tyrian beds.

Dryden.

Vain of care he loils supine in state,

And leaves his business to be done by fate.

Dryden.

But wanton now, and loiling at our ease,

We suffer all the invariable ills of peace.

Dryden.

A lazy loiling sort

Of ever listless lovers.

Pope, Dunciad.

2. To hang out. Used of the tongue hanging out in weariness or play.

The triple port of the Stygian seat,

With loiling tongue lay fawning at thy feet.

Dryden.

With harmless play amidst the bowls he pass'd

And with his loiling tongue assay'd the taste.

Dryden.

TO LOLL. v. a. To put out. Used of the tongue exerted.

All authors to their own defects are blind,

Hadst thou but, Janus-like, a face behind,

To see the people, when they smile, the make,

To mark their fingers pointed at thy back,

Their tongues loil'd out at a foot.

Dryden, Pers.

My Strymmon's freezing streams are sat alone,

Trees beat their heads to beat him sing his strong.

Fierce tigers couch'd around, and loil'd their fawning tongues.

Dryden, Virg.

LOLLARD.* n. s. [lollard, Teut. LOLLER. } lollard, low Latin. Some contend, that this word was derived from Walter Lollard, a German, who began to dogmatize at the beginning of the fourteenth century; others, from the Germ. loben, to praise, and herr,

Lord, because the lollards travelled about from place to place, singing holy hymns; Chaucer, from lodium, cockle or tares, as if these persons were the tares sown in Christ's vineyard; and others from the old Germ. lullen or lollen, to sing, and the termination hard, with which many of the high Dutch words end; from the manner, as already stated, of their singing hymns, or, as some think, from their custom also of chanting requiems to the souls of the dead. Du Cange believes the word to be of German origin; and agrees with

Kilian's lollard, (mussard), a number of prayers, lollen, signifying also to mumble, to hum.] A name given to the first reformers of the Roman Catho-lick religion in England; a reproachful appellation of the followers of Wicliffe.

See LOLLARDY.

I smell a loller in the wind, quoth he:—

He shal no gospel glowen here ne teche:—

He wolde sowne soules difficulte,

Or springen coles in our cleene core:

And therfore, hoste, I warne thee before.

Chaucer, Signif. Prod.

They are of him [the pope] curst with hook, hell, and candle, out of his heaven, as Pasquin callethe, and this natural life, no lollards and heretics not worthy the benefice of temporal quiet.

Anderson, Epus. on Benedictus, (1573), fol. 59.

In his lectures he [H. Crompe] called the heretics lollards. Facts, Acts, and Mon. of Wicliffe.
Dr. Wicliffe dying at Lutterworth Dec. 31, 1384, his followers were soon after distinguished, or rather reproached, by the nickname of lollards.
Leavis, Life of Wicliffe, p. 10.

LO'LLARDY. * n. s. [from lollard.] The doctrine of lollards; a name given to what, before the Reformation, was deemed heresy.

Beware that thou be not oppressed
With antichrist's lollardie. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.
The spirit of popery, not Christianity, was to be seen in the zeal of the enemies to lollardy.
Young on Idiot. Corruptive, ii. 531.

To LO'LOL. * v. n. To move heavily; to walk in a heavy, lounging manner; to lean idly; and in a general sense to idle. A low word, formed from loll, and used in many places. See Craven Dial. Brockett, and Moore.

LOMBARDIC. * adj. [from Lombards.] Applied to one of the ancient alphabets derived from the Roman, and relating to the manuscripts of Italy.

Writing in Italy was uniform until the irruption of the Goths, when it was disfigured by the taste of that barbarous people. In 569, the Lombards having possessed themselves of all that part of the empire, except Rome and Ravenna, introduced another form of writing, which is termed Lombardic. As the popes used the Lombardic manner in their bulls, the appellation of Roman was sometimes given to it in the eleventh century. Though the dominion of the Lombards continued no longer than about two hundred and six years, the name of their writing was still current beyond the Alps, from the seventh century to the beginning of the thirteenth, and then ceased.

As to the Lombardic character, we have not a book that I know of, written in it, I mean agreeable to the specimens of it in Mabillon de Diplomatica; nor did I ever see any in any other place. In Sir J. Cotton's (1) perceiver by your catalogue (there be several). Several of our MSS. are said by Dr. Lambin to be written in Lombardic letters; but they are the common text or square hand, about 400 years old, vastly different from Mabillon, as I suppose yours are also.
H. Wankley to Dr. Smith, (1697.) Antiq. & Antiq. i. 85.

LOMP. n. s. A kind of roundish fish.

LO'NDONER. * n. s. [from London.] A native of London; an inhabitant of London.

What was the speech among the Londoners
Concerning the French journey.
Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

The felicity of Queen Elizabeth may be much imputed to the rare temper and moderation of man's minds in those days; for the pulse of the common people, and Londoners, did beat nothing so high as it did afterwards, when they grew pampered with so long peace and plenty.

Some Londoners, whom they extolled to the skies for their wit, I knew, passed in town for silly fellows.
Addison, Freehold, No. 29.

LO'NDONISM. * n. s. A mode of expression said to be peculiar to London.

The subject is, to show, that the humble and accepted dialect of London, the Londonisms, as I say call them, are far from being reproachable in themselves, however they may appear to us not born within the sound of Babel-bell.

Pope, Anac. of the King. Language.
LO'NE.† adj. [contracted from alone.]

1. Solitary; unfrequented; having no company.

Here the lone hour a blank of life displays.

Thus vanish sceptres, coronets, and lulls,
And leave you in lone woods, or empty walls.
Pope.

2. Single; not conjoined or neighbouring to others.

No lone house in Wales, with a mountain and a rocky, is more contemplative than this court.

3. Formerly denoting single; unmarried; or in widowhood.

Moreover this Glyceiric is a lone woman.

A hundred mark is a long loan for a poor lone woman to bear.
Shakespeare, Hen. IV. P. 11.

Queen Elizabeth being a lone woman, and having few friends, refusing to marry.

Tale to a Collect. of Records, (1642).

LO'NE. * } n. s. Our northern words for LO'NNIN. } a lane.

The huge and spacious assembly grew to him a tedious loneliness, entreprising nobody since Daphnusa was lost.

2. Disposition to solitude.

I see

The mystery of your loneliness, and find
Your self tears' blood.
Shakespeare.

LO'NELY. adj. [from lone.]

1. Solitary.

I go alone,

Like to a lonely dragon; that his fen
Makes fear'd and talk'd of more than seen.
Shakespeare.

Why thus close up the stars

That nature hung in heaven, and fill'd their lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the mistle and lonely traveller? Milton, Com.

Time has made you dote, and vainly tell
Of arms imagin'd, in your lonely cell, Dryden, Zen.

2. Addicted to solitude.

When, fairest princes,

You lonely thus from the full court retire,
Love and the graces follow to your solitude. Rome.

LO'NESOMENESS. * n. s. [from lone.] Solitude; dislike of company.

One that doth wear away himself in lonesomeness.

Those that would make lonesomeness acceptable, by advising men, as through a prospect, to behold the greatness of structures and bravery of cohorts, through the humbling of a cottage.

Sir R. Tempest on Solitariness, p. 95.

I can love both fair and brown,—
Her who loves lonesomeness best. Dryden, Poems, p. 7.

If of court-life you knew the good,
You would leave lonesomeness. Ibid. p. 151.

LO'NESOMENESS.† adj. [from lone.] Solitary; dismal.

They dance as they were wood,
Around an huge black goat, in lonesomeness wood,
By shady night, far from house or town.

More, Pre-exist. of the Soul, &c. 49.
You either must the earth from rest disturb,
Or roll around the heavens the solar orb;
Else what a dreadful fate will nature wear!

How horrid will these lonesomeness seats appear!
Blackmore.

LO'NESOMENESS. * adv. [from lonesomeness.] In a dismal or solitary manner.

LO'NESOMENESS. * n. s. [from lonesomeness.] State or quality of being lonesome.

The darkness and lonesomeness of the night, is no improper similitude; 'tis a pretty emblem of our mortality.

LONG.† adj. [long, French; longus, Lat. Dr. Johnson.—The past participle of the Sax. lenjan, extendere, producer. Nor can any other derivation be found for the Latin longus.—Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. ii. 374.—Mr. Tooke has omitted to notice the M. Goth. lugg, logg, of which the first g is pronounced like our n; and from which long should seem to be immediately derived.]

1. Not short; used of time.

He talked a long while, even till break of day.

He was desirous to see him of a long season.

Acts, xx.

St. Luke, xiii.

2. Not short; used of space.

Empress, the way is ready, and not long.

Milton, P. L.

With long and tedious hawk, fabled knights.

Milton, P. L.

Reduce, my muse, the wandering song,
A tale should never be too long.

Prior.

8. Continued by succession to a great series.

But first a long succession must ensue.

Milton, P. L.

9. [From the verb, To long.] Longing; desirous; or perhaps, long continued, from the disposition to continue looking at any thing desired.

Praying for him, and casting a long look that way, he saw the galley leave the pursuit.

Sidney.

By every circumstance I know he loves;

Yet he but doubts, and parries, and casts out
Many a long look for success.

Dryden.

10. [In music and pronunciation.] Protracted; as a long note; a long syllable.

11. Affectedly deliberate: rather an expression of contempt.

There is nothing to be done, according to him, in the common way; and let the matter in hand be what it will, it must be carried with an air of importance, and transacted, if we may so speak, with an ostentatious secrecy. These are your persons with long heads, who would fain make the world believe their thoughts and ideas very much superior to their neighbours! Tailler, No. 191.

LONG:† adv.

1. To a great length in space.

The marble building, erects the spacious dome,
Or forms the pillars long-extended rows,
On which the planted grove and pensile garlands grow.

Prior.

2. Not for a short time.

With mighty battles of long-enduring brass.
When the trumpet sounded long, they still came up to the mount.

Evel, xii. 13.

The martial Ancus
Furbish'd the rusty sword, and Resum'd the long-forgotten shield.

Dryden.

One of those advantages, which Cornuallie has laid down, is the making choice of some signal and long-expected day, whenever the action of the play is to depend.

Dryden.

So stood the pious prince unmur'd, and long
Sustain'd the madness of the noisy throng.

Dryden, En.

The muse resumes her long-forgotten lays,
And love, restor'd, his ancient realm surveys.

Dryden.

No man has complained that you have discoursed too long on any subject, for you leave us in an eagerness of learning more.

Dryden.

Perus left for you
The realm of Candahar for dower I bought,
That long-contended prize for which you fought.

Who said them meditate all his life long.

Spenser, F. Q.

Some say, that ever 'gainst that season comes,
Wherein our Saviour's birth is celebrated,
The bird of dawn singing all night long,
And then they say no spirit walks abroad,
The nights are wholesome, then no planets strike,
No fairy takes, an witch hath power to charm,
So hallow'd, and so gracious is the time,

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

He fed me all my life long to this day.

Gou, xlviii. 15.

Forty years long was I conversed with this generation.

Palmer.

7. Owing to; in consequence of: an abbreviation of along, not from the Sax. zelang, a fault, as Dr Johnson has hastily asserted, but from ge-lang, long of; not meaning by the fault, by the failure, as he has further mistated it; and not a substantive, as he makes it. See the seventh sense of ALONG.

But if it is along on me,
That ye unvanquish'd be,
Or els if it be longe on you,
The sooth shall be proved none.

Geoffrey, Conf. Am. B. 5.

Respective and wary men had rather seek quietly their own, and wish that the world may go well, so it be not long of them, than with pains and hazard make themselves advisers for the common good.

Hobbes.

Maine, Bloys, Poitiers, and Tours are won away,
Long all of Somerset, and his delay.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Mistress, all this coll, is long of you, Shakespeare,
If we owe it to him that we know so much, it is perhaps long of his fond adorer that we know so little more.

Glanville.

LONG,* n. s.

Bertram; if thou dar'st look out Upon your slaughter'd host. Dryden, Sam. Renc.

I cannot, without some indignation, look on an ill copy of an excellent original; much less can I behold with patience Virgil and Homer abused to their faces, by a botching interpreter. Dryden.

Intellectual beings, in their constant endeavours after true felicity, can suspend this prosecution in particular cases, till they have looked before them, and informed themselves, whether that particular thing lie in their way to their main end. Locke.

There may be in his reach a book, containing pictures and discourses capable to delight and instruct him, which yet he may never take the pains to look into. Locke.

Towards those who communicate their thoughts in print, I cannot but look with a friendly regard, provided there is no tendency in their writings to vice. Addison, Freeholder.

A solid and substantial greatness of soul looks down with a generous neglect on the censures and applauses of the multitude. Addison, Spect.

I have nothing left but to gather up the reliques of a wreck, and look about me to see how few friends I have left. Pope to Swift.

The optic nerves of such animals as look the same way with both eyes, as of men, meet before they come into the brain; but the optic nerves of such animals as do not look the same way with both eyes, as of fishes, do not meet. Newton, Opticks.

2. To have power of seeing.
 Fate sees thy life log'd in a brittle glass,
 And looks it through, but so it cannot pass. Dryden.

3. To direct the intellectual eye.
 In regard of our deliverance past, and our danger present and to come, let us look up to God, and every man reform his own ways. Bacon, New Atlantis.

We are not only to look at the bare action, but at the reason of it. Sittingfield.

The man only saved the pigeon from the hawk, that he might eat it himself; and if we look well about us, we shall find this to be the case of most mediocrities. L. Estorvo.

They will not look beyond the received notions of the place and age, nor have so presumptuous
 a thought as to be wiser than their neighbours. Locke.

Every one, if he would look into himself, would find some defect of his particular genius. Locke.

Change a man's view of things; let him look into the future state of bliss or misery, and see God, the righteous Judge, ready to render every man according to his deeds. Locke.

 If he long deferred the march, he must look to fight another battle before he could reach Oxford.
Clarendon.

5. To take care; to watch.
 Look that ye bind them fast. Shakspeare.

He that gathered a hundred bushels of apples, had thereby a property to them: he was only to look that he used them before they spoiled, else he robbed others. Locke.

6. To be directed with regard to any object.
 Let their eyes look right on, and let their eyes lids look straight before them. Pope, iv. 25.

7. To have any particular appearance; to seem.

I took the way,
 Which through a path, but scarcely printed, lay;
 And look'd as lightly press'd by fairy feet. Dryden.

That spotless modesty of private and public life, that generous spirit, which all other Christians ought to labour after, should look in us as if they were natural. Sprad.

Pity, as it is thought a way to the favour of God;
 and fortune, as it looks like the effect either of that,
 or at least of prudence and courage, beget authority. Temple.

Cowards are offensive to my sight;
 Nor shall they see me do an act that looks
 Below the courage of a Spartan king. Dryden, Ctem.

To complain of want, and yet refuse all offers of a supply, looks very sullen. Burnet, The. of the Earth.

Should I publish any favours done me by your lordship, I am afraid it would look more like vanity than gratitude. Addison.

 licentious times, and to become a by-word. Atterbury.

9. To form the air in any particular manner, in regarding or beholding.

I welcome the condition of the time,
 Which cannot look more hideously on me,
 Than I have drawn it in my fantasy. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

That which was the worst now least offends me;
 Blindness, for had I sight, confus'd with shame
 How could I once look up, or leave the head? Milton, S. A.

These look too up to you with reverence, and would be animated by the sight of him at whose soul
 they have taken fire in his writings. Swift to Pope.

10. To Look about one. To be alarmed; to be vigilant.

It will tempt those men who dwell careless to look about them; to enter into serious contention, how they may avert that ruin. Decay of Chr. Piety.

If you find a wasting of your flesh, then look about you, especially if troubled with a cough. Hursey on Consumption.

John's cause was a good mick cow, and many a man subsidised his family out of it; however,
 John began to think it high time to look about him.
Arbutnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

11. To Look after. To attend; to take care of; to observe with care, anxiety, or tenderness.

The bishops thronged repined, and looked black.
Hudibras, Hist. lib. ii. 1137.

13. To Look fur. To expect.

Philantus's disgrace was engriev'd, in lieu of comfort, of Arctia, who telling him she never looked for other, had him seen some other miserable. Shakspeare, G. Lear.

Being a labour of so great difficulty, the exact performance thereof we may rather wish than look for. Hobbes.

Shalt feel our justice, in whose sacred passage
 Look for no less than death. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

In dealing with cunning persons, it is good to say little to them, and that which they least look for. Bacon, Essays.

This mistake was not such as they looked for;
 good, though the error in form seemed to be consistent to, yet the substance of the accusation might be still insisted on. Clarendon.

Inordinate anxiety, and unnecessary scruples in confession, instead of setting you free, which is the benefit to be looked for by confession, perplex
 you the more. Bp. Taylor.

Look now for no ennobling vision, nor fear
 The bait of hollow words. Milton, S. A.

Drown'd in deep despair.
 He dares not offer one repining prayer:
 Adam'd he lies, and sadly looks for death. Dryden, Jura.

I must with patience all the terms stand
 Till mine is call'd; and that long look'd-for day
 Is still encumber'd with some new delay. Dryden, Jura.

This limitation of Adam's empire to his line, will save those the labour who would look for one her amongst the race of brutes, but will very little contribute to the discovery of one amongst men.

14. To Look into. To examine; to sit; to inspect closely; to observe narrowly.

His nephew's levies to him appear'd
To be a preparation 'gainst the Poland;
But better look'd it, be truly found
It was against your highness. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

The more frequently and narrowly we look into the works of nature, the more occasion we shall have to admire their beauty. Aitbury.

It is very well known a traveller's will to look into all that lies in his way. Addison on Italy.

15. To Look on. To respect; to esteem; to regard as good or bad.

Ambitious men, who rely on clocked in good desires, become secretly discontent, and look upon men and matters with an evil eye. Bacon, Essays.

If a harmless maid
Should ere a wife become a nurse,
Her friends would look on her the worse. Prior.

16. To Look on. To consider; to conceive of; to think.

I looked on Virgil as a succinct, majestic writer; one who weighed not only every thought, but every word and syllable. Dryden.

He looked upon it as morally impossible, for persons infinitely proud to frame their minds to an impartial consideration of a religion that taught nothing but self-denial and the cross. South.

Do we not all profess to be of this excellent religion? but who will believe that we do so, that shall look upon the actions, and consider the lives of the greatest part of Christians? Tillotson.

In the want and ignorance of almost all things, they looked upon themselves as the happiest and wisest people of the universe. Hume, on Hum. Understanding.

Those prayers you make for your recovery are to be looked upon as best board by God, if they move him to a longer continuance of your sickness. Waks, Prep. for Death.

17. To Look on. To be a mere idle spectator.

I'll be a candle-holder, and look on. Shakespeare.
Some come to meet their friends, and to make merry; others come only to look on. Bacon, Apophthegms.

18. To Look over. To examine; to try by one.

Look o'er the present and the former time, If no example of so vile a crime Appears, then mourn. Dryden, Jun.

A young child, distracted with the variety of his play-games, tired his maid every day to look them over. Locke.

19. To Look out. To search; to seek.

When the thriving tradesman has got more than he can well employ in trade, his next thoughts are to look out for a purchase. Locke.

Where the body is affected with pain or sickness, we are forward enough to look out for remedies, to listen to every one that suggests them and immediately to apply them. Aitbury.

Where a foreign tongue is elegant, expressive, and compact, we must look out for words as beautiful and comprehensive as can be found. Felton on the Classics.

The curious are looking out, some for flattery, some for ironies, in that poem; the sower folks think they have found out some. Swift to Pope.

20. To Look out. To be on the watch.

Is a man bound to look out sharp to plague himself? Cilley.

21. To Look to. To watch; to take care of.

There is not a more fearful wild fowl than your lion living; and we ought to look to it. Shakespeare.
Who knocks so loud at doors, Francis? Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Let this fellow be looked to: let some of my people have a special care of him.

Uncleanly scruples fear not you; look to it. Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

Know the state of thy flocks, and look well to thy herds. Prover. xviii. 32.

When it came once among our people, that the state offered conditions to strangers that would stay, we had work enough to get any of our men to look to our ship. Bacon.

If any took sanctuary for case of treason, the king might appoint him keepers to look to him in sanctuary. Bacon.

The dog's running away with the flesh, bids the cook look better to it another time. l'Estrange.

For the truth of the theory I am in nowise concerned; the composer of it must look to that. Woodward.

22. To Look to. To behold.

To Look, v. a.
To seek; to search for.

Letting my lure, I go from place to place,
Like a young fawn that ise hath lost the hind,
And seek each where. Spenser.

23. To turn the eye upon.

Let us look one another in the face. 2 Kings, vi. 8.

24. To influence by looks.

Such a spirit must be left behind!
A spirit fit to start into an empire,
And look the world to law. Dryden, Cenci.

25. To Look out. To discover by searching.

Casting my eye upon so many of the general bills as next came to hand, I found encouragement from them to look out all the bills I could. Grunt, Pilate's Morality.

Whoever has such treatment when he is a man, will look out other company, with whom he can be at ease. Locke.

LOOK, interj. [properly the imperative mood of the verb: it is sometimes look ye.] See! lo! behold! observe!

Look, where he comes, and my good man too; he's as far from jealousy as I am from giving him cause. Shakespeare.

Look you, he must seem thus to the world: fear not your advancement. Shakespeare.

Look, when the world hath fewest barbarous people, but such as will not marry, except they know means to live, as it is almost every where at this day, except Tartary, there is no danger of inundations of people. Bacon, Ess.

Look you! as they pretend to be subject to a constitution, must not carve out our own quality; for at this rate a cobbler may make himself a lord. Cilley on Pride.

LOOK, n. s.

1. Air of the face; mien; cast of the countenance.

Thou cream-faced loon,
Where got'st thou that goose look? Shakespeare.

Thou wilt have the afflicted people, but will bring down high looks. Psal. xviii. 27.

The gracious Heaven for nobler ends designed, Their looks erected, and their clay refin'd. J. Dryden, Jun.

And though death be the king of terrors, yet pain, disgrace, and poverty, have frightful looks, able to discompose most men. Locke.

2. The act of looking or seeing.

Then on the crowd he cast a furious look,
And wither'd all their strength. Dryden.

When they met they made a surly stand,
And gl'd, like angry lions, as they pass'd,
And wish'd that a-v'ry look might be their last. Dryden.

3. View. With out.

This leads to a little tower,—the dressing room of the suitors. It is a small square cabinet, in the middle of an open gallery, from which it receives light by a door and three windows. To look-out, charming.

Shakespeare, Tw. Night, through Spain, L. 23.

4. Watch. With out: as, they kept a good look-out.

LOOKER,† n. s. [from look.]

1. One that looks.

For though infusion of celestial power
The duller earth it quickeneth with delight,
And lifeless spirits privily doth pour
Through all the parts, that to the lookers' sight
They seem to please. Spenser, Hymns.

Those curious arched chambers, in which these lookers or beholders dwell. Smith on Old Age, p. 93.

I have ever observed, that your grave looks are the dulcist of men. D. of Buckingham, Retiheral.

2. LOOKER ON. Spectator, not agent.

Shepherds pour pipe, when his harsh sound testifies anguish, into the fair looker on, passions not passion enters.

Such labour is then more necessary than pleasant, both to them which undertake it, and for the lookers on. Hooker.

My business in this state
Made me a looker on here in Vienna;
Where I have seen corruption boil and bubble
Till it's a'er-run the stew. Shakespeare, Measure for Measure.

Did not this fatal war affront thy coast,
Yet satnest thou not as a looker on? Fairfax.

The Spaniard's valour lieth in the eyes of the looker on; but the English valour lieth about the soldier's heart: a valour of glory and a valour of natural courage are two things. Bacon.

The lookers on, and the enquiring vulgar,
Will talk themselves to action. Denham, Sophy.

He wish'd he had indeed been one,
And only to have stood a looker on. Addison, Oct.

A certain fearful looking-for of judgement.

LOOKING-GLASS, n. s. [look and glass.]

Mirror; a glass which shews forms reflected.

Command a mirror hither straight,
That it may shew me what a face I have.
— Go some of you and fetch a looking-glass. Shakespeare.

There is none so homely but loves a looking-glass. South.

We should make no other use of our neighbour's faults, than of a looking-glass to mend our own manners by. l'Estrange.

The surface of the lake of Nemi is ever ruffled with the least breath of wind, which, perhaps, together with the clearness of its waters, gave it formerly the name of Diana's looking-glass. Addison on Italy.

LOOM,† n. s. [from gloom, a bottom of thread.]

Minshew. Lome is a general name for a tool or instrument. Junius.

And therefore Junius or Dr. Johnson might have added the Sax. xeloma, goods, any utensil, or household-stuff.

1. The frame in which the weavers work their cloth.

He must leave no uneven thread in his loom, or by indulging to any one sort of reprovable discourse himself, defeat all his endeavours against the rest. Gov. of the Tongue.

Minerva, studious to compose,
Her twisted threads, the web she strung.
And o'er a loom of marble hung. Addison.

A thousand maidens plied the purple loom,
To weave the bed, and deck the regal room. Prior.

2. Household-stuff; furniture; hence the expression heir-loom. See HEIRLOOM.

6. Loom Gale. [In naval language.] A gentle, easy gale of wind.
To Loom. † v. n. [leoman, Saxon.] To appear large at sea. Spoken of a ship at a distance.
Skinner.
Awful she looms, the terror of the main.
Fye, Carmen Seculare.

LOOM. n. s. A bird.

A loom is as big as a goose; of a dark colour, dappled with white spots on the neck, back, and wings; each feather marked near the point with two spots; they breed in Far Island.

Grew, Muscum.

LOOM. n. s. [This word, which is now used only in Scotland, is the English word loom. See LOWN.] A sorry fellow; a scoundrel; a rascal.

Thou cream-fac'd loom!

Where got'st thou that goose look?

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

The false loom, who could not work his will

By open force, employ'd his flattering skill:

I hope, my lord, said he, I not offend?

Are you afraid of me that are your friend?

Dryden.

This young lord had an odd cunning regard, or, as the Scots call it, a false bias of a grandfather, that one might call a Jack of all trades.

Arbuthnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

LOOP. † n. s. [from loopen, Dutch, to run. Dr. Johnson. — Hibern. lup, ammentum; Icel. lópe, pensum lanificii, lappa, filum digitis ducere. Serenius.]

1. A double through which a string or lace is drawn; an ornamental double or fringe.

Nor any skill'd in loops of fingering fine,

Might in their diverse cunning ever dare

With this, so curious network, to compare.

Spenser.

Make me to sew it, or at least to prove it.

That the probation bear no hinge, nor loop,

To hang a doubt on.

Shakespeare, Othello.

Blind our crooked legs in hoops

Made of shells, with silver loops.

B. Jonson.

An old fellow shall wear this or that sort of cut in his clothes with great integrity, while all the rest of the world are degenerated into buttocks, pockets, and loops.

Addison.

2. A small aperture, in ancient castles, to spy the enemy, or to fire ordnance from, or to admit light.

Some at the loops durst scarce outstep.

Pierces, Sup. xi. 32.

LOOPEN. adj. [from loop.] Full of holes. Poor naked wretches, 'whomsoever' ye are, That 'bide' the pelting of this pitiless storm!

How shall your houseless heads and unfed sides,

Your loop'd and window'd raggedness, defend you

From seasons such as these? Shakespeare, K. Lear.

LO'PHOLE. n. s. [loop and hole.]

1. Aperture; hole to give a passage. The Indian herdman, shunning heat, Shelters in cool, and tends his pasturing herds;

At loopholes cut through thickest shade;

Milton, P. L.

Ere the blabbing Eastern scout

The nice morn from the Indian steep.

From her cabin'd loophole peep.

Milton, Comus.

Walk not near you corner house by night; for there are blunderbuses planted in every loophole, that go off at the squeaking of a fiddle.

Dryden, Spau. Friar.

2. A shift; an evasion. Needful, or needful, I not now cozened, For still you have a loophole for a friend.

Dryden.

Lo'PHOLE. adj. [from loophole.] Full of holes; full of openings, or void spaces.

This wrenny loophole'd goal, In which y' are hamper'd by the felloe.

Canst thou put y' in mind of wallclock, Hudibras.

LOORD. † n. s. [lorden, Dutch; lordard, French; lurdan, Erse; a heavy, stupid, or witless fellow. D. Trevous derives lordard from lorde or lourd, a village in Gascoigny, the inhabitants of which were formerly noted robbers, say they. But dexterity in robbing implies some degree of subtilty, from which the Gascoigns are so far removed, that they are awkward and heavy to a proverb. The Erse imports some degree of knavery, but in a ludicrous sense, as in English, you pretty rogue; though in general it denotes reproachful heaviness, or stupid laziness. Spenser's Scholiast says, lord was wont, among the old Britons, to signify a lord; and therefore the Danes, that usurped their tyranny here in Brittain, were called, for more dread than dignity, lurdans, i. e. lord Danes, whose insolence and pride was so outrageous in this realm, that if it fortun'd a Briton to be going over a bridge, and saw the

Dane set foot upon the same, he must return back till the Dane was clear over, else he must abide no less than premeditated death; but being afterward expell'd, the name of lurdane became so odious unto the people whom they had long oppress'd, that, even at this day, they use for more reproach to call the quarantague the lurdane. So far the Scholiast, but erroneously. From Spenser's own words, it signifies something of stupid dullness rather than magisterial arrogance. Macbean. — Dr. Johnson might have added to the remark of Macbean, that stupidity was a principal feature in the lurdane's character:

"In every house lord Dane did then rule all;

"Whence laidie lovels LURDANES DOW

we call."

Mir. for Magistrates, p. 558.

Loord indeed is no other than the Etonic tonic word luyard, or loer, loerd, an idle, slothful fellow; hence the Fr. loard, stupid, blockish; Ital. lorde, foul, filthy, lordane, a "lubberly, slovenly, filthy fellow." Florio, 1598. Serenius makes the Goth. lori, filth, the origin. See also LURDAY.] A drone.

Sixer, thou'st but a lazy loerd,

And rekes much of thy swinke,

That with fond terms and witless words

To blur mine eyes dost think. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

LOOS. † n. s. [los, old Fr. Lacombe; laus, Latin. Mr. H. Tooke, however, considers this word as the past participle of the Sax. hliran, to celebrate, and as the origin of the Lat. laus.] Praise; re-nown. Obsolete.

Heracles had the great loos. Chaucer.

That much be feared, lest reproachful blame

With foule dishonour him mote blot therefore;

Spenser, F. Q. vi. lib. 12.

Besides the loose of no much loss and fame, As through the world thereby should glorify his name.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. lib. 12.

To LOOSE. v. a. [lepan, Sax.]

1. To unbind; to untie any thing fastened.

The shoes of his feet I am not worthy to loose.

Then sprung she forth, they follow'd her again.

Dryden.

To LOOSE. v. n. To set sail; to depart by loosening the anchor.

Ye should have hearkened, and not have loosed from Crete.

Acts.

The emperor, loosing from Barcelona, came to the port of Mago, in the island of Minorca.

Knox, Hist.

Loosing thence by night, they were driven by contrary winds back into his port.

Raleigh.

LOOSE. † adj. [from the verb.]

1. Unbound; untied.

If he should intend his voyage towards my wife, I would turn her loose to him; and what he gets more of her than sharp words, let it lie on my head.

Shakespeare.

Lo! I see four men loose walking. Den. lib. 25.

2. Not fast; not fixed.

Those feet that clashed might rebound after the collision; or if they cohered, yet by the next conflict might be separated again, and so on is an eternal vicissitude of fast and loose, though without ever coming into the bodies of planets.

Keuley.

3. Not tight; as, a loose robe.

If ever I said loose-bodied gown, sew me in the skirts of it.

Shakespeare, Tw. of the Shrew.

The Greek historian sets her [Boudicca] in the field, on a high heap of turves, in a loose-bodied gown declaiming, a spear in her hand.

Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 2.

4. Not crowded; not close.

With extended wings a host might pass.

With horse and chariots, rank'd in loose array.

Milton, P. L.

5. Wanton; not chaste.

Fair Venus seem'd unto his bed to bring

Her, whom he waking evermore did woe

To be the chaste flower that ay did spring

On earthly carnage, the daughter of a king.

Now a loose leman to vile service bound.

Spenser, F. Q.

When loose epistles violate chaste eyes,
She half commits who silently denies.

Dryden, Ovid.

6. Not close; not concise; lax.

If an author be loose and diffuse in his style,
The translator needs only regard the propriety of the language.

Fellen.

7. Vague; indeterminate; not accurate.

It is but a loose thing to speak of possibilities,
Without the particular design; so is it to speak of lawfulness without the particular case.

Bacon, Holy War.

It seems unaccountable to be so exact in the quantity of liquor where a small error was of little concern, and to be so loose in the doses of powerful medicines.

Arbutnot.

8. Not strict; not rigid.

Because conscience, and the fear of swearing from that which is right, maketh them diligent observers of circumstances, the loose regard whilom is the course of vulgar folly.

Hooker.

9. Unconnected; rambling.

I dare venture nothing without a strict examination; and am so much ashamed to put a loose indigested play upon the publick, as to offer brass money in a payment.

Dryden.

Vario spends whole mornings in running over loose and unconnected pages, and with fresh curiosity is ever glancing over new words and ideas, and yet treasures up but little knowledge.

Watts on the Mind.

10. Lax of body; not costive.

What hath a great influence upon the health, is going to sleep regularly; people that are very loose have seldom strong thoughts or strong bodies.

Locke on Education.

11. Disengaged; not enslaved.

The prevailing principle is, to sit as loose from pleasures, and be as moderate in the use of them, as they can.

12. Disengaged from obligation; commonly with from; in the following line with of.

Now I stand

Loose of my vow; but who knows Cato's thoughts?

Addison.

13. Free from confinement.

They did not let prisoners loose homeward.

Isaiah.

With the wildest tempests loose;
That thrown again upon the coast,
I may once more repeat my pain.

Prior.

14. Remiss; not attentive.

15. To break loose. To gain liberty.

If to break loose from the conduct of reason, and to want that restraint of examination which keeps us from choosing the worse, be liberty, madmen and fools are only the freemen.

Locke.

Like two black storms on either hand,
Our Spanish army and the Indians stand;
This only space betwixt the clouds is clear,
Where you, like day, brave loose from both appear.

Dryden.

16. To let loose. To set at liberty; to set at large; to free from any restraint.

And let the living bird loose into the open field.

Lev. xiv.

We ourselves make our fortunes good or bad;
and when God lets loose a tyrant upon us, or a sickness, if we fear to die, or know not to be patient, the calamity sits heavy upon us.

Dr. Taylor, Holy Living.

In addition and division, either of space or duration, it is the number of its repeated additions or divisions that alone makes distinct, as will appear to any one who will let his thoughts loose in the vast expanse of space, or divisibility of matter.

Locke.

If improvement cannot be made a recreation, they must be let loose to the chase by the law of necessity; which they should be weaned from, by being made surfeit of it.

Locke.

LOOSE, v. n. [the past participle of loosen, Goth. lym, Saxon; amittere, dimittere. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Parl. ii. 254.]

1. Liberty; freedom from restraint.

Come, and forsake thy cloying stores,
And all the busy pageantry
That wise men scorn, and fools adore:

Come, give thy soul a loose, and taste the pleasures of the poor.

Dryden, Her.

Lucia, might my big-wooln heart
Vent all its griefs, and give a loose to sorrow,
Marcia could answer thee in sighs.

Addison, Cato.

The fiery Pegasus disdain
To mind the rider's voice, or hear the reins;

When glorious fields and opening camps he views,
He runs with so unbounded loose.

Prior.

Poets should not, under a pretence of imitating the antients, give themselves such a loose to lyrics, as if there were no coöperation in the world.

Fellen on the Clocidia.

2. Dismission from any restraining force.

Air at large maketh no noise, except it be sharply percussed; as in the sound of a string, where air is percussed by a hard and stiff body, and with a sharp loose.

Bacon.

Their arrows softly pair'd, for timber and for feather,
With birch and Israel pierc'd, to fly in any weather;
And shot they with the round, the square, or forked pile,

The sea gave such a twang, as might be heard a mile.

Dryden, Polyd. 36. 5.

LOOSELY, adv. [from loose.]

Our gardens.

Tate, Cowley.

TO LOP, v. a. [It is derived by Skinner from laube, German, a leaf; by Sereuius from the Goth. Alapa; Helsing. dial. lop, cortex, leopa, decorticate.]

1. To cut the branches of trees.

Greivle cleev, what sturges uingrele heads
Have lepp'd and bew'd, and made thy body bare
Of her two branches, those sweet ornaments?

Shakespeare.

Like to pillars.

Or hollow'd bodies, made of oak or fir,
With branches lepp'd, in wood or mountain fell'd.

Milton, P. L.

The plants, whose luxury was lepp'd,
Or age with crutches underprop'd.

Cemden.

The oak, growing from a plant to a great tree, and then lepp'd, is still the same oak.

Locke.

The book the bore, instead of Cynthia's spear,
To lop the growth of the luxuriant year.

Pope.

2. To cut any thing.

The gardener may lop religion as he pleases.

Howell.

So long as there's a bead,
Hither will all the mourning spirits fly;
Lop that but off.

Dryden, Sp. Friar.

All that denominated it paradise was lepp'd off by the deluge, and that only left which is enjoyed in common with its neighbour countries.

Wadward, Nat. Hist.

Rhyme sure in needless boots the poet ties,
Procrustes like, the as or wheel applying;
To lop the mangled snare, or stretch it into size.

Smith.

LOR.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. That which is cut from trees.

Or sicker thy head were yettler is,
So on thy corse shoulder it leans assis;
Now thyself hath lost both top and top,
As my budding branch thou wastest crop.

Spenser, Shep. Cal.

Nor should the boughs grow too big, because they give opportunity to the rain to soak into the tree, which will quickly cause it to decay, so that you must cut it down, or else both body and top will be of little value.

Mortimer.

2. [Joppe, Saxon.] A flea.

LORP. pret. of leap. Obsolete.

With that spring forth a naked vrain,
With spotted wings like peacock's train,
And laughing leapt to a tree.

Spenser, Shep. Cal.

LORPPE.† n. s. [from lop.] One that cuts trees. [arborator, Latin.] Hulot.

Hence lopper on the hamie hill

Shall sing with voice on high. Hulot, Tr. of Virg.

LORPPE.† adj. Coagulated; as, loppered milk. Ainsworth. Thus it is still called in Scotland. Dr. Johnson. It is loppered in Scotland, and loppered in Lancashire.

Radically the same, Dr. Janieson says, with the Icel. laup, coagulum, liquor

coagulus, from hleiþ, coagulum.

LORPPE.† n. s. pl. [from lop.] Tops of branches lopped off. Colg. and Sherwood.

LOQUACIOUS.† adj. [loquax, Latin.]

1. Full of talk; full of tongue.

To whom and Eve,

Confessing soon; yet not before her judge

Bold, or loquacious, thus should'st reply'd.

Milton, P. L.

In council she gives licence to her tongue,

Loquacious, bawling, ever in the wrong. Dryden.

2. Speaking.

Blind British bards, with volent touch

Traverse loquacious strings, whose solemn notes

Provoke to harmless revels. Philips.

3. Apt to blab; not secret.

LOQUACIOUSNESS.† n. s. [from loquacious.]

Loquacity; too much talk.

LOQUACITY.† n. s. [loquacit  , French.]

Cotgrave; loquacitas, Latin.] Too much talk.

Why loquacity is to be avoided, the wise man gives sufficient reason, for in the multitude of words there wasteth out sin. Ray on Creation.

Too great loquacity, and too great taciturnity

by fits. Arbuthnot.

LORD.† n. s. [hlaford, Saxon. Dr.

Johnson. — hlaford, Icel. herus, dominus; laef, lave, area, horreum; ad,

lad, terra, ci warda; alli, nec incommodic. Serenius. Thus Verelius derides hlaford, from lad, land, and yard, a guardian; and the G. And. considers the word quasi hlaford, horreum econo-

mus, from lave, a barn, a storehouse.

Others view loaf as the origin of this word. See LADY. Junius thus deduces

it from hlaf, and ord, initium, origo, q. d.

he who administers bread; Stierhnelm, from hlag, and werod, an host. Mr. H.

Tooke, observing that hlaf is the past participle of the Saxon hlapan, to raise, says that hlaford is a compound word of hlaf, raised or elevated, and ord, (ortus), source, origin, birth. Lord therefore means high-born, or of an exalted origin.

Div. of Purl. ii. 158. A learned commentator of elder times has made the following remark on lord: "Adonai,

lord, is of the former word Eden, a base or pillar which sustaineth any thing:
this title sheweth, that the Lord, who created all things, doth also sustain and preserve them. Our English word lord hath much like force, being contracted of the old Saxon laforð, which cometh of laef, to sustain." Leigh's Critica
Sacra, edit. 1650. p. 4. col. 1.]

1. Monarch; ruler; governor.

Man over man

He made not lord. Dryden, K. Lear.

Of Athens he was lord. Dryden, K. Lear.

We have our author's only arguments to prove, that heirs are lords over their brethren. Locke.

They call'd their lord Acteon to the games,

His shook his head in answer to the name.

Addison.

O'er love, o'er fear, extends his wide domain,

Unconquer'd lord of pleasure and of pain.

Vandy of Human Wishes.

2. Master; supreme person.

But now I was the lord

Of this fair mansion, master of my servants,

Queen o'er myself; and even now, but now,

This house, these servants, and this same myself

Are yours, my lord. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

3. A tyrant; an oppressive ruler.

Now being assembled into one company, rather without a lord than at liberty to accomplish their misery, they fall to division. Heyward.

'Tis death to fight, but kingly to control

Lord like at ease, with arbitrary power,

To peel the chiefs, the people to devour. Dryden.

4. A husband.

I oft in bitterness of soul deploir'd

My absent daughter, and my dearer lord.

Pope, Ode.

5. One who is at the head of any business;

an overseer.

Grant harvest lord more by a penny or two,

To call on his fellows the better to doo.

Tuxen, Hush.

6. A nobleman.

Thou art a lord, and nothing but a lord. Shaks.

7. A general name for a peer of England.

Nor were the crimes objected against him so clear, as to give convincing satisfaction to the major part of both houses, especially at the lord.

King Charles.

8. A baron, as distinguished from those of higher title.

9. An honorary title applied to officers, as lord chief justice, lord mayor, lord

chief baron.

10. A ludicrous title, given by the vulgar to a humbled person; traced, however, the Greek kyrios, crooked. See

DU CANGE in V. LORDS. And Whiter's

Etym. Magn. p. 538.

TO LORD.† v. s. To domineer; to rule despotically; with over before the subject of power.

Unrighteous lord of love! what law is this,

That me thou makest thus tormented by?

The whilst she lordeth in licentious bliss

Of her free will, scorning both thee and me.

Spenser.

I see them *lord*ing it in London streets. Shaks.

Those huge tracks of ground they lorded over,

begat wealth, wealth ushered in pride.

Howell, Vic. Forest.

They had by this possess'd the towers of Gosh,

And lorded over them whom now they serve.

Milton, S. A.

I should rather choose to be tumbled into the dust in blood, bearing witness to any known truth of our Lord, than by a denial of truth, through blood and perjury, waste it to a sceptre, and lord it in a throne. South.

But if thy passions lord it in thy breast,

Art thou not still a slave? Dryden, Pera.

The value of one man the afflicted throne

Imperial, that once lorded o'er the world,

Susain'd. Philips.

The civilizers! the disturbers say,

The robbers, the corruptors of mankind!

Proud vagabonds! who make the world your home,

And lord it where you have no right.

Philips, Briton.

TO LORD.† v. s. To invest with the dignity and privileges of a lord.

He being thus lorded,

Not only with what my revenue yielded,

But what my power might else exact, — like one,

When having, unto truth, by telling of it,

Made such a sinew of his memory.

To credit his own lie, — he did believe

He was the duke. Shakspeare, Tempest.

The Yorkshire men happily may like his (lord

Essex), being lorded.

Second Narrat. of the late Parl. &c. (1658), p. 20.

LOORDING.† n. s. [from lord.]

1. Sir; master; an ancient mode of address.

Now, lordings, trowly,

Ye ben to me welcome right berily,

Listen, lordings, if ye list to weet

The cause. Spenser, F. Q.

He call'd the worthies then, and spake them so:

Lordings, you know I yielded to your will.

Fairfax, Tasso.

2. A little lord; a lord in contempt or ridicule.

I'll question you

Of my lord's tricks, and yours, when you were boys.

You were pretty lordings then!

Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

As if they would turn the world upside down,

And put the scold into the bell, and bell into the clapper, beggars on horseback, and lordings lackey.

Farvor, Antiq. over Novelty, (1619), p. 514.

To lordings, proceed, I tune my lay,

Who feed in tower or hall;

Thou dost lord they be, in dukes I say,

That pride will have a fall.

Swift.

LO'RLIKE.† adj. [lord and like.]

1. Befitting a lord.

Fears to lose the lordlike; lyrynges of this worlde.

Confut. of N. Sherton, (1546), D. v. b.

2. Haughty; proud; insolent.

Lordlike at ease, with arbitrary power,

To peel the chiefs, the people to devour.

Dryden, Hist.

LO'RLING. n. s. A diminutive lord.

Tranlus, of amphibious breed,

By the dam from lordings sprung.

By the sire exhal'd from dung.

Swift.

LO'RLINCES.† n. s. [from lordly.]

1. Dignity; high station.

Thou vouchsafest here to visit me,

Doing the honour of thy lordliness

To one so weak. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

2. Pride; haughtiness.

Balaam being also the false prophet, and set here for the pope and his clergy, agrees excellently

well with the lordliness of him to this Pergamene period, wherein he stode upon the necks of emperours, and kicked their crowns off with his feet.

More, on the Seven Churches, Pref.

LO'RDLY.† adj. [from lord.]

1. Befitting a lord.

Lordly aims require lordly estates to support them.

2. Proud; haughty; imperious; insolent.
Bad, as yourself, my lord;
As't like your lordly, lord protectorship! Shakspeare.

Of me as a common enemy.
So drenched once, may now exasperate them,
I know not; lords are lordless in their wine.
Milton, S. A.

Expect another message more imperious,
More lordly thundering than thou wilt bear.
Milton, S. A.

Every rich and lordly swain,
With pride would 'd'rag about her chain. Swift
LO'RDLY. adv. Imperiously; despotically; proudly.

So when a tiger sucks the bullock's blood,
A famish'd lion, lusting from the wood,
Hears lordly fiers, and challenges the food.
Dryden.

LO'RDSHIP. n. s. [from lord.]

1. Dominion; power.

Let me never know that any base affection should get any lordship in your thoughts. Sidney
It being not upon such an irreparable rising of the ground, it gives the eye lordship over a good large circuit. Sidney

They which are accounted to rule over the Gentiles, exercise lordship over them, and their great ones exercise authority upon us. St. Mark, 2. 42.

Needs must the lordship there from virtue slide.
Faifas.

2. Seignior; domain.

How can those graces of the king be avoided without wronging of those lords which had those lands and lordships given them.
Spenser on Ireland.

There is lordship of the few wherein the master doth much joy, when he walketh about his own possessions. Watson

What lands and lordships for their own sake
My quondam barber, but his worship now.
Dryden.

3. Title of honour used to a nobleman not a duke.

I assure your lordship,
The extreme horror of it almost rais'd me
To air, when first I heard it.
R. Jovian, Catinice.

I could not answer it to the world, if I gave not your lordship my testimony of being the best husband now living. Dryden

4. Titular compellation of judges, and some other persons in authority and office.

LO'RE. n. s. [lope, learning, Sax. from leapan, to learn.]

1. Lesson; doctrine; instruction.

And, for the modest lore of maidenhood
Bids me not rejoice with these armed men.
Oh soldier shall I be? Faifas

The law of nations, or the lore of war. Faifas
Calu region once,
And full of peace: now tost, and turbulent!
For understanding rul'd not; and the will Hear'd not her lore; but in subjection now
To sensual appetite. Milton, P. L.

The subtle fend his lore
Soon learn'd, now milder, and thus answer'd smooth. Milton

Lo! Rouse herself, proud mistress now no more
Of art, but thund'ring against heaven's lore.
Pope.

2. Workmanship.

In her right hand a rod of peace she bore,
About the which two serpents were wound,
Eversly mutually in lovely lore.
Spenser, F. Q. Iv. iii. 42.

LO'RE. pret. and part. [lopan, poplopan, from loapan, Sax.] Lost; left. Obsolete. "Wonne or lore." Plowman's Tale.

Neither of them she found where she them lore.
Spenser, F. Q.

LO'RE. n. s. [from loapan, Sax.] An abandoned scoundrel. Obsolete. Dr.
Johnson.—It is the Cornish term for a vagrant. Sometimes it is, in our lexicography, explained by lorel; both indeed originally meaning what we now call,
"a lost man;" and is rendered into the Latin perditus, perditissimus. See LOREL.
Every lorel shapeth hym to fude newe fraudes.
Chaucer, Boeth.

Siker thou speak'st like a lorel lord
Of heaven to deemen so:
How be I am but rude and borell,
Yet nearer ways I know. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

LO'RESMAN. n. s. [lore and man.] Instructor. Not now in use.
The loresmen of the shepherdes,
Was of Arcude, and light Pan. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.

LO'RICATE. pret. and part. [loricate, loric, Lat.] To plate over; to arm one with a coat of defence. Cockeram.

Nature hath loricated, or plaistered over, the sides of the tympanum in animals with ear-wax, to stop and entangle any insects that should attempt to creep in there. Reg.

LO'RICATION. n. s. [lorication, Lat.] A surface like mail.

These comes [of the ceds] have—the entire lorication smoother couched than those of the firkind. Encom, iv. 1.

LO'RMER. n. s. [lormier, French.] A
LO'RMER. n. s. [lormier, French.] A saddler; a bridle-maker. It properly signified a maker of bits, spurs, and metal-mountings for bridles and saddles. Chalmers.

LO'RING. n. s. [from lore.] Instructive discourse.

That all they, as a goddess her adoring,
Her wisdom did admire, and hearkened to her loring. Spenser, F. Q. v. vii. 42.

LO'RIOT. n. s. [loriot, French.] The bird called witral. [galgulus.] Cotgrave.

LO'RM. pret. and part. [lopm, Sax.
from loepan, Left; forsaken; lost.

That ever I cast to have lorne this ground.
Spenser, Shep. Cal. Sept.

Who after that he had fair Una lorne,
Through light misdeeming of her loyalty.
Spenser, F. Q.

But thou, lone stream whose sullen side,
No sedge-crown'd sisters now attend,
Now waft me from the green hill's side,
Whose cold turf hides the buried friend.
Cullins on the Death of Loric.

LO'SABLE. adj. [from lose.] Subject to privation.

Consider whether motion, or a propensity to it,
be an inherent quality belonging to atoms in general,
and not lovable by them. Boyle.

TO LOSE. v. a. pret. and part. lost.
[Gotick; liusan; Sax. leopian, lojan.]

1. To forfeit by unsuccessful contest: the contrary to win.

I fought the battle bravely which I lost,
And lost it but to Macedonians.
Dryden

The lightn'd couriers ran;
They rush'd, and won by turns, and lost the day.
Dryden.

2. To forfeit as a penalty. In this sense is Paradise lost.

Fare—few, alas! the casual blessing bound,
So hard to gain, so easy to be lost! Pope.

3. To be deprived of.

He lost his right hand with a shot, and, instead thereof, ever after used a hand of iron.

Who conquer'd him, and in what fatal stroke
The youth, without a wound, could lose his life.
Dryden.

4. To suffer diminution of.

If salt have lost its savour, wherewith shall it be salted? St. Matthew.

5. To possess no longer: contrary to keep.
They have lost their trade of woollen drapery.
Gronov.

No youth shall equal boys of glory give,
The Trojan honour and the Roman boast,
Admir'd when living, and ador'd when lost.
Dryden.

We should never lose sight of the country,
though sometimes entertained with a distant prospect of it. Adisson.

6. To miss, so as not to find.

Venus wept the sad disaster
Of having lost her favourite dove. Prior.

7. To separate or alienate. It is perhaps in this sense always used passively, with to before that from which the separation is made.

But if in honour lost 'tis still decreed
For my bow shall show, my flock shall bleed;
Judge and assert my right, impartial Jove.
Pope, Ode.

When men are openly abandoned, and lost to all shame, they have no reason to think it lost, if their memory be reproached. Swift.

8. To ruin; to send to perdition.

In spite of all the virtue we can boast,
The woman that deliberates is lost. Adisson.

9. To bewilder, so that the way is no longer known.

I will go lose myself,
And wander up and down to view the city. Shakspeare.

Nor are constant forms of prayer more likely to flatter and hinder the spirit of prayer and devotion, than unpremeditated and confused variety to distract and lose it. King Charles.

When the mind pursues the idea of infinity, it uses the ideas and repetition of numbers, which are so many distinct ideas, kept best by number from running into a confused chaos, wherein the mind
loses itself. Locke.

10. To deprive of.

How should you go about to lose him a wife he loves with so much passion. Temple

11. Not to employ; not to enjoy.

The happy have whole days, and those they use,
The unhappy have lost hours, and those they lose.
Dryden.

To lose these years which worthier thoughts require.

12. To squander, to throw away.

To lose that health which should those thoughts inspire. Savage.

I no more complain,
Time, health, and fortune are not lost to vain. Pope.

13. To suffer to vanish from view.

Like following life in creatures we direct,
We lose it in the moment we detect. Pope.

Oh in the passion's wild rotation tost,
Our spring of action to ourselves is lost. Pope.

14. To destroy by shipwreck.

The coast
Where first my shipwreck'd knight was lost. Prior.

15. To throw away; to employ ineffectually.
He has merit, good nature, and integrity that are too often lost upon great men, or at least are not all three a match for flattery. Pope, Letters.

16. To miss; to part with, so as not to recover.

These sharp encounters, where always many more men are lost than are killed or taken prisoners, put such a stop to Middleton's march, that he was glad to retire. Clarendon.

17. To be freed from; as, to lose a fever.

His seely back the bunch has got Which Edwin lost before. Parad.

To LOSE, v. n.

1. Not to win.

We'll hear poor rogues
Talk of court news, and we'll talk with them too,
Who loses, and who wins; who's in, who's out. Shakespeare.

2. To decline; to fail.

Wisdom in discourse with her
Loses discomfite, and like folly she wins. Milton, P. L.

LO'SSEL, n. s. [from the Sax. lorsian, to perish, to be lost. What occasion is there for pronouncing this a corruption of lord, when the derivation is so clear? Mr. Douce supposes the similarity of the letters r and z, in ancient manuscripts, to have occasioned the two words lord, and lozd, or lozel.] A scoundrel; a sorry worthless fellow. A word now obsolete.

Such lozels and scoundrels cannot easily, by any sheriff, be gotten, as they are challenged for any such fact. Spectator on Ireland.

A lozel wandering by the way,
One that to bounty never cast his mind,
No thought of honour ever did essay
His lozels breast. Spectator, F. Q.

Be not with work of lozels' wit defamed,
Ne let such verses poetry be named.

By Cambridge a towns I do know,
Whose losses by lozels death I tell,
More here than is needful to tell. Taster, Husb.

A gross lag!
And, lozel, thou art worthy to be hang'd,
That wilt not stay her tongue.

The rude hand of many an idle lozel, that dares
Adventure to portray that sacred beauty.

Luc, M. of Br. Beauv., (1614), p. 51.

LO'SENGER, n. s. [from the Sax. leasengere, lying; loesenger, Fr. a beguiler, Cotgrave.] A deceiver; a flatterer. Obsolete.

Alas! ye lozels, many a false flatterer
Is in your court, and many a loesenger.

Chaucer, Non. Pr. Tale.

LO'SER, n. s. [from lose.] One that is deprived of any thing; one that forfeits any thing; one that is impaired in his possession or hope; the contrary to winner or gainer.

With the losers let it sympathise,
For nothing can seem foul to those that win.

No man can be provident of his time but is not prudent in the choice of his company; and if one of the speakers be vain, tedious, and trifling, he that hears, and be that answers, are equal losers of their time. Bp. Taylor, Holy Living.

It cannot last, because the net seems to have been carried on rather by the interest of particular countries, than by that of the whole, which must be a loser by it. Temple.

A bull with gilded horns,
Shall be the portion of a conquering chief,
A sword and helm shall cheer the loser's grief.

Dryden.
Losers and malecontents, whose portion and inheritance is a freedom to speak. South.

LO'SING, n. s. [loving, Saxon.] Loss; diminution.

The four of the Lord goeth before the obtaining of authority; but roughness and pride is the losing thereof. Eccles. x. 21.

LOSA, n. s. [lof, Sax. from the verb leorjan, to lose.]

1. Detriment; privation; diminution of good; the contrary to gain.

The only gain he purchased was to be capable of loss and detriment for the good of others.

An evil natured son is the dishonour of his father that begot him; and a foolish daughter is born to his losa. Ecclesi.

The abatement of price of any of the landholder's commodities, lessens his income, and is a clear losa. Locke.

2. Miss; privation.

If he were dead, what would betide of me?
— No other harm but loss of such a lord.
— The loss of such a lord includes all harms.

3. Deprivation; forfeiture.

Loss of Eden, till one greater man Restore it, and regain. Milton, P. L.

4. Destruction.

Her fellow ships from her losa she merited;
But only she was sunk, and all were safe besides. Dryden.

There succeeded an absolute victory for the English, with the slaughter of above two thousand of the enemy, with the losa but of one man, though not a few hurt. Bacon.

5. Fault; puzzle: used only in the following phrase.

Not the least transaction of sense and motion in man, but philosophers are at a losa to comprehend.

Reason is always striving, and always at a losa, while it is exercised about that which is not its proper object. Dryden.

A man may sometimes be at a losa which side to close with. Baker on Learning.

6. Useless application.

It would be loss of time to explain any further our superiority to the enemy in numbers of men and horse.

LO'SFUL, *adj. [loss and full.] Detrimental; noxious.

Aught that might be loisful or prejudicial to us.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 271.

LO'SLESS, *adj. [loss and less.] Exempt from loss.

Rebellion rages in our Irish province; but, with miraculous and loisless victories of few against many, is daily discomfited and broken.

Milton, Apol. for Sweetness.

LOST, participial adj. [from lose.] No longer perceptible.

In seventeen days appear'd your pleasing count,
And woody mountains, half in vapours lost.

Pope, Ode.
LOT, n. s. [laud, Gothic; hlut, Saxon; lot, Dutch. Dr. Johnson. — The part participle of the Sax. hlutan, to cast. Mr. H. Tooke. — "The English word lot cometh of the Hebrew law, to hide or cover, or to lie hid; because a lot is of obscure and doubtful things." Leigh, Critica Sacra, 1650, p. 119. col. 1.]

1. Fortune; state assigned.

Kids, as largely conclude my lingering lot:
Didstid not not, although I be not fair,
Who is an heir of many hundred sheep,
Doth beauty keep which never sun can burn,
Nor storms do turn. Sidney.

Our own lot is best; and by aiming at what we have not, we lose what we have already. L'Esrange.
Prepar'd I stand; he was lost born to try —
The lot of man, to suffer and to die.

2. A die, or any thing used in determining chances.

Ases shall cast lots upon the two goats; one lot for the Lord, and the other lot for the scapegoat. Lev. xvi. 8.

Their tasks in equal portions she divides,
And where unequal, where by lots decides.

Dryden, Virg.
Ulysses bids his friends to cast lots, to show, that he would not voluntarily expose them to so imminent danger. Johnson.

3. A chance. See LOTTERY.

If you have heard your general talk of Rome,
And of his friends there, it is lots to blanks
My name hath touch'd your ears; it is Memenius.
Shakespeare, Coriol.

4. A portion; a parcel of goods as being drawn by lot: as, what lot of silks had you at the sale?

5. Proportion of taxes; as to pay scot and lot.

Anyone cometh another —
And with her dote, laying
Meis, salt, or other thing,
Her latest girl, her wedding ring,
To pay for her lot. Shelton, Poems, p. 131.

To LOT, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To assign; to set apart.

A just reward, such as all times before
Have ever listed to those wretched lots.

They appoint no time for their release, but patiently abide his *lot*ed leisure.

Anderson, Epist. on Benedictus, (1753), fol. 54. b.

2. To distribute into lots; to catalogue: as, the goods are *lot*ed.

3. To portion.

Some sense, and more estate, kind Heaven
To this well *lot*ed poor has given. Prior.

LOT, n. s. or Nettle tree, n. s. [late, Fr. Cotgrave.]

1. A plant. See LOTOS.
The leaves of the lot tree are like those of the nettle. The fruit of this tree is not so tempting to us, as it was to the companions of Ulysses: the wood is durable, and used to make pipes for wind instruments; the root is proper for hafts of knives, and was highly esteemed by the Romans for its beauty and use. Miller.

Next comes the Lot-tree, in whose dusky bue,
Her black and sun-burnt country you might view,
Tut's Cowley.

2. A little muddy fish, like an eel; an eel-pout; also a small scaled fish.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

LOTH, *See LOATH.

LOTOS, n. s. [Latin.] See LOTE.
The trees around them all their food produce,
Lotos, the name divine, nectarous juice.

Pope, Ode.
There appear to have been two distinct species of lotus designed by the term, [lotos], because Herodotus and Pliny, in particular, describe a marked difference between them: the one being an aquatic plant, whose root and seeds were eaten in Egypt; the other, the fruit of a shrub or small tree, on the sandy coast of Libya.
Remet on the Geograph. of Herodotus.

LO'ION. n. s. [lotio, Latin; lotion, Fr.]

A lotion is a form of medicine compounded of aqueous liquids, used to wash any part with. Quincy.

In lotions in women's cases, he orders two portions of belladonna macerated in two coyns of water. Arbutnotus on Cains.

LO'TTERY. n. s. [lotterie, Fr. from lot.]

1. A game of chance; a sortilege; distribution of prizes by chance; a play in which lots are drawn for prizes.

Let high-sighted tyrants range on,
Till each man drops by lottery. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

The lottery that he hath devised in these three chests of gold, silver, and lead, will never be chosen by any but whom you shall rightly love. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

Fortune, that with malicious joy
Does man, her slave, oppress,
Still various and unconscionable still,
Promotes, degrades, delights in strife.

And makes a lottery of life. Shakespeare, Hen. 4.
Every warrior may be said to be a soldier of fortune, and the best commanders to have a lottery for their work. South.

2. Allottery; allotment. Not now in use.

If beauty, wisdom, modesty, can settle
The heart of Antony, Octavia is A blessed lottery to him. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Faunting under Fortune's false lottery. Beaumont and Fl. Hon. Man's Fortune.

LO'VABLE. adj. [from love.] Amiable; worthy to be loved. Shakespeare.

LO'VAGE. n. s. [levisticum, Latin.] A plant.

LOUD. adj. [from loud, Sax. the past participle of the verb to loud, or to bellow; hlopan, behlapan, loved, low'd.] What we now write loud, was formerly, and more properly, written low'd. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. ii. 39. Su. Goth. loud; Teut. luyde; Germ. laut.]

1. Noisy; striking the ear with great force.

They were instant with loud voices, requiring that he might be crucified. St. Luke, xlii. 23.
The numbers soft and clear,
Gently steal upon the ear;
Now louder, and yet louder rise,
And fill with spreading sounds the skies. Pope, St. Cecilia.

2. Clamorously; turbulent.

She is loud and stubborn; her feet abide not in her house. Proverbs.

LOUD. adv. Noisily; so as to strike the ear with great force.

The guests loud laughing, who can then be heard?
Darius, W's Pilgrim, sign. V. 2.
His prowess Philomides confound'd,
And loud acclaiming Greeks the victor bless'd. Pope.

LO'UDLY. adv. [from loud.]

1. Noisily; so as to be heard far.
The soldier that philosopher well blam'd
Who long and loudly in the schools declaim'd. Dryden.

2. Clamorously; with violence of voice.

I read above fifty pamphlets, written by so many presbyterian divines, loudly disclaiming toleration. Swift.

LO'UDNESS. n. s. Noise; force of sound; turbulence; vehemence or fierceness of clamour.

Had any disaster made room for grief, it would have moved according to prudence, and the proportions of the provocation: it would not have sallied out into complaint or loudness. South.

TO LOVE. v. c. [lupan, Sax.]

1. To regard with passionate affection, as that of one sex to the other.

Good shepherd, tell this youth what 'tis to love. — It is to be made all of sighs and tears; it is to be made all of faith and service; it is to be all made of fantasy.

All made of passion, and all made of wishes;
All adoration, duty, and obedience;
All humbleness, all patience, all impatience,
All purity, all trial, all observance. Shakespeare, Twelfth Night.

One who in love were wise.
The jealous man wishes himself a kind of deity to the person he loves; he would be the only employer of her thoughts. Addison.

2. To regard with the affection of a friend.

None but his brethren he, and sisters, knew,
Whom the kind youth prefer'd to me,
And much above myself I lov'd them too. Shakespeare, Twelfth Night.

3. To regard with parental tenderness.

He that loveth me shall be loved of my father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him. St. John.

4. To be pleased with; to delight in.

Wit, eloquence, and poetry,
Arts which I lov'd. Shakespeare, Twelfth Night.

He lov'd his worthless rhimes, and, like a friend
Would find out something to commend. Shakespeare, Twelfth Night.

5. To regard with reverent unwillingness to offend.

Love the Lord thy God with all thine heart.
Deut. vi. 5.

TO LOVE. v. n. To delight; to take pleasure.

Fish used to salt water delight more in fresh;
we see that salmon and smelts love to get into rivers, though against the stream. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means; and my people love to have it so. Jerem. v. 31.

LOVE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The passion between the sexes.

Hearken to the birds love-learned song.
The dewic leaves among! Spenser, Epithalam.

While tidly I stood looking on,
I found the effect of love in idleness. Shakespeare, Twelfth Night.

My tales of love were wont to weary you;
I know you joy not in a love discourse. Shakespeare, Twelfth Night.

I look'd upon love with a soldier's eye,
That lik'd, but had a rougher task in hand
Than to drive liking to the name of love. Shakespeare, Twelfth Night.

What need we vermin-tinctur'd lip for that,
Love-darting eyes, or tresses like the moon? Milton, Comus.

Love quarrels off in pleasing concord end,
Not wedlock treachery, engendering life. Milton, S. A.

A love potion works more by the strength of charm than nature. Cotton on Popularity.

You know you are in my power by making love. Dryden.

Let mutual joys our mutual trust combine,
And love, and love-born confidence be thine. Pope.

Cold is that breast which warm'd the world before,
And these love-darting eyes must roll no more. Pope.

2. Kindness; good-will; friendship.

What love, think'st thou, I sue so much to get?
My love till death, my humble thanks, my prayers;
That love which virtue begs, and virtue grants. Shakespeare, Twelfth Night.

God brought Daniel into favour and tender love with the prince. Dan. i. 9.

The one prech Christ of contention, but the other of love. Psalm i. 17.

By this shall all men know that you are my disciples, if you have love one to another. St. John, xiii. 35.

Unwearied have we spent the nights,
Till the Lesbian stars, so faint'd for love,

3. Courtship.

Demetrius
Made love to Nedar's daughter Helena,
And won her soul. Shakespeare, Mid. N. Dream.

If you will marry make your love to me,
My lady is bespoken. Shakespeare, F. Lear.

The enquiry of truth, which is the love-making or wooing of it; the knowledge of truth, the preference of it; and the belief of truth, the enjoying of it, is the sovereign good of human nature. Bacon, Essays.

4. Tenderness; parental care.

No religion that ever was, so fully represents the goodness of God, and his tender love to mankind, and is the most powerful argument to the love of God. Tillotson.

5. Liking; inclination to; as the love of one's country.

In youth, of patrimonial wealth possess,
The love of science faintly warm'd his breast. Foster.

6. Object beloved.

Open the temple gates unto my love.
If that the world and love were young,
And truth in every shepherd's tongue;
These pretty pleasures might me move,
To live with thee, and be thy love. Raleigh.

The bush'd never hopes his love to see. Dryden.

The lever and the love of human kind. Pope.

7. Lewdness.

He is not settling on a lewd love bed,
But on his knees at meditation. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

8. Unreasonable liking.

The love to sin makes a man sin against his own reason. St. Paul, Holy Living.

Men in love with their opinions may not only suppose what is in question, but allege wrong matter of fact. Locke.

9. Fondness; concord.

Come, love, and health to all! —
Then I'll sit down: give me some wine; fill full. Shakespeare, Twelfth Night.

Shall I come unto you with a rod, or in love, and in the spirit of meekness? 1 Cor. iv. 21.

10. Principle of union.

Love is the great instrument of nature, the bond and cement of society, the spirit and spring of the universe: love is such an affection as cannot so properly be said to be in the soul, as the soul to be in that: it is the whole man wrapt up into one desire. Dryden, Ovid.

11. Picturesque representation of love.

The lovely lady was born with every grace:
Such was his form as painters, when they show
Their utmost art, on naked loaves bestow. Dryden, Ovid.

12. A word of endearment.

'Tis no dissonance, trust you, love, 'tis none;
I would die for thee. Dryden, Don Sebastian.

13. Love reverence.

I know that you have not the love of God in you. St. John.

Love is of two sorts, of friendship and of desire: the one betwixt friends, the other betwixt lovers; the one a rational, the other a sensitive love; so that the love of God consists of two parts, as esteeming of God, and desiring of him. Hammond.

The love of God makes a man chaste without the laborious arts of fasting, and exterior disciplines; he reaches at glory without any arms but those of love.

Rp. Taylor.

14. A kind of thin silk stuff.
Amarnoth.
This leaf held near the eye, and obverted to the light, appeared so full of pores, with such a transparency as that of a sieve, a piece of cypress, or lace hood.
Boyle on Colours.

LO'VEAPPLE, n. s. A plant. Milder.
Love-apple, though its flower has fair appears,
Its golden fruit deserves the name it bears.
Tate's Country.

LO'VEDAY, n. s. [love and day.] A day, in old times, appointed for the amicable settlement of differences. "Si ante iudicium captatur dies amoris." Bracton. And, "agayn the fourme of a love-day taken between the same parties." Rot. Parl. 13 H. 4. n. 13. Tyrwhitt.
In lovedays, there coude he machel help.
Chaucer, C. T. Pro.

I can holde lovedays, and assure a reves' reknyng.
Fit. of P. Harman.

This day, all quarrels die, Andronicus; —
I do remit these young men's heinous faults: Lavinia, though you left me like a chail, I found a friend; and sure as death I swore, I would not part a bachelor from the priest. Come, if the emperor's court can feast two brides, You are my guest, Lavinia, and your friends: This day shall be a loveday, Tamora.
Andronicus.

LOVEFAVOUR, n. s. [love and favour.] Something given to be worn in token of love.

LOVE-IN-IDENESS, n. s. A kind of violet.
A little western flower, —
Before, milk-white; now purple with love's wound:
And maidens call it love-in-ideness.
Shakespeare, Mid. N. Dream.

LO'VEKNOT, n. s. [love and knot.] A complicated figure, by which affection interchanged is figured.

LO'VELESS, n. s. [love and less.] Sweet-heart; lass beloved.
So soon as Tybalt's love-lass can display
Her opall colours in her Eastern throne.
For Mag. p. 776.

LO'VELESS, adj. [love and less.]
1. Without love; void of the passion between the sexes.
He wanted nothing but a lady, on whom he might bestow his service and affection; for the knight-errant that is loveless, resembles a tree that wastes leaves and fruit, or a body without a soul.

Ye loveless bards, intent with artful pains
To form a sigh, or to contrive a tear, Forego your Pindus! Shenstone, Eleg. 1.

2. Without endearment; without tenderness.
Not in the bought smiles
Of harlots, loveless, joyless, unendear'd!
Milton, P. L.

3. Void of kindness.
How rules therein thy breast so quiet state,
Spite leagued with merry love with loveless hate?
P. Fletcher, Plac. Eccl. iii. 14.

LO'VELETTER, n. s. [love and letter.] Letter of courtship.
Have I escaped loveletters in the holiday time
Of my beauty, and am I now a subject for them?
Shakespeare.

The children are educated in the different notions of their parents; the sons follow the father, while the daughters read loveletters and romances to their mother.
Addison, Spect.

LOVE-LIES-A-BLEEDING, n. s. A kind of amaranth. See the first sense of AMARANTH.

LO'VELLY, adv. [from lovely.] Amiaably; in such a manner as to excite love.
Thou look'st
Lovely dreadful.
Otway, Fen. Preserved.

LOVELINESS, n. s. [from lovely.] Amiability; qualities of mind or body that excite love.
Carrying thus in one person the only two bands of good-will, loveliness and lovingness.
Sidney.

When I approach
Her loveliness, so absolute she seems,
That what she wills to do, or say,
Seems virtuous, virtuouslest, discreetest, best.
Milton, P. L.

If there is such a naive loveliness in the sex, as to make them victorious when they are in the wrong, how restless is their power when they are on the side of truth?

LO'VELOCK, n. s. [love and lock.] A term for a particular sort of curl, worn by the men of fashion in the reigns of Elizabeth and James the First; against which Prynne wrote a laborious pamphlet in 1628, maintaining that utter ruin must be the portion of his countrymen, if they did not leave off to nourish their lovelocks! See also TO CALAMISTRATE. The mode continued beyond the date of Prynne's ridiculous indignation. Lily seems to have somewhat anticipated, in the following passage, part of the vogue of the present times.

How, sir, will you be trimmed? will you have your beard like a quide or a bodkin? a perubone on your upper lip, or an alley on your chin? a low curl on your head like a bull, or dangling like a spaniel? your mustachoes sharpe at the end, like shoemakers' awles, or hanging down to your mouth, like gosses dakers? your lovelocks wreathed with a silken twist, or shaggy to fall on your shoulders?
Lily, Mitas, (1592.)

Prodigal in apparel, "pure lotus," neat combed and curled, with powdered hairs, "comptus et calamistratus," with a long love-lock, a flower in his ear, perfumed gloves.

Burton, Anat. of M. p. 539.

LO'VELORN, adj. [love and lorn.] Forsaken of one's love.
The love-lorn nightingale,
Nightly to thee her song mourneth well.
Milton, Comus.

LO'VELY, adj. [from love. Sax. luplic.] Amiable; exciting love.
The breast of Hebea,
When she did suckle Hector, look'd not lovelier
Than Hector's forehead. Shakespeare, Coriol.

Saul and Jonathan were lovely and pleasant in their lives, and in their death they were not divided.
5 Sam.

The flowers which it had press'd
Appeared to my view,
More fresh and lovely than the rest,
That in the meadows grew.
Denham.

The Christian religion gives us a more lovely character of God than any religion ever did.
Tillotson.

The fair
With cleanly powder dry their hair;
And round their lovely breast and head
Fresh flow'r n their mingl'd odours shed.
Prior.

LO'VELY, adv. [luplice, Sax.] Charming-ly; beautifully.
The defeated liquor —
Spouts into subject vessels, lovely clear.
Philips, Cider, B. 2.

LO'VEMONGER, n. s. [love and monger.] One who deals in affairs of love.
Thou art an old lovmonger, and speakst skillfully.
Shakespeare.

LO'VEQUICK, adj. [love and quick.] With the eagerness of love.
[She] sees not him her soul desir'd to see;
And yet hope spent makes her not leave to look:
At last her lovequick eyes, which ready be,
Fasten on one.
Daniel, Cu. War, B. 2.

LO'VER, n. s. [from love.]
1. One who is in love.
Love is blind, and lovers cannot see
The pretty follies that themselves commit.
Shakespeare.

Let it never be said, that he whose heart
Is fill'd with love, should break a lover's rest.
Dryden.

2. A friend; one who regards with kindness.
I tell thee, fellow,
Thy general is my lover; I have been
The look of his good act, whence men have read
His name unparalleled, imply amplified.
Shakespeare.

3. One who likes any thing.
To be good and gracious, and a lover of knowledge, are amiable things.
Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

LO'VER, n. s. An opening. See LOUVER.

LOVESECRET, n. s. [love and secret.] Secret between lovers.
What danger, Arimant, is this you fear?
Or what lovesecret which I must not hear?
Dryden, Aur.

LO'VESHAFT, n. s. [love and shaft.] The arrow of Cupid.
A certain aim he took
At a fair vestal throned by the west,
And loo'd his loveshaft smartly from his bow.
Shakespeare, Mid. N. Dream.

LO'VESICK, adj. [love and sick.] Disordered with love; languishing with amorous desire.
See, on the shore inhabits purple spring,
Where nightingales their lovesick ditty sing.
Dryden.

To the dear mistress of my lovesick mind,
Her swain a pretty present has design'd.
Dryden, Virg.

Of the reliefs to ease a lovesick mind,
Flavia prescribes despair.
Granville.

LO'VESOME, adj. [lupsum, Sax. sweet, agreeable.] Lovely. Adopted by Dryden from Chaucer. A word not now perhaps in use.
Nothing new can spring
Without thy warmth, without thy influence bear,
Or beautiful or lovesome can appear.
Dryd. Luc.

LO'VESONG, n. s. [love and song.] Song expressing love.
Poor Romeo is already dead!
Stubb'd with a white wench's black eye,
Run through the ear with a lovesong.
Shakespeare.

Lovesong weeds and lovesick thorns are grown,
Where seeds of better arts were early sown.
Dennis.

LO'VESUIT, n. s. [love and suit.] Courtship.
His lovesuit hath been to me
As fearful as a siege,
Shakespeare, Cymb.

LO'VETALK, n. s. [love and tale.] Narrative of love.
The lovetale
Infected Sion's daughters with like heat;
Whose wanton passions in the sacred porch
Easied saw.
Milton, P. L.

Cato's a proper person to contrait
A lovetale word.
Addison.

nanced by the following passage, which has escaped the notice of the commentators; where it evidently means to subject.

For few there were that were so much redoubt'd,
Whom double fortune lifted up and lout'd.

Mr. for Mag. p. 303.
I am lout'd by a traitor villain,
And cannot help the noble chevalier.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI. P. I.
LO'UTISH. adj. [from lout.] Clownish; bumpkin.

This loutish clown is such, that you never saw so ill-favoured a vice; his behaviour such, that he is beyond the degree of ridiculous.

Sedley.
LO'UTISHLY. adv. [from lout.] With the air of a clown; with the gait of a bumpkin; like a lubber.

Hallet.
LO'UTISHNESS. n. s. [from loutish.] Clownishness; behaviour of a bumpkin.

Loquacity and rusticity is not loquacity, except it be accompanied with loutish-like stupidity.

World of Wonders, (1696), p. 24.

LO'UVER. n. s. [from louver, French, an opening.] An opening for the smoke to go out at in the roof of a cottage. In the north of England, an opening at the top of a dove-cot. Written also lover and lover. See Barret's Alv. 1580.

But darkness drest and daily night did hover
Through all the inner parts wherein they dwell,
No lightning was with window, nor with lover,
But with continual candle light, which fell
A doubtful mass of things.

Spenser, F. v. vi. s. 42.
An envious man having caught his neighbour's pigeons in a net, pluck'd off their tails, and let them go; which, though they could fly forward home, yet were soon after found dead in the dovecote, fann'd'd for want of loer, as unable to fly up perpendicularly, and so out at the lover.

Fuller's Worthies in Northamptonshire.
The ancient manner of building in Cornwall was, to set hearths in the midst of rooms for chimneys, which vented the smoke at a louver in the top.

Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.
LOW. adj. [law, Dan. lo, Icel. laeg, Dutch; lag, Su. Goth. from the Goth. ligan, to lie, according to some.]

1. Not high.
Their wandering course now high, now low, then bid,
Progressive retrograde.

Milton, P. L.
2. Not rising far upwards.
It became a spreading vine of low stature.

3. Not elevated in place or local situation.
O mighty Caesar! do'st thou lye so low?
Art all thy conquests, glories, triumphs, spoils,
Shrunk to this little measure?

Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.
Equal in days and nights, except to those Beyond the polar circles; in them day
Had unobscured shadow, while the low sun,
To recompense his distance, in their sight
Had rounded still 'till 'horizon, and o'erlook'd
Or east or west.
Whatever is washed away from them is carried down into the lower grounds and into the sea, and nothing is brought back.

Burnet, Th. of the Earth.
4. Descending far downwards; deep.
The lowest bottom shook of Erebus.

Milton, P. L.
So high as heav'd the tumid hills, so low,
Down sunk a hollow bottom, broad and deep,
Capacious bed of waters.

His volant touch
Insisteth through all proportions low and high;
Fled and pursu'd transverse the resonant fugue.

Milton, P. L.
5. Not deep; not swelling high; shallow; used of water.

As two men were walking by the sea-side at low water, they saw an oyster, and both pointed at it together.

J. Eiranger.
It is low ebb sure with his accuser, when such peccadillos are put in to swell the charge.

Atturbury.
6. Not of high price: as, corn is low.

7. Not loud; not noisy.
As when an open air we blow,
The breath, through small'd, sounds flat and low;
But if a trumpet take the blast,
It lifts it high, and makes it last.

Waller.
The theatre is so well contriv'd, that, from the very deep of the stage, the lowest sound may be heard distinctly to the farthest part of the audience; and yet, if you raise your voice as high as you please, there is nothing like an echo to cause confusion.

Addison on Italy.

8. In latitudes near to the line.
They take their course either high to the north, or low to the south.

Abbot, Desc. of the World.

9. Not rising to so great a sum as some other accumulation of particulars.
Who can imagine, that in sixteen or seventeen hundred years' time, taking the lower chronology, that the earth had then stood, mankind should be propagated no farther than Judas?

Burnet, Th. of the Earth.

10. Late in time: as, the lower empire.

11. Dejected; depressed.
His spirits are so low his voice is drown'd,
He hears as from afar, or in a swoon,
Like the deaf murmurs of a distant sound.

Dryd.
Though he before had gall and rage,
Which death or conquest must assuage;
He grows despirited and low,
He hates the fight, and shuns the foe.

Prior.
12. Impotent; subdued.
To be worst,
The lowest, most dejected, thing of fortune,
Stands still in experience.

Shakespeare.
Why but to keep ye low and ignorant.

Milton, P. L.
To keep them all quiet, he must keep them in greater awe and less splendor; which power he will use to keep them as low as he pleases, and at no more cost than makes for his own pleasure.

Grant, Bills of Mortality.

13. Not elevated in rank or station; affected.
He woos both high and low, both rich and poor.

Shakespeare.
Try in men of low and mean education, who have never elevated their thoughts above the spade.

Locke.

14. Dishonourable; betokening meanness of mind: as low tricks.
Yet sometimes nations will decline so low
From virtue, which is reason, that no wrongs
But justice, and some fatal course annexed,
Deprives them of their outward liberty,
Their inward loss.

Milton, P. L.

15. Not sublime; not exalted in thought or diction.
He has not so many thoughts that are low and vulgar, but, at the same time, has not so many thoughts that are sublime and noble.

Addison, Spect.

In comparison of these divine writers, the noblest wit of the heathen world are low and dull.

Felton on the Classics.

16. Submissive; humble; reverent.

I bring them to receive
From thee their names, and pay their fealty
With low subjection.

Milton, P. L.
From the tree her step she turn'd;
But first low reverence done, as to the pow'r
This deity within.

Milton, P. L.

17. A term applied to certain members of the church, in contradistinction to high. See the 24th sense of HIGH.

Low, adv.

1. Not aloft; not on high.
There under ebon shades and low-brow'd rocks,
As ragged as thy locks,
In dark Cimærian desert ever dwell.

Milton, L'Al.

My eyes no object met
But low-hung clouds, that dip themselves in rain,
To shake their bores on the earth again.
No luxury found room
In low-hung offices, and bare walls of lome.

Dryden.
Vast yellow offsprings are the German's pride;
But hotter climates narrower frames obtain,
And low-built bodies are the growth of Spain.

Cruc.

We wandering go through dreary wastes,
Where round some mouldering tow'r pale icy creeps,
And low-brow'd rocks hang nodding o'er the deeps.

Page.

2. Not at a high price; meanly. It is chiefly used in composition.

Vroude of their numbers and virtue in soul!
The confident and over-lustful French;
Do the low-rated English play at dice?

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

This is the prettiest low-born lass, that ever
Ran the greenward; nothing she does or seems,
But smacks of something greater than herself,
Too noble for this place.

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

Whenever I am turned out, my lodge descends upon a low-spirited creeping family.

Swift.
Corruption, like a general flood,
Shall deluge all; and avarice creeping on,
Spread like a low-born mist, and blot the sun.

Page.

3. In times approaching towards our own.
In that part of the world which was first inhabited, even as low down as Aristotle's time, they wandered with their flocks and herds.

Locke.

4. With a depression of the voice.
Lucia, speak low, he is retir'd to rest.

Addison, Cato.

5. In a state of subjection.
How comes it that, having been once so low brought, and thoroughly subjected, they afterwards lifted up themselves so strongly again?

Spencer on Ireland.

To Low, v. a. [from the adjective.] To sink; to make low. Probably misprinted for lower. Dr. Johnson.—Swift perhaps chose to adopt the old verb, of which Dr. Johnson has offered no other notice than the last of the following citations; where it is certainly a justifiable word.

Ech that exhaunish him schal be low'd; and be that meketh him schal be high'd.

Wicliffe, St. Luke, xiv.

He that high hearts loweth
With fyrie darts, which he throweth, Cupid.

Geoffrey, Conf. Am. B. 4.

The value of guineas was low'd from one-and-twenty shillings and sixpence to one-and-twenty shillings.

Swift.

To Low, v. n. [hlopan, Saxon. The adjective low, not high, is pronounced lo, and would rhyme to no: the verb low, to below, low; and is by Dryden rightly rhymed to now.] To bellow as a cow.

Doth the wild ass lony when he has grass? or loweth the ox over his fodder? Job, vi. 5.

Fair lo grac'd his shield, but lo now,
With horns exalted stands, and seems to low.

Had he been born some simple shepherd's heir;
The lowing heard, or flency about his care. Prior.

LOW.* n. s. [lohe, German.] Flame; fire; heat. Yet used in the north and west of England. See also LOW-BELL.

LOW-BELL.* n. s. [lohe, German; leg, Sax.; or log, Icelandic, a flame, and bell.] A kind of fowling in the night, in which the birds are wakened by a bell, and lured by a flame into a net. Low denotes a flame in Scotland, and some parts of England.

In a still evening, about eight of the clock, when the moon shines not, take your lowlod of a moderate size, that it may be well managed by one man in one hand.

The Experienced Fowler, (1697), p. 97.
Her beauty, and her drum, to foes
Did cause amazement double:
As timorous larks amazed are
With light, and with a lowbell.

Balled of St. George for England.

To LOW-BELL.* v. a. [from the noun.] To scare as with a lowbell.

To be thus lowlodded with panick frights, to be thus tremblingly dismayed where there is no place of fear — is a mighty disproportion of men's faculties. Hammond, Works, iv. 579.

LOW-L.* The termination of local names.

Lowc, loe, comes from the Saxon hleap, a hill, heap, or barrow; and so the Gothick latai is a monument or barrow.

Glossary, Camden.

Hence Dumbler-hap, Houdanum, canum tumulus; Loob: iape-hap, Ladlow, populi tumulus; Gape-hap, Mercus, or
Marlow, mariscus circumdatus tumulus,
&c. Lye, edit. Manning, in V. hlep.

To LOW-WEAR.* v. a. [from low-]

1. To bring low; to bring down by way of submersion.

As our heavy vessels pass their watery way,
Let all the naval world due homage pay;
With hasty reverence their top-bonours lower,
Confessing the asserted power. Prior.

2. To suffer to sink down.

When water issues out of the apertures with more than ordinary rapidity, it bears along with it small particles of loose matter as it met with in its passage through the stone, and it sustains those particles till its motion begins to remit, when by degrees it lowers them, and lets them fall.

Woodward.

3. To lessen; to make less in price or value.

The kingdom will lose by this lowering of interest, if it makes foreigners withdraw any of their money. Locke.

Some people know it is for their advantage to lower their interest. Child on Trade.

To LOW-WEAR.* v. n. To grow less; to fall;
to sink.

The present pleasure,
By revolution low-riding, does become
The opposite of itself. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

To LOW-WEAR.* v. n. [It is doubtful what was the primitive meaning of this word:
if it was originally applied to the appearance of the sky, it is no more than to grow low, as the sky seems to do in dark weather: if it was first used of the countenance, it may be derived from the Dutch loeren, to look askance; the ow sounds as ow in hour; or make low, the ow sound as o in more. Dr. Johnson.—

The word is primarily perhaps from the Saxon hleap, the face, the front, the brow; and should be written lowr.
Chaucer uses lowre in the sense of to be discontented.]

1. To appear dark, stormy, and gloomy; to be clouded.

Now is the winter of our discontent
Made glorious summer by this sun of York;
And all the clouds that lowered upon our house,
In deep bosom of the ocean buried.
Shakespeare, Rich. III.

The lowering spring, with lavish rain,
Beats down the slender stem and bearded grain.

When the heavens are filled with clouds, and the nature wears a lowering countenance, 1 withdraw myself from these uncomfortable scenes. Addison.
The dawn is overcast, the morning lowers,
And heavily in clouds brings on the day.

Addison, Cato.

If on St. Swithin's feast the welkin lowers,
And every peevish stream with hoarse showers,
Twice twenty days shall clouds their fleeces drail.

Gog.

2. To frown; to pout; to look sullen.

There was Diana when Acton saw her, and one of her foolish nymphs, who weeping, and withal lowering, one might see the workman meant to set forth tears of anger. Sidney.

He mounts the throne, and June took her place,
But sullen discontent sat lowering on her face;
Then, impotent of tongue, her silence broke,
Thus turbulent in rattling tone she spoke.

Dryden.

LOW-WEAR.* n. s. [from the verb.]
1. Cloudiness; gloominess.

The gladsome sun hath not so many frowns;
Nor Autumn ripe'd grapes; nor Winter's lovers
So many nipping winds.

Summary of Du Bart. (1681), Pref.

2. Cloudiness of look.

Philocles was jealous for Zellmane, not without so mighty a lower as that face could yield.

LOW-WEARINGLY.* adv. [from lower.] With cloudiness; gloomily. Sherwood.

LOW-WEAR.* adj. [from low, lower, and most.] Lowest.

Plants have their seminal parts uppermost, living creatures have them lowermost.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

It will also happen, that the same part of the pipe which was not lowermost, will presently become higher, so that the water does ascend by descending; ascending in comparison to the whole instrument, and descending in respect of its several parts. Wilkins, Dedalus.

LOW-WEAR.* adj. [from lower.] Threatening to be wet or stormy; overcast. Used in many places. See also Brockett and Moore.

LOW-WING.* n. s. [from To low.] The cry of black cattle.

The lowing of the oxen which I hear.
1 Sam. xv. 14.

The maids of Argos, with and frantick cries,
And imitated lowings, fill'd the skies. Rowlandson.

LOWLAND.* n. s. [low and land.] The country that is low in respect of neighbouring hills; the marsh.

What a devil he be?
His errand was to draw the lowland damps,

And noisome vapours, from the foggy fens,
Then breathe the balmy stench with all his force.

Dryden.

No nat'ral cause she found from brooks or bogs,
Or marshy lowlands, to produce the fogs. Dryden.

LOW-LIHOOD.* n. s. [lowly, and hood or head.] Humble or low state. Obsolete.
For who can fail in under lowliness,
No faithful set to find grace and speed.

Chaucer, Compl. of the St. Knight.

LOW-LIPLY.* adv. [from lowly.]

1. Humbly; without pride.

2. Meantly; without dignity.

LOW-LINESS.* n. s. [from lowly.]

1. Humility; freedom from pride.

Lowliness is every ambition's ladder,
Whereto the climber upward turns his face.

Shakespeare.

The king-becoming graces,
As justice, verity, temperance, stainless
Bounty, perseverance, mercy, lowliness,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude;
I have no relish of them. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

With lowliness majestic, from her seat,
And grace, that when who saw to wish her stay,
Rose. Milton, P. L.

If with a true Christian lowliness of heart, and a devout fervency of soul, we perform them, we shall find, that they will turn to a greater account to us, than all the warlike preparations in which we trust. Atterbury.

2. Meanness; want of dignity; abject depression.

They continued in that lowliness until the division between the two houses of Lancaster and York arose. Spenser.

The lowliness of my fortune has not brought me to flatter vice; it is my duty to give testimony to virtue. Dryden.

LOW-LY.* adj. [from low.]

1. Humble; meek; mild.

Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for
I am meek and lowly in heart. St. Mat. ix. 29.
He did bend to us a little, and put his arms abroad: we of our parts saluted him in a very lowly and submissive manner, as looking that from him we should receive sentence of life or death.

Bacon, New Atlantis.

With cries they fill'd the holy fane;
Then thus with lowly voice Ilseus began.

Dryden.

The heavens are not pure in his sight, and he charges even his angels with folly; with low lye a reverence must we bow down our souls before so excellent a Being, and adore a Nature so much superior to our own! Rogers.

2. Mean; wanting dignity; not great.

For from the natal hour distinctive accents,
One common right the great and lowly claims.

Pope.

3. Not lofty; not sublime.

For all who read, and reading not disdain,
These rural poems, and their lowly strain,
The name of Varus oft insert'd shall see.

Dryden, Silvius.

4. Not elevated in local situation; low.

Where Ufens glides along the lowly lands.

Dryden, Æn.

LOW-LY.* adv. [from low.]

1. Not highly; meantly; without grandeur; without dignity.

I will shew myself highly fed, and lowly taught;
I know my business is but to the court. Shakespeare.

'Tis better to be truly born,
And range with humble livers in content,
Than to be perk'd up in a glistening grief,
And wear a golden sorrow. Shaks. Hen. VIII.

2. Humbly; meekly; modestly.

Heaven is for thee too high
To know what passes there; he lowly say Think only what concerns thee, and thy being.

Milton, P. L.

Another crowd

Prefer'd the same request, and lowly bow'd. Pope.
LOWN.† n. s. [Irish, Irish; loen, Dutch, a stupid drone. Dr. Johnson.—Mr. H. Tooke calls it, like lowt, the past participle of to low.—Dr. Jamieson conjectures the Saxon leapen, Goth. leigandis, a traitor, a betrayer, as the origin of our lown.] A scornful; a raucal. Not in use. Dr. Johnson says. It still remains a heavy, stupid fellow, according to King, in the north of England.

King Stephen was a worthy peer;
His breeches cost him but a crown;
He held them sixpence all too dear;
With that he call'd the taylor loen.

Old Song in Shakespeare.

We should soon have both low and loen, if the peculiar baggage would but give way to customers. Shakespeare, Pericles.

LOWND.† adj. [loga, Icel. lagn, Sw. Goth. serenity of the air. See Dr. Jamieson, in V. LOWN.] Calm and mild; out of the wind; under cover or shelter. Used in several parts of the north of England; and sometimes written, like its original, fun.

LOWNESS. n. s. [from low.]

1. Contrariety to height; small distance from the ground.

They know

By the height, the lowness, or the mean, if dearth,
Or foison follow. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

The lowness of the bough where the fruit cometh, maketh the fruit greater, and to ripen better; for you shall even see, in apples upon a wall, the greatest fruits towards the bottom.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

In Gothic cathedrals, the narrowness of the arch makes it rise in height, the lowness opens it in breadth.

Adams

2. Meanness of character or condition, whether mental or external.

Nothing could have subdu'd nature
To such a lowness but his unkind daughter.

Shakespeare.

Now I must

To the young man send humble treaties,
And palter in the shift of lowness. Shakespeare.

3. Want of rank; want of dignity.

The name of servants has of old been reckoned to imply a certain meanness of mind, as lowness of condition.

4. Want of sublimity; contrary to loftiness of style or sentiment.

His style is accommodated to his subject, either high or low; if by accident be too much lowness, that of Persius is the hardness of his metaphors.

Dryden.

5. Submissiveness.

The people were in such lowness of obedience as subjects were like to yield, who had lived almost four-and-twenty years under so politic a king as his father. Bacon.

6. Depression; dejection

Hence that poverty and want of spirit to which a kingdom may be subject, as well as a particular person. Swift.

LOWSPRITED.† adj. [low and spirid.] Dejected; depressed; not lively; not vivacious; not sprightly.

Severity carried to the highest pitch breaks the mind: and then in the place of a disorderly young fellow, you have a lowspired unpolished creature. Locke.

LOWT.† See LOUT, and To LOUT.

LOWTHOUGHTED.† adj. [low and thought.] Having the thoughts with-held from sublime or heavenly meditations; mean of sentiment; narrow-minded.

Above the smoke and stir of this dim spot,
Which men call earth, and with lowthoughted care,
Strive to keep up a frail and feverish being. Milton, Comus.

O grace serene! Oh virtue heavenly fair,
Divine oblivion of lowthoughted care!
Fresh blooming hope, gay daughter of the sky,
And faith our early immortality. Pope.

LOXODROMICK.† n. s. [loxis and drōmikos.]

Loxodromick is the art of oblique sailing by the rhomb, which always makes an equal angle with every meridian; thence is when you sail, neither directly under the equator, nor under one and the same meridian, but across them; hence the table of rhumbs, or the transverse tables of miles, with the table of longitudes and latitudes, by which the sailor may practically find his course, distance, latitude, or longitude, is called loxodromick. Harris.

LOYALTY.† adj. [loyal, French; loel, old French; legalis, Lat. Roquefort, Gloss. Supplem.]

1. Obedient; true to the prince.

Of Gloucester's treachery,
And of the loyal service of his son,
When I inform'd him, then be call'd he me so. Shakespeare.

The regard of duty in that most loyal nation overcame all other difficulties. Knolles.

Loyal subjects often seize their prince,
Yet mean his sacred person not the least offence. Dryden.

2. Faithful in love; true to a lady, or lover.

Hail, wedded love! — by thee
Founded in reason loyal, just, and pure,
Relations clear, and all the charities
Of father, son, and brother, first were known. Milton, P. L.

There Loxian with Evadne moves, Unhappy both, but loyal in their loves. Dryden, En.

LOYALIST.† n. s. [from loyal.] One who professes uncommon adherence to his king.

The color, by the instigation of the loyalists, fell out with the homelians. Howell, Voc. Fenn.

LOYALLY.† adv. [from loyal.] With fidelity; with true adherence to a king; with fidelity to a lover.

Though loyally, well held, to frail does make
Our faith more loyal; yet he that can endure
To follow with allegiance a fall'n lord,
Does conquer him that did his master conquer. Pope, Olymp.

LOYALTY.† n. s. [loialté, French.]

1. Firm and faithful adherence to a prince.

Though loyalty, well held, to frail does make
Our faith more loyal; yet he that can endure
To follow with allegiance a fall'n lord,
Does conquer him that did his master conquer. Pope, Olymp.

He had never had any veneration for the court, but only such loyalty to the king as the law required. Clarendon.

Abdell, faithful found — Unshaken, unswayed, untimid, if His loyalty be kept. Milton, P. L.

For loyalty is still the same,
Whether it win or lose the game;

True as the dial to the sun,
Although it be not shone upon. Hudibras.

2. Fidelity to a lady, or lover.

LOZEL.† See LOSEL.

LOZENGES.† n. s. [lozenge, French. Of unknown etymology. Dr. Johnson.—Morin mentions, from Menage, Scalliger's conjecture of lozenges or lozanges being a corruption of lauranges, a cause de leur ressemblance à une feuille de laurier;† but proposes at the same time a conjecture of his own as to the derivation: "peut-être a-t-on dit lozange pour lozange, comme on dit neutange, olduange. Dans ce cas, il viendrait du Gr. ῥιζοῦ, oblique; et du Lat. angulus, q. d. angle oblique."] 1. A rhombus.

The best builders resolve upon rectangular squares, as a mean between too few and too many angles; and through the equal inclination of the sides, they are stronger than the rhomb or lozenge. Watson, Architecture.

2. Lozenge is a form of a medicine made into small pieces, to be held or chewed in the mouth till melted or wasted.

3. A cake of preserved fruit: both these are so denominated from the original form, which was rhomboidal.

4. A four-cornered figure, in heraldry, like a pane of glass in old casements, in which the arms of women are now usually painted.

Pointed all with amorettes,
And with lozings, and scuttrons. Chaucer, Rem. R. 893.

LOZENGED.† adj. [lozengé, Fr.] Having the shape of a lozenge. Cadgrave.

LOZENGY.† adj. In heraldry, having the field or charge covered with lozenges.

LV. a contraction for lordship.

LV. n. s. A game at cards. See LOO.
Ev'n mighty lv join who kings and queens o'er-throne,
And mov'd down armies in the fights of lv. Pope.

LU'BARD.† n. s. [from lubber.] A lazy sturdy fellow.
Yet their wine and their virtues those cur-mudgeon lubbards
Look up from my sight, in cellars and cupboards. Swift.

LUBBER.† n. s. [of this word the best derivation seems to be from lubbard, said by Janus to signify in Danish fat. Dr. Johnson.—Lubber is the same as lubby, and lby; Icel. lubber, "hirsutus et incinctus nebulo." Sernius. Hulest calls a lout o' a lubber, or loundine, rusticus, tardus, &c." And Minshew combines in one "a lobbie, lubber, lubcocke, and clowne;" giving them the Greek origin of high, λοῦβρος. But See LOU.]

A sturdy drone; an idle, fat, bulky lout; a lubby.

For tempest and showers deceive a many,
And lingering lubbards lose many a penny. Turner, Hubb.

These chase the smaller shoals of fish from the main sea into the bays, leaping up and down, puffing like a fat lubber out of breath. Curwen, Surv. of Cornwall.

They clap the lubber Ajax on the shoulder,
As if his foot were on Hector's breast,
And great Troy shrinking.

Shakespeare, Tril. and Creon.
A notable lubber thus reported him to be.

Shakespeare.
Tell how the drudging plowman went;
His shaw'ny fall hath thresh'd the corn.
Then ten day labourers could not find;
Then lies down the lubber fiend?

Milton, L'Ail.
Venetians do not move uncouthly rife,
Than did your lubber state mannikin betide.

Dryden.
How can you name that supernatant lubber?
Cyclops.

LUBBERLY. adj. [from lubber.] Lazy and bulky; awkward.

I came at Eton to marry Mrs. Anne Page;
and she's a great lubberly boy.
Not such a title, lubberly sets, as later times patented the world withal.

Adden on Dragon's Polyglot. S. 11.

Those modest, lubberly boys, who seem to want spirit, become at length more shining men; and at school generally go through their business with more ease to themselves, and more satisfaction to their instructors.

Gilman, Est. T.

LUBBERLY. adv. Awkwardly; clumsily.
Merry Andrew on his low rope c-jumps lubberly
the same tricks which his master is so dexterously performing on the high.

Dryden.

TO LUBRICATE. v. a. [from lubricus,
Latin.] To make smooth or slippery;
to smooth. Cockerham.

There are aliments which, besides this lubricating quality, stimulate in a small degree.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

The patient is relieved by the mucilaginous and saponaceous remedies, some of which lubricate, and others both lubricate and stimulate.

Sherr, Surgery.

Rest,
Man's rich restorative; his balmy bath,
That supplies lubricates, and keeps in play,
The various movements of this nice machine;
Which asks such frequent periods of repair.

Young, N. Th. 3.

LUBRICATE. n. s. [From to lubricate.]
That which lubricates.

Water, when simple, is insipid, inodorous, colourless and smooth; it is found, when not cold, to be a great resolver of spams, and lubricator of the fibres: this power it probably owes to its smoothness.

Burke on the Salt, and Dem. P. iv. § 21.

TO LUBRICATE. v. a. [from lubricus,
Latin.] To smooth; to make slippery.

LUBRICITY. n. s. [from lubricus, Lat.
lubricit, French.]

1. Slipperiness; smoothness of surface.
Bullockar.

2. Aptness to glide over any part, or to facilitate motion.

Both the ingredients are of a lubricating nature; the mucilage adds to the lubricity of the oil, and the oil preserves the mucilage from inspissation.

Ray on Creation.

3. Uncertainty; slipperiness; instability.
It is strange to consider the lubricity of popular favour.

Watson, Let. (in 1628) item. p. 444.

The manifold impossibilities and lubricities of matter cannot have the same convenience in any modification.

Merc.

He that enjoyed crowns and knew their worth, excepted them not out of the charge of universal equality; and yet the politician is not disgraced by the inconsistency of human affairs, and the lubricity of his subject.

Glenville, Apog.

A state of tranquillity is never to be attained but by keeping perpetually in our eye the certainty of death, and the lubricity of fortune.

L'Etrenge.

4. Wantonness; lewdness.

[They] incline and allure men to lubricity and dissipated courses. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 357.
From the lechery of these fauns, he thinks that satire is derived from them, as if wantonness and lubricity were essential to that poem which ought in all to be availed.

Dryden.

LUBRIC. adj. [lubricus, Latin.]

1. Slippery; smooth on the surface.

A thong

Of short thick skin, whose dissuading valleys blunt
And roll themselves over her lubric threat,
In panting murmurs. Cromwell, Del. of the Muses.

2. Uncertain; unsteady.

I will delude him from his cradle through the deep and lubric waves of state, till he is swallowed in the gulf of fatal ruin.

Watson, Life of J. of Buckingham.

3. Wanton; lewd. [lubrique, French.]

Why were we hurried down
This lubric and adulterate age;
Nay, added fast perditions of our own.
To excruciate the steaming confusion of the stage?

Dryden.

LUBRICOUS. adj. [lubricus, Latin.]

1. Slippery; smooth.

The parts of water being volatile and lubricous as well as fine, it easily insinuates itself into the tubes of vegetables, and by that means introduces into them the matter it bears along with it.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

2. Uncertain.

The judgement being the leading power, if it be stored with lubricous opinions instead of clearly conceived truths, and perpetually removed in them, the practice will be as irregular as the con-jectures.

Glenville, Reyn.

LUBRIFICATION. n. s. [lubricus, and fin,
Latin.] The act of smoothing.

A twofold liquor is prepared for the innation and lubrication of the heads of the bones; an oily one, furnished by the marrow; a mucilaginous, supplied by certain glandules seated in the articu-lations.

Ray on Creation.

LUBRICATION. n. s. [lubricus and fin, Latin.] The act of lubricating or smooth-
ing.

The cause is lubrication and relaxation, as in medicines emollient, such as milk, honey, and mellows.

Dixon.

LUC. n. s. [lucius, Lat. ἀλὺς, Gr. quia
est quasi lucus inter pisces. Vossius.

Hence also the French lucet, lucet, a young pike. Luc is very old in our language.] A pike full grown.

Many a loome, and many a luc in stew.
The mighty luc, or pike, is taken to be the tyrant, as the salmon is the king, of the fresh waters.

Chaucer, G. T. P. d.

Walton, Angler.
They give the chosen white luc in their coast.

Shakespeare.

LUCENT. adj. [lucens, Latin.] Shining;
bright; splendid.

I must the day-star should not brighter rise,
Nor lend like influence from his lucens seat.

B. Jonson, Epig. 76.

A spot like which perhaps Astronomer in the sun's lucens orb
Through his glass'd optic tube yet never saw.

Milton, P. L.

LUCERNE. n. s. [lucerne, Span. medico, in Latin; so called because it came originally from Media.] A plant remarkable for quick growth; bearing a purplish flower; the hay of which is eminent for the fattening of cattle.

Here has been much out of order these last three or four months, but is not the less intent upon sowing his lucerne. Lat. Cicerfeld.

LUCID. adj. [lucidus, Latin; lucide,
French.]

1. Shining; bright; glittering.

Over his lucid arms
A military vest of purple flow'd;
Livelier than Melibon.

Milton, P. L.

It contracts it, preserving the eye from being injured by too vehement and lucid an object, and again, dilates it for the apprehending objects more remote in a fainter light.

Ray.

If a piece of white paper, or a white cloth, or the end of one's finger, be held at the distance of about a quarter of an inch, or half an inch, from that part of the glass where it is most in motion, the electric vapour which is excited by the friction of the glass against the hand, will, by discharging against the white paper, cloth, or finger, be put into such an agitation as to emit light, and make the white paper, cloth, or finger, appear lucid, like a glow-worm.

Newton.

The poorly shill'd its lucid globe unfold.
And Phœbus warn the ripening orb to gold.

Pope.

2. Pellucid; transparent.

On the fertile banks
Of Abnane and Theraph, lucid streams.

Milton, P. L.

On the transparent side of a globe, half silver and half of a transparent metal, we saw certain strange figures circularly drawn, and thought we could touch them, as we found our fingers stopped by that lucid substance.

Swift, Gulliver.

3. Bright with the radiance of intellect;
not darkened with madness.

The long intervals of the two houses, which,
although they had had lucid intervals and happy passages, yet they did ever hang over the kingdom, ready to break forth.

Dixon.

Some beams of wit on other souls only fall,
Strike through, and make a lucid interval;
But Statheus's genuine mind admits no ray.

His rising face prevail upon the day.
I believed him in a lucid interval, and desired
he would please to let me see his back.

Taylor.

A few sensual and voluptuous persons, say,
for a season, eclipse this native light of the soul;
but can never so wholly smother and extinguish it, but that, at some lucid intervals, it will recover itself again, and shine forth as before.

Benjamin.

LUCIDITY. n. s. [from lucid.] Splen-dour; brightness.

Diet.

What we call wit shews itself with such a pointed effulgence in the eyes, that there is scarce a man living, whose portion of it is not determinable from their natural brightness.

Phil. Let. on Physiology, (1751,) p. 290.

LUCIDNESS. n. s. [from lucid.] Transparency; clearness.

The transparency of their souls that are extended in perfect contemplation, is aptly figured by that property of the sea; their capacity and clearness, by the smoothness and lucidness of glass.

W. Mountague, Dev. E. p. i. (1743,) p. 385.

LUCIFERIAN. n. s. [from Lucifer, a name of the devil.] Devilish. A word formerly much used; now obsolete.

Hence men of art deprave each other's skill,
Sith it they view with Luciferian eyes.

Daniel, W. s. Pilgrimage, sign. P. 3.

What Luciferian pride preys him, a man of sin, to admit, yes to delight in, the same!

Sullivan, Mir. of Antichrist, (1616,) p. 171.

That all that luciferian exorcism be blotted out; — that very "luciferina," or devilish exorcism is repudiated.

Bp. Taylor, Diss. against Poesy, ch. 2. § 10.
It savours too much of the luciferian presumption.
Ld. North, Light to Paradise, p. 90.

LUCIFEROUS, adj. [lucifer, Lat.] Giving light; affording means of discovery.

The experiment is not ignoble, and luciferous enough, as shewing a new way to produce a volatile salt.

Boyle.

LUCIFEROUSLY, adv. [from luciferous.] So as to discover.

Embrace not the opacous and blind side of opinions, but that which looks most luciferously or influentially unto goodness.

Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 3.

LUCIFICK, adj. [lux and facio, Latin.] Making light; producing light.

When made to converge, and so mixed together; though their lucifick motion be contoured, yet by interfering, that equal motion, which is the colorific, is interrupted.

Green.

LUCIFORM, adj. [lux, lucis, Latin, and form.] Having the nature of light.

Plato speaketh of the mind or soul as a driver that guides and governs a chariot, which is, not unity, styled aloudra, luciform, ethereal vehicle, or lygma, terms expressive of the purity, lightness, subtlety, and mobility, of that fine celestial nature, in which the soul immediately resides and operates.

Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 171.

LUCK, n. s. [geluck, Dutch; Junius, and Dr. Johnson. — Luck, good or bad, is merely the past participle of the Saxon, laccan, to catch; and means something, any thing, caught. Instead of saying, that a person has had good luck; it is not uncommon to say, he has had a good catch. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Parl. ii. 357. — Such an expression may be still used among the vulgar, and the reasoning upon this deduction is plausible. But the derivation from geluck, which is from the old verb ghelucken, to prosper, is not to be hastily dismissed. Wachter thus derives the Germ. gluck, good fortune, (under which word he notices our luck, the Swed. lycka, and the Sax. inf. lick, from gleichen, to please. "Hoc sanè primum et præcipuum est," he well observes, "in rebus secundis, ut nobis placeant. Quid enim refert, qualis sit status noster, si nobis videtur malus?" In like manner, Hirc derives the Su. Goth. lyckas, to prosper, from lika, to please. Ungluck, is the Germ. for bad luck. See also KILLEN in V. Ghe-luck.]

1. Chance; accident; fortune; hap; casual event.

He forc'd his neck into a noose,
To shew his play at fate and lose;
And when he chanc'd to 'scape, mistook
For art and subtlety, his luck.

Hudibras.

Some such method may be found by human industry or luck, by which compound bodies may be resolved into other substances than they are divided into by the fire.

Boyle.

2. Fortune, good or bad.

Glad of such luck the lucky luck may find,
A long time with that savage people staid;
To gather breath in many miseries. Spenser, F. Q.
Farwell, good luck go with thee. Shakespeare.

I did demand what news from Shrewsbury.

He told me, that rebellion had ill luck,
And that young Harry Percy's spur was cold.

Shakespeare.

That part of mankind who have had the justice, or the luck, to pass, in common opinion for the wisest, have followed a very different sect.

Temple.

Such, how highly soever they may have the luck to be thought of, are far from being laserates indeed.

South.

The guests are found too numerous for the treat,
But all, it seems, who had the luck to eat,
Swear they ne'er tasted more delicious meat.

Tate, Jun.

LUCKILY, adv. [from lucky.] Fortunately; by good hap.

It is the pencil thrown luckily full upon the horse's mouth, to express the foam, which the painter with all his skill could not form.

Dryden, DuFrenoy.

It happens luckily for the establishment of a new race of kings upon the British throne, that the first of this royal line has all high qualifications.

Addison.

LUCKINESS, n. s. [from lucky.] Good fortune; good hap; casual happiness.
He who sometimes lights on truth, is in the right but by chance; and I know not whether the luckiness of the accident will excuse the irregularity of his proceeding.

Locke.

LUCKLESS, adj. [from luck.] Unfortunate; unhappy.

Glad of such luck, the luckless luck may find,
A long time with that savage people staid;
To gather breath in many miseries. Spenser, F. Q.

Never shall thy thoughts be base,

Though luckless, yet without disgrace. Suckling.
What else but his immoderate lust of power,
Pray'r's made and granted in a luckless hour?

Dryden.

LUCKY, adj. [from luck; geluckig, Dutch.] Fortunate; happy by chance.

But I more fearful, or more lucky might,
Dismay'd with that deformed, dismal sight,
Fled fast away.

Spenser, F. Q.

Perhaps some arm more lucky than the rest,
May reach his heart, and free the world from bondage.

Addison.

LUCRATIVE, adj. [lucrati, French; lucratus, Lat.] Gainful; profitable; bringing money.

The trade of merchandise being the most lucrative, may bear usury at a good rate; other contracts not so.

Bacon.

The disposition of Ulysses inclined him to pursue the more dangerous way of living by war, than the more lucrative method of life by agriculture.

Brown.

LUCRE, n. s. [lucratus, Latin.] Gain; profit; pecuniary advantage. In an ill sense.

Malice and lucry in them

Have laid this woe here. Shakespeare, Cym.
To tell the sacred mysteries of Heaven
To their own vile advantages shall turn.

Milton, P. L.

A soul supreme in each hard instance tried,
Above all pain, all anger, and all pride,
The rage of power, the blast of publick breath,
The lust of lucry, and the dread of death.

Pope.

To LUCRE, v. n. [from the noun.] To labour for a desire of pecuniary advantage. Not in use.

[They] frame themselves to every change, thereby to satisfy their lucring lust.

Andruson, Epist. on Benedic. (1573.) fol. 75. b.

LUCRIFEROUS, adj. [lucrum and fero, Latin.] Gainful; profitable.

Opening treasures with the key of lucriferous inventions.

Sir W. Petty, Adv. to Horib. (1648.) p. 23.
Silver was afterwards separated from the gold, but to so small a quantity, that the experiment, the cost and pains considered, was not lucriferous.

Boyle.

LUCRIFICK, adj. [lucrum and facio, Lat.] Producing gain.

LUCRATIONS, n. s. [lucration, Fr. Cotgrave; from luctor, Latin.] Struggle; effort; contest.

Cockran.

This act requires the intention of our mine, thoughtfulness, and a diligent lucration and contention with ourselves.

Farindon, Scrm. (1657.) p. 418.

LUCUAL, adj. [luculus, Latin, mourning.] Lamentable. Not in use.

The turbulent and lucral mines, which were towards the end and period of his life and reign.

Sir G. Buck, Hist. Ric. III. p. 41.

To LUCUBRATE, v. n. [lucubror, Lat.] To watch; to study or work by candle-light.

Cockran.

LUCUBRATION, n. s. [lucubratio, Latin.] Study by candle-light; nocturnal study; any thing composed by night.

Life is, since he is gone,
But a nocturnal lucubration.

Cleveland, Eleg. on Alp. Lond.

Thy lucubrations have been pursued by several of our friends.

Trotter.

LUCUBRATORY, adj. [lucubratorius, from lucubror, Lat.] Composed by candle-light.

You must have a dish of coffee, and a solitary candle at your side, to write an epistle lucubratory to your friend.

Pope.

LUCULENT, adj. [luculentus, Latin.]

1. Clear; transparent; lucid. This word is perhaps not used in this sense by any other writer. Dr. Johnson. — It should seem, from the enlarged edition of Bullokar's Expositor in 1656, that this was anciently a received sense, luculent being defined "bright, clear, fair, beautiful, famous."

And luculent along

The purer rivers flow. Thomson, Winter.

2. Certain; evident.

They are against the obstinate incredulity of the Jews, the most luculent testimonies that the Christian religion hath.

Hooder.

A luculent oration, be made of the miseries of this, and happiness of that other life.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 218.

LUDIBRIOUS, adj. [ludibrius, Latin.] Ridiculous.

Needless it should be to refute this fancy, which falls to the ground of itself as a ludibrious folly of the man.

Trotter, Fibre of the Church, (1604.) p. 119.

LUDICROUS, adj. [ludicr, Latin.] Burlesque; merry; sportive; exciting laughter.

Plutarch quotes this instance of Homer's judgement, in elating a ludicrous scene with decency and instruction.

Brown.

LUDICROUSLY, adv. [from ludicr.] Sportively; in burlesque; in a manner that may excite laughter.

To see the buffoonery or action correspond so ludicrously with the music.

Dreamland, Trav. p. 52.

Cicero ludicrously describes Cato as endeavouring to eat in the commonwealth upon the school paradoxes, which exercised the wits of the junior students in the Stoick philosophy. Burke.

LU'DICROUSNESS. n. s. [from ludicrous.] Burlesque; sportiveness; merry cast or manner; ridiculousness.

The ludicrousness and fugitiveness of our wanton reason might otherwise find out many starting-holes. Moss, Anti. against Industry, ch. 1.
Boliu used to hint among his intimate friends, that he thought the reason why Homer sometimes introduced his gods and goddesses in scenes of ludicrousness, was to soften the general severity of his poem, and to relieve the reader from the perpetual prospect of the daughters and deaths with which the Iliad abounded.

Dr. Norton on Dryden's Transl. of Iliad.

LUDIFICATION. n. s. [from ludiflor, Lat.] The act of mocking, or making sport with another. Dict.

LUDIFICATORY. adj. [from ludiflor, Fr. Cotgrave; from ludiflor, Lat.] Mocking; making sport; trifling.

In the sacraments of the church there is nothing empty or vain, nothing ludificatory, but all thoroughly true. Barrow, iii. 59.

LUFF. n. s. [lofa, Gothic.] The palm of the hand, used in the north of England, and in Scotland.

To LUFF. v. n. [for loff.] To keep close to the wind. See term.

Contract your swelling sails, and luff to wind. Dryden.

The ship, luffing too near the great island, on a sudden stuck fast on a rock.

Randolph's Isl. in the Archipelago, p. 61.

To LUG. v. a. [aluccan, Saxoon, to pull; loga, Swedish, the hollow of the hand. Dr. Johnson.—It is more probably the Su. Goth. lugga, to pull or drag by the hair; luggan, Sax. to pull, to pluck.]

1. To hale or drag; to pull with rugged violence.

You gods! why this

Will lug your priests and servants from your sides. Shakespeare.

Thy bear is safe, and out of peril,

Though lugg'd indeed, and wounded very ill. Hudibras.

When savage bears agree with bears,

Shall secret ones lug saints by th' ears? Hudibras.

See him drag his feeble legs about

Like bounds ill coupled; Jowler lugs him still

Through bledges. Spenser.

Whose pleasure is to see a strumpet tear

A cynick's beard, and lug him by the hair. Dryd.

Either every single animal spirit must convey a whole representation, or else they must divide the image amongst them, and so lug off every one his share. Catlin.

2. To pull or shake by the ears. Barret's Alv. 1580. So in the north of England, "to pull by the ears; I'll lug thee, if thou dost so." Pegge.

I'm as melancholy as gib cat or a lugg'd bear.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV. P. 1.

3. To LUG out. To draw a sword, in burlesque language.

But buff and belovous never know these cares,

No time, nor trick of law, their action bars;

They will be heard, or they lug out and cut. Dryden.

To LUG v. n. To drag; to come heavily;

perhaps only misprinted for laga.

My lugging soul flew under her own pitch,

Like lugg in air, too clasp, and lug along

As if she were a body in a body. Dryden.

LUG. † n. s.

1. A kind of small fish.

They feed on salt unmerchanted pilchards, tag worms, lugs, and little crabs.

Curvo, Surv. of Cornwall.

2. The ear. Dr. Johnson confines the use of this word to Scotland, without any example; but it is certainly common enough in England, [from the verb lug.] There's no man colour smells, or sees a sound, Nor seeks the labour of the honey-bee With's hungry lugs, nor binds a geying wound With's shippery eye-balls: every faculty And object have their due analogy.

Moss, Life of the Deaf, ii. 97.

With hair in character, and lugs in test.

Cleaveland.

3. A land measure; a pole or perch.

That ample pit, yet far renown'd

For the large leap which Debon did compel

Coulth to make, being eight lugs of ground. Spenser, F. Q.

LU'OGAGE. n. s. [from lug.] Any thing cumbrous and unwieldy that is to be carried away; any thing of more weight than value.

Come bring your luggage nobly on your back.

Shakespeare.

What do you mean

To dent thus on such luggage? Shakespeare, Tempest.

Think not thou to find me slack, or need

Thy politic maxims, or that cunning

Luggage of war there shown me. Milton, P. B.

How durst thou with that sullen luggage

O' th' self, old self, and other baggage? Hudibras.

To oppose thy lumber against us?

The mind of man is too light to bear much car-caption; and if the luggage be prized equally with the jewels, none will be cast out ill as be shipwrecked. Gleanings.

A lively faith will bear aloft the mind,

And leave the luggage of good works behind. Dryden.

I am gathering up my luggage, and preparing for my journey. Swift to Pope.

LU'SAIL. n. s. A square sail hoisted occasionally on a yard which hangs nearly at right angles with the mast.

Ash.

LU'GRIOUS. † adj. [lugubre, French; lugubris, Lat.] Mournful; sorrowful.

To act no passionate, lugubrious, tragical part, whatever secular provocation cross us on the stage.

Hammond, Works, ii. 546.

A demure, or rather a lugubrious look, a whingling tone, makes up the sum of many men's bu-lunisms. Dryden of Chr. Piet.

Most of them [pictures] represent devout lugu- brious events. Swinsburne, Trav. through Spain, i. 41.

LUKE, or LEUKE. † adj. [plac, Saxon.] Not fully hot. See LUKEWARM.

Prompt. Parv.

LU'KENESS, or LE'KENESS. n. s. [from luke, Lat.] Moderate warmth. Orig. Vocab.

LUKEWARM. † adj. [The original of this word is doubted. Warmth, in Sax. is heot; in old Frisian hij; in Dutch heute; whence probably our luke, to which warm may be added, to determine, by the first word, the force of the second; as we say, boiling hot. Dr. Johnson.—It is from the Saxon, plac, warm; which was also pleonastically accompanied with papm, viz. plac-papm:

whence: our luke-warm. See Lye, edit.

Manning. See also LEW.

1. Moderately or mildly warm; so warm as to give only a pleasing sensation.

Water is not so deadly by the fyre made hote to the uttermost, but fyre cometh bytwene a lytell warners, as we myght saye hale warm, which is neither very hote, nor very colde, but in a meane bytwene both. Bp. Fisher, P. p. 49.

A dreary curse, whose life away did pass, All wallow'd in his own, yet lukewarm blood, That from his wound yet welled fresh alas! Spenser, F. Q.

May you a better fast never behold, You know of most friends; smoke and lukewarm water

Shakespeare, Timon.

Bathing the body in lukewarm water is of great advantage to contemperate hot and sharp humours.

Wasson, Surgery.

Whence is it but from this attractive power that water, which alone distills with a gentle lukewarm heat, will not distill from salt of tartar without a great heat? Newton, Opticks.

2. Indifferent; not ardent; not zealous.

If some few continue steadfast, it is an obedience so lukewarm and languishing, that it merits not the name of penance. Dryden.

This sober conduct is a mighty virtue

In lukewarm patriots. Addison, Cato.

LU'KEWARMLY. † adv. [from the adjective.]

1. With moderate warmth. Shewood.

2. With indifference.

LU'KEWARMNESS. n. s. [from lukewarm.]

1. Moderate or pleasing heat.

2. Indifference; want of ardour.

Some kind of zeal counts all merciful moderation lukewarmness.

King, Church.

The defect of zeal is lukewarmness, or coldness in religion; the excess is inordinate heat and spiritual fury. Spinoza.

Go dry your chaff and stubble, give fire to the zeal of your faction, and reprove them with lu- warmness. Swift.

To LULL. v. a. [lulla, Su. Goth. lallo,

Lat. See also LULLABY.]

1. To compose to sleep by a pleasing sound; to draw to sleep. This is the oldest sense of the word.

In her barm this lull child she laid,

With full ad face, and gan the child to blisse,

And lulled it, and after gan it kisse. Chaucer, Cl. Tole.

There trickled softly down

A gentle stream, whose murmuring wave did play

Enomg the puny stones, and made a sound

To lull him soft asleep, that by it lay. Spenser, F. Q.

Such sweet compulsion doth in music lie,

To lull the daughters of necessity. Milton, Arcades.

These, lull'd by nightingales, embracing slept.

Milton, P. L.

In England we very frequently see people lulled sleep with solid and elaborate discourses of piety, who would be warmed and transported out of themselves by the bewellings and distortions of enthusiasm. Addison, Spect. No. 407.

2. To compose; to quiet; to put to rest.

Fortune false doth lull them in her lap.

Mir. for Mag. p. 327.

To find a foe it shall not be his lap,

And peace shall lull him in her Sowery lap. Milton, Fac. Es.

No more there seems my meditations laid,

Or lull to rest the visionary maid. Pope.

By the vocal words and waters lull'd,

And lost in lonely musing in a dream. Thomson, Spring.

LULL. n. s. [from the verb.] Power or quality of soothing.

My lord, your stay was long, and yonder to it

Of falling waters tempted me to rest. Young, Revenge.

LU'LLARY.* n. s. [Lullus, Lat. "Quem nutricum fuisse deum contendit Turnebus." From lull: it is observable, that the nurses call sleep by ly; lullaby is therefore lull to sleep. Dr. Johnson.—"Dr. Johnson is probably mistaken in supposing that the nurses' ly signifies sleep, otherwise than as a contraction of lullaby. It is to be wished, that Mr. Holt White had favoured us with some proof that lull originally signified to sleep, and that its present sense, to compose to sleep by a pleasing sound, is but a secondary one, retained after the primitive import had become obsolete. The same ingenious critic proceeds to state that ly means house, and therefore lullaby is to go to house or cradle. There is so much plausibility in this conjecture, that it is almost a pity to be obliged to dissent from it. Though it cannot be disputed that ly signifies a dwelling, it is presumed that this sense is as unconnected with the word in question as Dr. Johnson's sleep. It would be a hopeless task to trace the origin of the northern verb to lull, which means to sing gently; but it is evidently connected with the Gr. λυαλε, to speak, or λυαλε, the sound made by the beach at sea. Thus much is certain, that the Roman nurses used the word lulla to quiet their children, and feigned a deity called Lullus, whom they invoked on that occasion: the lullaby, or tune itself, was called by the same name. As lullare meant to sing lull, to lull might in like manner denote the singing of the nurse's lullaby to induce the child to sleep.—In an old ballad, printed by Mr. Ritson, And Songs, p. 198, the burden is lully, lully, lully, sweete baby, from which it seems probable, that lullaby is only a comparatively modern contraction of lully baby, the first word being the legitimate offspring of the Rom. lulla. Douce, Illustr. of Shakespeare, vol. 2, p. 111.] A nurse to still her child.

Only that noise hears rolling circles cease,
Sing lullaby, to bring the world to rest. Fairfax.
Philosied, with melody,
Sing in your sweet lullaby;
Lulla, lulla, lully, lulla, lulla, lully. Shakespeare.
If you will let your baby know I am here to speak with her, and bring her along with you, it may make my business further.—Marry, Sir, lullaby to your beauty till I come again. Shakespeare.
Wholes bounds, and looms, and sweet melodious lullaby.

Be unto us, as is a nurse's song
Of lullaby, to bring her babe to sleep.
Titus Andronicus.
Drinking is the lullaby used by nurses to still crying children.
Locke on Education.
LU'LLER.* n. s. [from lull.] A dandler; one who fondles children.
Cotgrave, and Sherwood.
LUM.* n. s. The chimney of a cottage; Northumberland, Pegge. Used in Yorkshire also, and in Scotland; and is supposed by Sibbald to be from the Sax. leom, light, "scarcely any other light being admitted, excepting through this hole in the roof." But Dr. Jamieson refers it to the Welsh llumon, a chimney, "which Owen deduces from lum, that which shoots up, or ends, in a point."

LUMBA'GO.* n. s. [lumbi, Latin, the loins.]

Lumbago are pains very troublesome about the loins, and small of the back, such as precede ague fits and fevers: they are most commonly from fullness and acrimony, in common with a disposition to yawnings, shudderings, and cramp-like pains in other parts, and go off with evacuation, generally by sweat, and other critical discharges of fevers.

Quincy.

LU'MBAL.* adj. [lumbaris, Lat. from lumbar.] adj. [bi, the loins.] In anatomy, pertaining to the loins.

LUMBER.* n. s. [loma, xeloma, Saxon, household-stuff; lommering, the dirt of an house, Dutch.]

1. Any thing useless or cumbersome; any thing of more bulk than value; old stuff.
Cockerham.

The very best was violated
By the coarse hands of filthy dungeon villains,
And thrown among the common lumber. Utterby.
One son at home
Concerns thee more than many guests to come.
If to some useful art he be not bred,
He grows more lumber, and is worse than dead.
Dryden.

Thy neighbour has removed his wretched store,
Few hands will rid the lumber of the year.
Dryden, Jun.
If God intended not the precise use of every single atom, that atom had been no letter than a piece of lumber. Green.

The poring school-boys mark;
Wits, who, like owls, see only in the dark;
A lumber-house of books in every hall!
Pope, Dunciad.

2. Harm; mischief. Lancashire. Pegge.
TO LUMBER.* v. a. [from the noun.] To heap like useless goods irregularly.

Follow ground is (usually) an indigested thicket, lumbered all over with weeds, and briars, and thorns, and thistles. Solemnische, Sermon. (1642.) p. 4.
In Heath we must have so much stuff lumbered together, that not the least beauty of ungaily can appear. Hymers.

TO LUMBER.* v. n. To move heavily, as hithundered with his own bulk.
First let them run at large,
Nor lumber o'er the meads, nor cross the wood.
Dryden.

LU'MBRICAL.* adj. [from lumbricus, Lat. a worm.] In anatomy, denoting muscles of the hands and feet, which, on account of their smallness and figure, have derived this name of resemblance to worms.

LU'MINARY.* n. s. [luminare, Latin, luminare, Fr.]

1. Any body which gives light.
The great luminary
Shakes light from far. Milton, P. L.

2. Any thing which gives intelligence.
Sir John Graham, I know not upon what luminaries be equaled in his face, dissuaded him from marriage. Watson.

3. Any one that instructs mankind.
The circulation of the blood, and the weight and spring of the air, had been reserved for a late happy discovery by two great luminaries of this island. Brewster.

TO LU'MINATE.* v. a. [luminare, Lat.] To give light to; to illuminate.

Cockerham.

LUMINATION.* n. s. [from lumen.] Emission of light.

TO LU'MINE.* v. a. [luminare, Lat.] To illuminate; to lighten intellectually.

With admiration of their passing light,
Blinding the eyes, and luminous the sight.
Spenser, Hymns of Heavenly Love.

LU'MINOUS.* adj. [luminosus, Fr.]

1. Shining; emitting light.
Fire burned so hotly, making it first luminous, then black and brittle, and lastly, broken and incinerate. Beacon.

Its first convex division
The luminous inferior orb inclines,
From chaos.
How cause the sun to be luminous? Not from the necessity of natural causes. Bradley.

2. Enlightened.
Earth stung, industrious of herself, fetch day,
Travelling east; and with her part averse
From the sun's beam, meet night; her other part Still luminous by his ray. Milton, P. L.

3. Shining; bright.
The most luminous of the prismatic colours are the yellow and orange: these affect the senses more strongly than all the rest together.
Newton, Opticks.

LU'MINOUSLY.* adv. [from luminous.] In a bright or shining manner.

LU'MINOUSNESS.* n. s. [from luminous.] Brightness; emission of light: as, the luminousness of the sea: a philosophical term.

That luminousness that appears in some eyes. Spence, Critic.

LUMP.* n. s. [lump, Teut.]

1. A small mass of any matter.

The wood had it by the Egyptians used first for fuel, and then they crush the ashes into lumps like a stone, and so sell them to the Venetians. Beacon, Nat. Hist.

Without this various agitation of the water, how could lumps of sugar or salt cast into it be so perfectly dissolved in it, that the lumps themselves totally disappear? Boyle.

A wretch is prisoner made;
Whose flesh torn off by lumps, the ravenous fox
In morsels cut. Tate.

Every fragrant flower, and odorous green,
Were scented well, with lumps of amber laid.
Dryden.

To conceive thus of the soul's intimate union with an infinite being, and by that union receiving of ideas, leads the soul into as gross thoughts, as a country maid would have of an infinite butter-pail, the several parts whereof being applied to her lump of butter, left on it the figure or idea there was present need of. Locke.

2. A shapeless mass.

Hence, heap of wrath, foul indigested lump;
As evoked in thy manners by thy shape. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Why might there have been lumps, in this great mass, huge lumps of solid matter, which, without any form or order, might be jumbled together? Karl against Burnet.

3. Mass untinged with.

All men's browns
Lie like one lump before him, to be fashioned Into what pinch he please. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

It is rare to find any of these metals pure; but copper, iron, gold, silver, lead, and tin, are, mixtaneously in one lump. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

4. The whole together; the gross.

If my readers will not go to the price of buying my papers by retail, they may buy them in the lump.

Addison.

Other epidemic vices are rife and predominant only for a season, and must not be ascribed to human nature in the lump.

Bentley, &c.

The principal gentlemen of several counties are stigmatized in a lump, under the notion of being papists.

Burgh.

To LUMP, v. a. To take in the gross, without attention to particulars.

The expenses ought to be lumped together.

Addison.

Boccalini, in his political balance, after laying France in one scale, throws Spain into the other, which wanted but very little of being a counterpoise: the Spaniards upon this reckoned, that if Spain of itself weighed so well, they could not fail of success when the several parts of the monarchy were lumped in the same scale.

Addison.

LUMPFISH, n. s. [lump and fish.] A sort of fish: thick, and very ill-shaped; called also the sucker, and the sea-eel.

LUMPING, adj. [from lump.] Large; heavy; great. A low word.

Nick, thou shalt have a lumping pennyworth.

Shakspeare.

Lifting up his lumpish head.

Shakspeare.

Spenser, F. Q. l. l. 45.

Out of the earth was formed the flesh of man, and therefore heavy and lumpish.

Hale, Hist. of the World.

Sylvia is lumpish, heavy, melancholy.

Shakspeare.

Love is all spirit: fairies sooner may be taken tardy, when they slight tricks play,

Than we; we are too dull and lumpish. Suckling.

Little terrestrial particles swimming in it after the grossest were sunk down, which, by their heaviness and lumpish figure, made their way more speedily.

Burnet.

How dull and how insensible a beast Is man, who yet would lord it o'er the rest?

Philosophers and poets vainly strove In every age the lumpish mass to move. Dryden.

LUMPHISHLY, adv. [from lumpish.] With heaviness; with stupidity. Sherwood.

LUMPHISHNESS, n. s. [from lumpish.] Stupid heaviness.

The Lord was well acquainted with the dulness and lumpishness of our hearts.

Erythol. of Solomon's Song, (1585), p. 309.

Such repugnancy and resistance there is yet remaining in those, which are most obedient; such heaviness and lumpishness in those which are most ready and diligent.

Herman, Transl. of Ben, p. 59.

LUMPS, adj. [from lump.] Full of lumps; full of compact masses.

One of the best spiders to dig hard lumpy clays, but too small for light garden mould.

Mortimer, &c.

LUNACY, n. s. [from luna, the moon.] A kind of madness influenced by the moon; madness in general.

Love is merely madness, and deserves as well a dark house and a whip as madmen do; and the reason why they are not so punished and cured is, that the lunacy is so ordinary, that the whippers are in love too.

Shakspeare, At you like it.

Your kindred shun your house, As beaten hence by your strange lunacy. Shakspeare.

If we had all reason, and history, and human helps and acquisitions, quite aside, the world will never be rid of religious lunacies and fancies.

More, Critic. Calh. (1655), p. 251.

There is difference of lunacy: I had rather be mad with him, than when he had nothing, thought all the ships that came into the haven his, than with you, who, when you have so much coming in, think you have nothing.

LUNAR, † adj. [lunaire, Fr. lunaris, LUNARY. † Lat.]

1. Relating to the moon.

They that have resolved that these years were but lunary years, viz. of a month, or Egyptian years, are easily confuted. Relaph, Hist. of the World.

Then we upon our globe's last verge shall go, And view the ocean leaning on the sky;

From thence our rolling neighbours we shall know, And on the lunar world securely pry. Dryden.

2. Being under the dominion of the moon. They have deominated some herbs solar and some lunar, and such like toys put into great words.

The figure of its seed much resembles a horse-shoe, which Baptista Porta had thought too low a signification, and raised the same unto a lunary representation.

3. Resembling the moon; orbed like the moon.

The lunar horns that bind The brow of Isis, cast a blaze around.

In their right hand a pointed dart they wield; The left, for ward, sustains a lunar shield.

LUNARY, n. s. [lunaria, Latin; lunaire, French.] Moonwort.

Then sprinkles she the juice of rue With nine drops of the midnight dew, From lunary distilling. Dryden, Nymphid.

LUNATED, † adj. [from luna.] Formed like a half moon.

A sort of cross, which our heralds do not dream of; which is a cross lunated after this manner.

LUNATICK, † adj. [lunatique, Fr. lunaticus, Latin.] Mad; having the imagination influenced by the moon.

Lord have mercy on my score, for he is lunatick. Wichfe, St. Matt. xvii.

Bedlam beggars, from low farins, Sometimes with lunatick hams, sometimes with prayers, Enforce their charity. Shakspeare.

LUNATICK, n. s. A madman. The lunatick, the lover, and the poet, Are of imagination all compact:

One sees more devils than vast hell can hold; This madman, Shakspeare, Midw. N. Dream.

I dare assure any man well in his wits, for one in the thousand that he shall not die a lunatick in Bedlam within these seven years: because not above one in about one thousand five hundred have done so.

See the blind beggar dance, the cripple jangle, The set a hero, lunatick a king. Pope.

The residue of the yearly profits shall be laid out in purchasing a piece of land, and in building thereon an hospital for the reception of idiots and lunaticks. Swift.

LUNATION, n. s. [lunation, French; luna, Latin.] The revolution of the moon.

If the lunations be observed for a cycle of nineteen years, which is the cycle of the moon, the same observations will be verified for succeeding cycles for ever.

LUNCH, † n. s. [Minshew derives it from luncheon, from lunja, Spanish; Skiner from kleinken, a small piece, Teut.

It probably comes from clutch or dunch. Dr. Johnson. — Minshew's derivation seems to be the true one. The Spanish lonja, a great slice, is particularly applied to bacon. See LOJJA, Dict. Acad.

Esopi. And thus, in our early usage of luncheon: "Witness their double chynnes, and fat lunchins of flesh on their bodies." The Catullus of the Masse, 8vo. 1584. Serenius, however, notices the Swed. luna, kluna, massa.]

1. As much food as one's hand can hold. When hungry thou stood'st staring like an oaf, I slid'd the luncheon from the barley loaf; With crumbled bread I thickened 'd well the mess.

2. A kind of meal between breakfast and dinner. Now a common colloquial expression. Formerly it was an afternoon's repast, between dinner and supper.

LUNC, † n. s. [luna, Lat.] 1. Any thing in the shape of an half moon.

A troop of Janinarians screw'd the field, Fall'n in just ranks or wedges, luncs, or squares, Firm as they stood. Watts.

2. Fit of lunacy or frenzy; mad freak. The French say of a man fantastical or whimsical, Il a des luncs. Hammer.

These dangerous, unsafe luncs o' the king! Beware them!

He must be told on't, and he shall; the office Becomes a woman best. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

3. A leash: as, the lunc of a hawk. [Su. Goth. luna, fucit.]

LUNEST, n. s. [from luna, Lat.] A little moon; an attendant upon a planet.

There have been further discoveries made of the visible and material heavens, in these later ages, than ever were known to our predecessors; who could never have believed, that there were such lunets about some of the planets, as our late perspectives have discovered.

LUNETTE, n. s. [French.] A small half moon. Lunette is a covered place made before the courtine, which consists of two faces that form an angle inwards, and is commonly raised in fosses full of water, to serve instead of a fausse braye, and to dispute the enemy's passage: it is six toises in extent, of which the parapet is four.

LUNG, n. s. See LUNGS. LUNGR, n. s. See LONGE.

1. A thrust. 2. A violent kick of a horse.

LUNGOUS, † adj. [Of uncertain etymology.] Spiteful; malicious. Derbyshire, and Leicestershire. Grose. And I believe, in Cheshire.

LUNGIS, n. s. [longis, Fr. longone, Ital. from longus, q. d. to be a long time about an affair, Ménage. See To LOUNG.] A lubber, Barret, Adv. 1580. A dreaming, drowsy fellow; also, one who being sent on an errand is long in returning. Cotgrave, and Sherwood. Not now in use, though obvious in the modern lounge.

LUNGS, n. s. pl. [lungen, Saxon; lung, Dutch; lung, German. The singular number in our language is rarely used.

4 n

It occurs in the summary of Du Bartas, 1621, p. 284. "The lung is nourished by a spiritual and vaporous blood." Again, "The lung is the instrument of the voice."

1. The lights; the part by which breath is inspired and expired.

More would I, but my lungs are wasted so,
That strength of speech is utterly denied me.

Shakespeare.

The bellows of his lungs begin to swell,
Nor can the good receive nor bad expel. Dryden.
Had I a hundred mouths, a hundred tongues,
And throats of brass inspir'd with iron lungs;
I could not half those horrid crimes repeat,
Nor half the punishments those crimes have met.

Dryden.

2. Formerly a cant term for a person; denoting a large and strong-voiced man, as Coles has observed; and also a chymical servant, a sort of under-workman in the art.

That is his fire-drake,
His lungs, his æphyrae, be that puff his coals.

B. Jonan, Alchemist.

LUNGED. adj. [from lungs.] Having lungs; having the nature of lungs; drawing in and emitting air, as the lungs in an animal body.

The smith prepares his hammer for the stroke,
While the lung'd bellows himself fire provoke.

Dryden.

LUNG-GROWN. adj. [lung and grown.] The lungs sometimes grow fast in the skin that lines the breast within; whence such are detained with that accident are lung-grown.

Harvey on Consumptions.

LUNT. n. s. [lonte, Dutch.] The match-cord with which guns are fired.

LUPINE. n. s. [lupin, French; lupinus, Latin.] A kind of pulse.

It has a papilionaceous flower, out of whose empalement rises the pale, which afterward turns into a pod filled with either plain or spherical seeds: the leaves grow like fingers upon the foot stalks.

Miller.

When Proteogenes would undertake any excellent piece, he used to diet himself with peas and lupines, that his invention might be quick and refined.

Preachon on Drawing.

Where stalks of lupines grew,
Th' ensuing season, in return, may bear
The bearded product of the golden year.

Dryden, Georg.

LUPINE.* adj. [lupinus, Latin.] Like a wolf.

Their physiognomy is canine, æ lupine, or loonine; for, we read, some men had lionly looks.

Bp. Gauden, Life of Bp. Brownrigg, p. 236.

LURCH. n. s. [This word is derived by Skinner from fourche, a game of draughts, much used, as he says, among the Dutch; ourche he derives from arca; so that, I suppose, those that are lost are left in lorche, in the lurch or box; whence the use of the word.]

To leave in the LURCH. To leave in a forlorn or deserted condition; to leave without help. A ludicrous phrase.

Will you now to peace incline,
And languish in the main design,

And leave us in the lurch? Denham.
But though thou'rt of a different church,
I will not leave thee in the lurch. Hutchins.

Have a care how you keep company with those that, when they find themselves upon a pinch, will leave their friends in the lurch. L'Extreame.

Can you break your word with three of the honestest best meaning persons in the world? It is base to take advantage of their simplicity and credulity, and leave them in the lurch at last.

Arbutnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

Flirts about town had a design to cast us out of the fashionable world, and leave us in the lurch, by some of their late refinements. Addison, Guardian.

TO LURCH. v. n. [loeren, Dutch; or rather from the noun.]

1. To shift; to play tricks.

I myself, sometimes leaving goodness on my left hand, and hiding mine honour in my necessity, and pain to shackle, to hedge, and to lurch.

Shakespeare.

2. To lie in wait; we now rather use lurk. While the one was upon wing, the other stood lurking upon the ground, and flew away with the fish. L'Extreame.

TO LURCH. v. a. [lurcor, Lat.]

1. To devour; to swallow greedily.

Too far off from great cities may hinder business; or too near lurcheth all provision and match every thing down. Bacon.

2. To defeat; to disappoint. A word now used only in burlesque. [from the game lurch.]

He waxed like a sea;
And, in the brunt of seventeen battles since,
He lurcht all words o' the garland. Shak. Coriol.

He never designed the use of them to be continual; by putting such an emptiness in them, as should so quickly fail and lurch the expectation.

South.

This is a sure rule, that will never deceive or lurch the sincere communicant.

South.

3. To steal privily; to filch; to pilfer.

LURCHIA. n. s. [from lurch.]

1. One that watches to steal, or to betray or entrap.

I not love a lurcher, that taketh men's stomachs away that they cannot eat, their spleen that they cannot laugh, their hearts that they cannot fight, their eyes that they cannot sleep?

Lily, Endimion.

His thefts some tradesman spies,
Swift from his play the scudding lurcher flies;
Whilst every honest tongue Shoop thief resounds.

Gay.

2. A dog that watches for his game.

I cannot represent those worthies more naturally than under the shadow of a pack of dogs, made up of lurchers, lurchers, and setters.

Trotter.

3. [Lurco, Latin.] A glutton; a gormandizer. Not now used.

Barric.

LURDAN.* n. s. [lourdin, old French, stupid, clownish; lourdai, a duce; lurdus, low Lat. from lourd; Teut. lourd. See LOORD. Serenius derives the word from the Goth. lor, stercus.] A clown; a blockhead; a lazy person; a worthless person. Used in Lancashire and other parts of the north.

Lo! here we have the kyng's male!

What, lurdens, art thou wode?

Old Song of Adam Bell, p. II.

Lurdens or clowns attired in their ordinary worky-day clothes.

Florio, Transl. of Montaigne, p. 228.

LURDAN.* adj. [lourdin, Fr.] Blockish; LUR'DY. } stupid; lazy; sluggish.

Cotgrave, and Grosse.

LURE. n. s. [lurre, French; lure, Dutch.]

1. Something held out to call a hawk.

My falcon now is sharp and passing empty,
And, till the stoop, she must not be full-gorg'd,
For then she never looks upon her lure. Shaks.

This lure she cast abroad, thinking that this fame and belief would draw it one time or other, some birds to strike upon it. Bacon, Hen. VII.

A great estate to an heir, is as a lure to all the birds of prey round about to seize on him. Bacon.

This affluet'd pride, nor art nor force can bend.

Nor high-down hopes to reason's lure descend.

Denham.

A falconer Henry is, when Emma hawks;

With her of tartsels, and of lures he talks. Prior.

2. Any enticement; any thing that promises advantage.

How many have with a smile made small account
Of beauty, and bet lures, easily scorn'd?
All her assaults, on worthless things intent?

Milton, P. R.

LUXURY

Hold out her lure to his superlative eye,
And grieve'd to see him pass contemptuous by.

Motley.

TO LURE. v. n. [from the noun.] To call hawks.

Standing near one that lured loud and shrill,
I had suddenly an offence, as if somewhat had broken, or been dislocated in my ear, and immediately after a loud ringing.

These falcons clannetung up and down, from hill to hill, and luring all along, lighted at last upon a large pleasant valley.

Howell, Instruct. For Trav. p. 134.

TO LURE. v. t.

1. To bring hawks to the lure.

With empty hand men may no lures lure.

Chaucer, Wife of Bath, Prolog.

2. To attract; to entice; to draw. [lura, allitere, Goth. lurenius.]

A little matter will lure or scare the common people into civil and religious fashions, if they have any leaders and bold dictators.

Bp. Taylor, Arct. Hendemon, p. 154.

As when a flock

Of ravens foul, though many a league remote,
Against the foot of battle, in a field
Where armies lie encamp'd, come flying, lur'd

With scent of living carcasses. Milton, P. I.

A man spent one day in labour, that he might pass the other at ease; and lured on by the pleasure of this bait, when he was in vigour he would provide for as many days as he could.

Temple.

Should you lure

From this dark haunt, beneath the tangled roots
Of pendulous trees, the mouch of the brook,
Behoves you then to play your finest art.

Thomson.

Volumes on shelter'd stalls expanded lie,
And various science lures the lured eye.

Gey, Trivia.

LURID. adj. [luridus, Latin.] Gloomy; dismal. Not used.

Slow setting o'er the lurid grove.

Unusual, gloomy brow. Thomson, Summer.

TO LURK. v. n. [probably lurch and lurk are the same word. See TO LURCH.]

Dr. Johnson. Lurk may be from loeren; or, rather from the Danish lurer, to lurk, to watch, to lie sneaking, or in ambush; whence lur, an ambush. See Dr. Jamieson in V. TO LOURE, where it is observed that Serenius and three both trace our word to the Su. Goth. lurk.

See also Spiegel, Gloss. Su. Goth. V. LURKEN.] To lie in wait; to lie hidden; to lie close.

Far in laud a savage nation dwelt,
That never tasted grace, nor goodness felt;
But like wild beasts, lurking in luscious den,
And flying fast as roebuck through the fen,
All naked.

Milbrook lurked between two hills, a village of some eighty houses, and borrowing its name from a mill and little brook running there through.

Corcor, Sure, of Cornwall.
They lay not to live by their works,
But thieveryly loiter and lurk.

If sinners enice thee, consent not; if they say let us lay wait for blood, let us lurk privily for the innocent.

The wife, where danger or dishonour lurks,
Safest and seemliest by her husband stays.

See
The lurking gold upon the fatal tree.

The king unseen
Lurk'd in her hand, and mourn'd his captive queen;

He springs to vengeance.
I do not lurk in the dark: I am not wholly unknown to the world; I have set my name as length.

LU'CKER.* n. s. [from lurk.] A loiterer;
one that lies in wait: a thief that lies in wait.

If this lawless lurker had ever had any taste of the civil or canon law.

By Hall. Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 159.
It was well known what a bold lurker schism was.

Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 1.
LU'CKINGPLACE. n. s. [lurk and place.]
Hiding place: secret place.

Take knowledge of all the lurking-places where he hideth himself.

LU'URY.* n. s. [I know not the etymology.]
A crowd; a throng; a heap.

And is the lurry of lawyers quite worn out?
World of Wanderers, (1608), p. 135.

A lurry and rabble of poor farthing friars,
who have neither rent nor revenue.

We are not to leave duties for no duty, and to turn prayer into a kind of lurry.

Milton, Iconoclasts, ch. 16.
LUSCIOUS.* adj. [from delicious, say some; but Skinner more probably derives it from luscious, corruptly pronounced. Dr. Johnson. — It is probably from the old word lush, juicy, succulent, rank, lusty. See LUSH. Luscious is usually written luscious in our old lexicography.]

1. Sweet, so as to nauseate.
Pert wit and luscious eloquence have lost their relish.

2. Sweet in a great degree.
The food that to him now is as luscious as loches, shall shortly be as bitter as colloquintida.

With brandish'd blade rush on him, break his glave,
And shed the luscious liquor on the ground.

Blown roses hold their sweetness to the last,
And raisins keep their luscious native taste.

3. Pleasing; delightful.
He will bait him in with the luscious proposal of some gainful purchase.

LU'SCIOUSLY.* adv. [from luscious.] Sweetly to a great degree.

LU'SCIOUSNESS. n. s. [from luscious.] Immoderate sweetness.

Can there be greater indulgence in God, than to embitter sensualities whose lusciousness intoxicates us, and to clip wings which carry us from him?

Post bred worms by reason of the lusciousness and sweetness of the grain. Mortimer, Husbandry.

LU'SERN. n. s. [lupus cervarius, Latin.] A lynx.

LUSH.* adj. Of a dark, deep, full colour, opposite to pale and faint; from luscus.
Dr. Johnson from Hammer. — But the word has no connection with the Fr. luscus, and no reference to colour,

where Shakespeare applies it to the grass,
in the solitary instance of the word given by Dr. Johnson. It appears to have been usually applied to plants, and to denote their juicy, full, succulent, and rank state. All the old editions of Shakespeare read "luscious woodbine," where modern criticism has substituted lush.

Lush and foggy is the blade,
And cheers the husbandman with hope.

Golding, Transl. of Ovid, (1587).
Shrubs lush and almost like a gyvete.

Golding, Transl. of Jul. Solinus, (1587).
How lush and lusty the grass looks? how
green?

LUSH.* adj. [lascus, French; from the Goth. laskr, sluggish, crafty. Serenius.]
Idle; lazy; worthless.

LU'BER.* n. s. [from the adjective.] A lubber; a sot; a lazy fellow.

Colgrave, and Sherwood.
Els had we never had so many lecherous lubs
among them.

Bole, Acts of Eng. Vol. P. I. fol. 61. b.
To LUSK.* v. n. [from the noun.] To be idle; to lie idle, unemployed; to be careless.

He is my foe; friend thou not him, nor forge him arms, but leave him unencouraged.

Him lusk at home unencouraged.
Warner, Albion's Eng. (1596), p. 147.

Would be cashier'd of one poor scrap of pelf:
If that she were incarcinate in our time,
She might lusk in dandied in dandied slime,
Shaded from honour.

Mortons, Scourge of Vill. (1599), ii. 5.
Not that I mean to feign an idle God,
That dwells in heaven, and never looks abroad,
That courts not virtue, and corrects not vice; —
but I conceive

In God care, counsel, justice, mercy, might,
To punish wrongs, and patronise the right.

LU'SKISH.* adj. [from lush.] Somewhat inclining to laziness or indolence.

Any swineherd's brat, that lousie came
To luskish Athens.

Mortons, Scourge of Vill. (1599), i. 3.
LU'SKISHLY.* adv. [from luskish.] Lazily; indolently.

LU'SKISHNESS.* n. s. [from luskish.] A disposition to laziness.

He slouch'd off luskishness; and, courage chill,
Kindling afresh, gan battell to renew.

LU'SCIOUSLY.* adv. [from luscious.] Used in play; sportive.

Many too nicely take exceptions at cards, tables, and dice, and such mixt luscious lots; whom Gaskier well comforts.

Burton, Anat. of Med. p. 271.

Things more open to exception, yet unjustly condemned as unlawful; such as the luscious lots, dancing and stage-plays.

LU'SORY.* adj. [lusciorius, Latin.] Used in play.

How littler have come been against all luscory
lots, or any play with chance!

By Taylor, Artif. Hindrances, p. 120.
They supply it with their laces in luscory shir-mises on horseback, wherein their dexterity cannot be too much studied.

There might be many entertaining contrivances for the instruction of children in geometry and geography, in such alluring and luscory methods, which would make a most agreeable and lasting impression.

LU'RY.* n. s. [lurt, Saxon; lust, Dutch;
from the Gothic, lustig, jolly; and not the participle of the Sax. lycan, to list, to desire, as Mr. H. Tooke pretends.
See the first sense of the word.]

1. Desire; inclination; will. This primary sense is not noticed by Dr. Johnson.
Seamen yet use this sense in respect to the inclination of the ship, when she heels.

He that hath more lust to cry.
Swinney, Dial. between two Shepherds.
And Nemerson learned well to rule her lust.

Little lust had she to talk of aught.

Let me be privileg'd by my place, and meagre,
To be a speaker free; when I am hence,
I'll answer to my duty, Shrewsbury, Tr. and Com.

I will divide the spoil; my lust shall be satisfied upon them.

2. Carnal desire.
This our court, infected with their manners,
Shews like a riotous inn; epicurism and lust
Make it more like a tavern or a brothel.

Then a grand palace. Shakespeare, A. Lear.
Lust, and rank thoughts. Shakespeare, Cymb.

They are immediately given to the lust of the flesh, making no conscience to get husbands. Abbot.
When a temptation of lust assaults thee, do not reist by disputing with it, but fly from it, that is, think not at all of it.

3. Any violent or irregular desire.
The ungodly, for his own lust, doth persecute the poor: let them be taken in the crafty wiliness they imagined.

Virtue was represented by Hercules: he is drawn offering to strike a dragon; by the dragon are meant all manner of lusts. Psalm on Drawing.
All weigh our acts, and what'er seems unjust,
Impute not to necessity, but lust.

The lust of lucre. Dryden, Ind. Emp.
Vigour; active power; lustiness. Not used.

Trees will grow greener, and bear better fruit, if you put salt, or lees of wine, or blood, to the root: the cause may be the increasing lust or advice of the root.

To LUST.* v. n. [Sax. lyscan; Goth.
lustan.]

1. To desire carnally.
That with her lust lust in infancy.
If *lust*ing love be so disgraceful,
Dile before you live unchast:
For better die with honest fame,
Than lead a wanton life with shame.

Incontinent man, that loveth all he seeth
And lusteth after that he did love. Reverend.

2. To desire vehemently.

Giving sometimes prodigally; not because he loved them to whom he gave, but because he lusted to give. Sidney.

The Christian captives in chains could no way move themselves, if they should unadvisedly lust after liberty. Knolles.

3. To list; to like. Out of use.

Their eyes swell with fatness; and they do even what they lust. Psalm lxxiii.

4. To have irregular dispositions, or desires.

The mixed multitude fell a lusting; and the children of Israel also wept, and said, Who shall give us flesh to eat? Numbers.

The spirit that dwelleth in us lusteth to envy. Jer. li. 5.

LUST'ER. * n. s. [from lust.] One who is inflamed with lust.

Hear, and fear, all lusters after strange women! Dr. Clarke, Sermon. (1637.) p. 499.

LUST'FUL.† adj. [lust and full. Sax. lurfull.]

1. Libidinous; having irregular desires. Turning wasteful fire to lustful heat. With beastly sin thought he to have deſi'd. Spenser, F. Q.

There is no man that is intemperate or lustful, but besides the guilt likewise stains and obscures his soul. Tillotson.

2. Propensity to sensuality; inciting to lust.

constitutions of their neighbours in their lawless lusthead. Parnassus of Literature.

LUST'ILY.† adv. [lurliche, Sax.] Stoutly; with vigour; with mettle.

Old Hulberdin, as he was dauncing with his doctours lustilic in the pulpit, against the heretics, how he stamp and tooke on I cannot tell, but crash quoth the pulpit, downe cometh the dauncer, and there lay Hulberdin not dauncing but sprawling in the midst of his audience. For. Arts and Manners of Dr. Linsimer.

I determine to fight lustilic for him. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Now, gentlemen,
Let's tune, and to it lustily a while. Shakespeare.

LUSTINESS. n. s. [from lusty.] Stoutness;
sturdiness; strength; vigour of body.

Fresh Clarion being ready alight,—
[He] with good speed began to take his flight,
Over the fields in his frank lustiness. Spenser, Muscivorus.

Where there is no great a pretension of the ordinary time, it is the lustiness of the child; but when it is less, it is some indisposition of the mother. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Cappadocian slaves were famous for their lustiness, and being in good liking, were set on a stall to shew the good habit of their body, and made to play tricks before the buyers, to shew their activity and strength. Dryden, Pers.

LUST'LESS.† adj. [from lust.] Not vigorous; weak; languid; lifeless.

Lustless, far from game. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 4.

More pure, and nearer to æthereal mind. Garth.

To LUSTRATE. * v. a. [lustror, Latin.]
To purify.

The parts of this work, as fast as I could finish them, were lustrated by your gracious eye, and consummated by your judicious observations. Ld. Herbert, Hen. VIII. Dedication.

When we have found this execrable thing, which hath brought all our plague on us, then we must purge, and cleanse, and lustrate the whole city for its sake. Hemond, Works, li. 638.

LUSTRATION. n. s. [lustration, French;
lustratio, Lat.] Purification by water.

Job's religious care,
His some assemblies, whose united prayer,
Like sweet perfumes, from golden censurs rise;
He with divine lustrations sanctifies. Sidney, Pers. of Job.

That spirits are corporeal seems a conceit de-gradative unto himself, and such as he should rather labour to overthrow; yet thereby he establisheth the doctrine of lustrations, amulets, and charms. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Should Ie's priest command,
A pilgrimage to Meroe's burning sand;
Through deserts they wou'd seek the secret spring,
And holy water for lustration bring. Dryden, Jus.

What were all their lustrations but so many volumen purifying, to render both themselves and their sacrifices acceptable to their gods? South, Sermon.

spirit could endure to be wholly insignificant and obscure in a foreign country, when he might live with lustre in his own. Swift.

4. [from lustre, Fr. lustrum, Latin.] The space of five years.

Both of us have closed the truth lustre, and it is time to determine how we shall play the last act of the farce. Bolingbroke.

To LUST'RE. * v. a. [from the noun.] To render bright; to illuminate.

In the same instant that God made the sun,
With it this glorious light we see begun,
Which lustred half the earth. Heywood, Her. of Angels, (1635.) p. 122.

LUST'RING. n. s. [from lustre.] A shining;
silk; commonly pronounced lustering.

LUST'ROUS.† adj. [from lustre. Fr. lustreux.]

plays upon the lute.

The lutanists therefore are men of fine genius.

Taylor, No. 153.

I can call the lutanist and the singer, but the sounds that pleased me yesterday weary me to-day.

Johnson, Rascals, ch. 2.

LUTARIOUS. adj. [lutarius, Latin.]

1. Living in mud.

2. Of the colour of mud.

— A scaly tortoise-shell, of the lutarius kind.

Green.

LUTATION. * n. s. [lutatus, Lat.] The method of cementing chymical vessels close together. See TO LUTE.

LUTE. † n. s. [luth, lut, French. Dr.
Johnson.—Some derive this word from the Arab. a-ode, whence the Spanish laud or laut, supposed by Bochart to be the chelys or testudo of the ancients.
See Shaw's Travels, 4to. p. 203. The German laute is also testudo, and the verb lauten, sonum modulare sive id fieri sive instrumento. See Wachter.
The Su. Goth. word is luta.]

1. A stringed instrument of music.

Orpheus with his lute made trees,
And the mountain tops that freeze,
Bow themselves when he did sing.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

May must be drawn with a sweet countenance, upon his head a garland of roses, in one hand a lute.

Penckm.

In a sadly pleasing strain
Let the warbling lute complain. Pope, St. Cecilia.
A lute string will bear a hundred weight without rupture, but at the same time cannot exert its elasticity.

Arbutnot.

Land of singing, or of dancing slaves,
Love-whispering woods, and lute-resounding waves.

Pope, Dunciad.

2. [from lut, French; lutum, Lat.] A composition like clay, with which chemists close up their vessels.

Some temper lute, some specious vessels move,
These furnace erect, and those approve. Gorth.

TO LUTE. † v. a. [from the noun. French.
luter.] To close with lute, or chemist's clay.

Take a vessel of iron, and let it have a cover of iron well luted, after the manner of the chemists.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Iron may be so heated, that being closely luted in a glass, it shall constantly retain the fire.

Wiliams, Magic.

Then appeared a large glaſs-bottle, wherein was luted up a famous necromancer.

J. Edmonds, Tr. of Quevedo, p. 48.

LUTER. * n. s. [from lut. lutit is a lutist.] word more regularly formed than lutanist.] A player on the lute. Huotet and Barret thus define the luter. Dr. Johnson notices neither that nor lutist.

His (Strada's) imitation of Clandian in expressing a controversy between a lutist and a nightingale.

Hobart on Providence, p. 254.

lady in the lutestring trollope.

Goldsmith, En. 15.

LUTHERAN. * n. s. One who adheres to the doctrine and discipline of Luther.
See LUTHERANISM.

I know her son,

A spleeny Lutheran. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

The Lutherans constantly pressed the unsophis-ticated tenet of the atonement, not contractively in a civilistical, but comprehensively in a Christian point of view. Lawrence, Ser. 3.

LUTHERAN. * adj. Denoting the doctrine or followers of Luther.

The king desired the Lutheran divines to approve his second marriage; they begged his excuse in writing. Burnet, Hist. of the Ref. B. 2.

If we contemplate them [the Articles of the Church of England] in this view, or rather such of them as will become the subject of investigation, we find, that far from being framed according to the system of Calvin in preference to all others, they were modelled after the Lutheran in opposition to the Romish tenets of the day.

Lawrence, Ser. 1.

LUTHERANISM. * n. s. The doctrine of LUTHERISM. * n. s. Luther. Protestantism is divided into Lutheranism and Calvinism, so called from Luther and Calvin, the two distinguished reformers of the sixteenth century. Guthrie.
Lutherism increased daily in the university.

A. Wood, Ann. Univ. Ox. in 1596.

In this country, where the light of literature could not be concealed, nor the love of truth suppressed, Lutheranism found numerous proselytes, who were known by the appellation of "the men of the new learning."

Lawrence, Ser. 1.

LUTHERN. * n. s. [lucarne, Fr. lucerna, Lat.] An architectural term for a sort of window over the cornice, in the roof of a building. See the third sense of LANTERN.

LUTULENT. adj. [lutulentus, Latin.] Muddy; turbid.

TO LUX. * v. a. [luxer, French;
TO LUXATE. * v. a. [luzo, Latin.] To put out of joint; to disjoin.

Consider well the luxated joint, which way it slipped out; it requirith to be returned in the same manner. Hurwen.

Descending careless from his couch, the fall,
Lux'd his neck-joint, and spinal marrow broke. Philips.

LUXATION. * n. s. [luxation, Fr. cotgrave;
from luxo, Latin.]

1. The act of disjoining.

If the straining and luxation of one joint can so afflict us, what shall the racking of the whole body, and the torture of the soul?

By. Hall, Heaven upon Earth.

Why this mangling and luxation of our bones
Bentley, Phil. Lips. § 50.

2. Any thing disjoined.

If thou wert laid up of the gout, or some rupture, or luxation of some limb, thou wouldst not complain to keep in. By. Hall, Balm of Gilead.
This joint may be kept from luxation.

Smith on Old Age, p. 59.

The undue situation, or contusion parts, in fractures and luxations, are to be rectified by chi-rurgical means. Flyer.

LUXE. † n. s. [French; luxus, Latin.]
Luxury; voluptuousness. Not used.
Dr. Johnson says, citing only Prior. But Shenstone uses it; though indeed it is a word unworthy of English usage.

The pow'r of wealth I try'd

And all the various luxe of costly pride. Prior.

Above or Persian luxe, or Attic art,
The rude majestic monument arose.

Shenstone, Eleg. 21.

LUXURIANCE. † n. s. [from luxurians, LUXURIANCY. * n. s. Latin. This word is noticed by Heylin, in 1656, as unusual and uncouth. But luxuriancy had been used some years before that date.]
Exuberance; abundant or wanton plenty or growth.

The rankness and luxuriancy of our tempers in this kind ought rather to be the subject of our extirpation, than a ground for our manuring and culture.

W. Montague, Dec. Em. P. 1. (1648), p. 143.

A fungus prevents healing only by its luxu-riancy.

Flowers grow up in the garden in the greatest luxuriancy and profusion. Spectator.

While through the parting robe the alternate breast

In full luxuriant rose. Thomson, Summer.

LUXURIANT. adj. [luxurians, Lat.]
Exuberant; superfluously pteuous.

A fluent and luxuriant speech becomes youth well, but not age. Bacon, Ess.

The mantling vine
Lays forth her purple grape, and gently creeps
Luxuriant. Milton, P. L.

If the fancy of Ovid be luxuriant, it is his character to be so. Dryden, Pref. to Oe. Ep.

Prune the luxuriant, the uncouth redine,
But slow no mercy to an empty line. Pope.

LUXURIANTLY. * adv. [from luxuriant.] Abundantly.

The subura locks, and the taper arms, of the Saxon dance are most luxuriantly illustrated.

Warton, Ronsay Eng. p. 81.

TO LUXURIATE. † v. n. [luxuriari, Latin.]
To grow exuberantly; to shoot with superfluous plenty.

I could more willingly have luxuriated, and better satisfied myself and others.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

For all this harm, which apparently follows surfeiting and drunkenness, see how we rage and luxuriate in this kind!

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 71.

Corn luxuriates in a better mould.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 453.

The tongue, that nimble interpreter of the mind,
when it doth most luxuriate in variety of expressions, is yet so bounded, that of necessity it must utter all conceptions of the mind in a few words.

Horst, Reform. of Schools. (1642), p. 47.

'Tis worth enough, if a young gallant can Look big, luxuriate, and write gentlemen!

Beaumont, Pygmal. xvi. 30.

The gay girl, as was her fate,
Doth wander and luxuriate.

Loveless, Luc. Penth. p. 46.

Alexander the Great, reflecting on his friends degenerating into sloth and luxury, told them that it was a most slavish thing to luxuriate, and a most royal thing to labour.

Burton, vol. iii. S. 19.

LUXURIUS. adj. [luxuriens, Fr. luxurio-sus, Lat.]

1. Delighting in the pleasures of the table.

2. Administering to luxury.

Those whom last thou saw'st
In triumph, and luxurious were they
First seen in acts of prowess eminent,
And great exploits; but of true virtue void.

Milton, P. L.

The luxurious board.

3. Lustful; libidinous.

She knows the heat of a luxurious bed;
Her blush is guiltless, not modesty. Shakespeare.

- I grant him bloody,
Luxurious, avaricious, false, deceitful. Shakspeare.
 4. Voluptuous; enslaved to pleasure.
Luxurious cities, where the noise
Of riot ascends above their loftiest towers. Milton, P. L.

5. Softening by pleasure.
 Repel the Tuscans foes, their city seize,
 Protect the Latians, in luxurious ease. Dryden.
 6. Luxurious; exuberant.

- Till more hands
 Aid us, the weak under our labour grows
Luxurious by restraint. Milton, P. L.

- LUXURIOUSLY, adv. [from luxurious.] Delicately voluptuously.
 Hoiter hours — you have
Luxuriously pick'd out. Shakspeare. Act. and Clop.

- Where mice and rats devour'd poetick bread,
 And with heretics verse luxuriously were fed. Dryden.

- He never supt in solemn state;
 Nor day to ought luxuriously did join. Dryden.

- LUXURIOSNESS, n. s. [from luxurious.] Voluptuousness; lewdness. Shakspeare.
 Who does the strength of England's yemmory:

- When foundation of luxuriousness
 Fain all the world with such gross beauties;
 Who can sustain? what modest brain can hold,
 But he must make his shamefaced muse a scold!
 Marston, Scourge of Vill. (1599), l. 2.

- LUXURY, n. s. [luxurè, old French;
luxuria, Latin.]

1. Voluptuousness; addictness to pleasure.

- Egypt with Assyria strove
 In wealth and luxury. Milton, P. L.
 Riches expose a man to pride and luxury,
 and a foolish elation of heart. Addison, Spect.

2. Lust; lewdness.
 Urge his hateful luxury,
 His bestial appetite in change of lust,
 Which stretch'd unto their servants, daughters, wives. Shakspeare.

3. Luxuriance; exuberance.
 Young trees of several kinds set contiguous in a fruitful ground, with the luxury of the trees will incorporate. Bacon.

4. Delicious fare.
 He cut the side of the rock for a garden, and by laying on it earth, furnished out a kind of luxury for a hermit. Addison.

- LY. A very frequent termination both of names of places and of adjectives and adverbs; when ly terminates the name of a place, it is derived from leag, Sax.
 a field. Gibson. When it ends an adjective or adverb, it is contracted from lick, like: as, beautily, beautlike; plainly, plainlike.

- LYAN, n. s. [called also lean, and lyme.
 See LIMEHOUND, and LIMEY. Perhaps from the Saxon lyan, ducere, to lead.] A kind of thorn or leash for holding a hound in hand.

- My dog-hook at my belt to which my lyan's
 ty'd,
 My sheaf of arrows by, my wood-knife by my side,
 My hound then in my lyan. Dryden, Maze's Elitism.

- LYCANTHROPY, n. s. [lycanthropie, Fr.
lycân, a wolf, and anthropos, a man, Gr.]
 A kind of madness, in which men have the qualities of wild beasts.

- The world is a wide wilderness, wherein we converse with wild and savage creatures: we think them men; they are beasts. It is contrary to the delusions of lycanthropy: there, but that is a man thinks himself a beast. Bp. Hall, St. Paul's Combat.

 I must retrace the calamities of the time, and the desperate case of this nation, who seem to have fallen quite from the very faculty of reason, and to be possessed with a pure lycanthropy, with a volkish kind of disposition to tear one another in this manner. Howell, Lett. l. vi. 58.

He seems like a man in his sleep, and grows as much the wiser as the man that dreams of a lycanthropy, and was for ever after wary not to come near a river. Bp. Taylor.

Dr. John Freid (hus) given, from Ætius and Orbinian, a description of the madmen called lycanthropes of which one of the most striking symptoms was, to wander amongst the sepulchres of the dead. Warburton, Serm. 27.

LYDIAN, adj. Denoting a species of the ancient music; meaning a soft and slow kind of air.

And ever, against eating cars,
 Lap me in soft Lydian airs. Milton, L. All.

Silly sweet Lydian measures,
 Soothe my sooth'd the soul to pleasure. Dryden, Ode.
 The Lydian mood is now in most request.

Philips, Theat. Poet. Pref.
 I have mixed unawares too much of the Thyrgic; I might change it to the Lydian, and soften their riotous temper; but it is enough: learn from this example to speak with veneration of ancient music? Arbuthnot and Pope, Mari. Scriblerus.

To LYE. See TO LIE.

LYING, n. s. [from lie, whether it signifies to be recumbent, or to speak falsely, or otherwise.]

They will have me whipt for speaking true, that I have me whipt for lying, and sometimes
 I am whipt for holding my peace. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Many tears and temptations befall me by the lying in wait of the Jews. Acts, xi. 19.

The doctor has practised both by sea and land, and therefore cures the green-sickness and lying in / Spectator.

LYINGLY, adv. [from lying.] Falsely;
 without truth. Shakspeare, Othello.

LYKE, adj. for like. Spenser.

LYM, n. s. [from lean or lyme. See LIMEHOUND.] A bloodhound.
 Mauff, greyhound, mongrel grin,
 Hound, or spaniel, brach, or lyn. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

LYMPH, n. s. [lymphæ, French; lymphæ, Latin.] Water; transparent colourless liquor.

When the ethylæ passeth through the mesentery, it is mixed with the lymph, the most spirituous and elaborated part of the blood. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

LYMPHATED, adj. [lymphatus, Lat.] Mad.
 Dict.

LYMPHATIC, n. s. [lymphatique, Fr.
 from lymphæ, Latin.]

1. The lymphatics are slender pellucid tubes, whose cavities are contracted at small and unequal distances: they are carried into the glands of the mesentery, receiving first a fine thin lymph from the lymphatic ducts, which dilates the chylous fluid. Cheyne, Phil. Principles.
 Upon the death of an animal, the spirits may sink into the veins, or lymphatics and glands. Fagier.

2. A lunatick. [lymphaticus, Lat. mad.]

All nations have their lymphatics of some kind or other. Id. Shafsbury.

Erroneous fancy ship'd her wild attire;
 From Bethlem's walls the poor lymphatic stray'd.
 Shenstone, Eleg. 16.

LYMPHATIC, adj.

1. Denoting the vessels called lymphatics.

The circulation of the blood, the milky and lymphatic vessels, the motion of the heart, &c.
 Ellis, Knowl. of Divine Things, p. 342.

2. Mad; raving; extravagant; enthusiastick.

A negro stood by us trembling, whom we could see now and then lift up his hands and eyes, mottering his black art, as we approached, to some huggoblin but, when we least suspected, [he] skipt out, and as in a lymphatic rapture unsheathed a long snake or knife.

Sir T. Herbert, Trans. p. 27.
 Horace either is, or feigns himself, lymphatic.
 Id. Shafsbury.

LYMPHEDUCT, n. s. [lymphæ and ductus, Lat.] A vessel which conveys the lymph.

The glands,
 All artful knots, of various hollow threads,
 Which lympheducts, an artery, nerve, and vein,
 Involve'd ad close together wound. Blackmore.

LYNDEN tree, [tilia, Lat.] A plant. See LIND.

LYNX, n. s. [Latin.] A spotted beast, remarkable for speed and sharp sight.

He that has an idea of a leopard with spots, has but a confused notion of a lynx, it not being thereby sufficiently distinguished from a leopard.
 Locke.

What modes of sight betwixt each wide extreme,
 The mole's dim curtain, and the lynx's beam. Pope.

LYRE, n. s. [lyre, Fr. lyra, Lat.] A harp;
 a musical instrument to which poetry is, by poetical writers, supposed to be sung.

With other notes than to the Orphan lyre. Milton, P. L.

My softest verse, my darling lyre,
 Upon Utopia's toilet lay. Prior.
 He never touch'd his lyre in such a truly chromatick manner as upon this occasion. Arbuthnot and Pope, Mari. Scriblerus.

LYRICAL, adj. [lyricus, Latin; lyricus, LYRIC, French.] Pertaining to a harp, or to odes or poetry sung to a harp; singing to a harp.

All his trochæus lung and acts enroll'd
 In copious legend, or sweet lyric song. Milton, S. A.

Somewhat of the purity of English, somewhat of more equal thoughts, somewhat of sweetness in the numbers; in one word, somewhat of a finer turn, and more lyrical verse, is yet wanting. Dryden.

The lute neglected, and the lyric muse,
 Love taught my tears in sadlier notes to flow,
 And tun'd my heart to elegies of woe. Pope.

LYRICK, n. s. A poet who writes songs to the harp.

The greatest conqueror in this nation, after the manner of the old Grecian lyrics, did only compose the words of his divine odes, but set them to music himself. Addison.

LYRIST, n. s. [lyristes, Latin.] A musician who plays upon the harp.

His tender theme the charming lyric chose Minerva's anger, and the diurnal woes,
 Which voyaging from Troy the victors bore. Pope.

M.

M A C

M Has, in English, one unvaried sound, by compression of the lips; as, mine, tame, camp: it is never mute.

M.* A numeral letter signifying one thousand.

MAB.* n. s.

1. The queen of the fairies, in the superstitious mythology of elder days; probably derived from the Welsh maab, anciently signifying a little child.

O, then, I see queen Mab hath been with you: She is the fairest midwife; and she comes In shape no bigger than an agate stone On the fore-finger of an elderman.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul. Her chariot of a small's fine shell, Which for the colours did excel, The fair queen Mab becoming well.

Drayton, Nymphidia. This is Mab, the mistress fairy That doth nightly rob the dairy.

B. Jonson, Entert. at Allrope. With stories told of many a feat, How fairy Mab the junksies eat.

2. A slattern. North. Ray, and Grose. See Mon.

To MAB.* v. a. To dress carelessly. North. Ray, and Grose.

To MA'BBLE.* v. a. To wrap up. See To Mobbble.

Their heads and faces are mabled in fine linen, that no more is to be seen of them than their eyes.

Sandys, Travels.

MACARONI.* n. s. [Ital. maccheroni.]

1. A kind of paste meat boiled in broth, and dressed with butter, cheese, and spice. Florin, Ital. Dict. 1598. A favourite dish among the Italians; and now common, in our own country, at dinners; a sort of vermicelli.

He doth learn to make strange sauces, to eat anchovies, maccheroni, &c.

B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

2. A sort of droll or fool; and thence the application of the word to a fop. [Mac-carone, Ital.] See also MACAROON.

There is a set of merry drolls whom the common people of all countries admire, and seem to love so well, that they could eat them, according to the old proverb; I mean those circumlocutious wits whom every nation calls by the name of that dish of meat which it loves best. In Holland, they are termed "pickled herrings;" in France, "Jean potage;" in Italy, "maccheroni;" and in Great Britain, "Jack puddings."

Adams, Spect. No. 47. You are a delicate Londoner; you are a macaroni; you can't ride.

Boswell, Tour to the Hebr. p. 64.

MACARONICK.* n. s. [macaronique, Fr.; from the Ital. maccheroni.]

1. A confused heap or mixture of several things. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

2. Ludicrous mixture of languages; a kind of burlesque.

To be travestied or turned into burlesque or macaronique.

By. Ward, Apol. for the Myst. of the Gos. (1673.) p. 42.

MACARON'ICK.* adj. [macaronique, Fr.]

The adjective in both languages is modern: not so the substantive.] Denoting a kind of burlesque poetry, intermixing several languages, latinizing words of vulgar use, and modernizing Latin words. Dr. Johnson, in macaron, has considered this application as derived from the person, the macaroni, whom he calls a coarse, rude, low fellow; but it is much more probably from the combination, the mixed food, macaroni.

Our author gives an account of this new species of poetry, since called macaronic.

Warren, Hist. E. P. ii. 557.

MACARON'. † n. s. [maccheroni, Italian.]

1. A coarse, rude, low fellow; whence macaronick poetry, in which the language is purposely corrupted. Dr. Johnson.—But see MACARONICK. Donne means not such a person as Johnson has described, but a pert, meddling fellow; a busy body; and the poet has placed the accent on the first syllable. But it was also accented on the last.

Like a big wife at sight of loathed meat, Ready to travel; so I sigh and sweat, To hear this macaron talk in vain: for yet, Either my humour or his own to fit;— He names a price for every effort paid, He saith our wars thrive ill because delay'd.

Donne, Poems, p. 192.

A macaron, And to way fit to speak to clouted shoon.

El. on Donne's Death by R. B. Donne's Poems, (ed. 1650.)

2. A kind of sweet biscuit, made of flour, almonds, eggs, and sugar. [from the Italian word; whence macaron, French.]

MACA'W'. † n. s. A large species of parrot, distinguished also by the length of its tail. There are three sorts of this bird brought over into Europe. Chambers.

Where pheasants, parrots, and macaws unfold, Their many-colour'd plumes, suffus'd with gold.

Asa.

MACAW-TREE.* n. s.

A species of the palm-tree, very common in the Carribee islands, where the negroes pierce the tender fruit, whence issues a pleasant liquor; and the body of the tree affords a solid timber, supposed by some to be a sort of ebony.

Miller.

MACE.† n. s. [magga, Saxon; maça, Spanish.]

1. An ensign of authority borne before magistrates.

Who mightily upheld that royal mace, Which now thou bearest. Spranger, F. Q.

2. [mace, old French; masa, Latin.] A heavy blunt weapon; a club of metal.

Some have an axe, and some a mace of steel. Chaucer, Fm. Tale.

O murderous slumber!

Lay't thou thy leaden mace upon my boy That plays thee music? Shakespeare, Jul. Cas. The Turkish troops breaking in with their scymitars and heavy iron maces, made most bloody execution. Kneller.

Death with his mace perfittick smote.

Milton, P. L.

With his mace their monarch struck the ground;

With inward trembling earth receiv'd the wound, And rising streams a ready passage found.

Dryden.

The mighty maces with such haste descended, They break the bones and make the armour rend.

Dryden.

3. [macis, Lat. and old French.] A kind of spice.

The nutmeg is inclosed in a threefold covering, of which the second is mace: it is thick and membranaceous, of an oleaginous, and a yellowish colour: it has an extremely fragrant, aromatick, and agreeable smell, and a pleasant but acrid and oleaginous taste.

Water, vinegar, and honey, is a most excellent sudorific: it is more effectual with a little mace added to it.

Arbushnot.

MACE'LE.* n. s. [mace and ale.] Ale spiced with mace.

I prescribed him a draught of maceale, with hopes to dispose him to rest.

Wierman, Surgery.

MAC'CEBAREH.* n. s. [mace and bear.] One who carries the mace before persons in authority.

I was placed at a quadrangular table opposite to the mace-bearer.

Spectator.

To MAC'ERATE.† v. a. [macero, Latin; macerer, French.]

1. To make lean; to wear away.

Recurrent pains of the stomach, megrims, and other recurrent head aches, macerate the parts, and render the looks of patients consumptive and pining.

Hercy on Consumption.

2. To mortify; to harass with corporal hardships.

No such mad cares, as wot to macerate And rend the greedy minds of covetous men, Do ever creep into the shepherd's den.

Sorrow which contracts the heart, macrates the soul, subverts the good estate of the body, hindering all the occupations of it, causing melancholy, and many times death itself.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 25.

Covetous men are all fools; for what greater folly can there be, or madness, than for such a man to macerate himself when he need not?

Burton, Anat. of Mel.

Out of an excess of zeal they practise mortifications; they macerate their bodies, and impair their health. Fishes.

3. To steep almost to solution.

A vessel—wherein the meat must be macerated for a certain season. Smith on Old Age, p. 84. In lotions in women's cases, we order two portions of hellebore, macerated in two coyle of water. Arbuthnot.

MAC'ERATION. n. s. [maceration, French; from macerate.]

1. The act of wasting, or making lean.

Cockeram.

2. Mortification; corporal hardship.

The faith itself, being clear and serene from all clouds of ceremonies, yet retaineth the use of fastings, abstinences, and other macerations and humilitations of the body, as things real and not figurative. Bacon, Advanc. of Learning, B. 2.

What maceration is there here, with fears and jealousies? Sp. Hall, Of Contentation, § 96. Envy is not pleasure, but the maceration of the body. Fritheim, Rec. li. 56.

Long fastings, and macerations of the flesh. Hemst. Lett. iv. 36.

3. Maceration is an infusion either with or without heat, wherein the ingredients are intended to be almost wholly dissolved.

Quincy.

He took only a maceration of rhubarb, infused into a draught of white wine and beer.

Rantley, Life of Lord Bacon, (1657.)

They beat the whole plant in a mortar, roots, stalks, flowers, leaves and all, till it be reduced to a confused mass. Then after maceration, fermentation, separation, and the other workings of art, there is extracted a kind of ashes or salt.

Gregory, Notes on Script. (ed. 1584.) p. 126. The saliva serves for a maceration and dissolution of the meat into a chyle. Ray on Creation.

MAC'EREB. n. s. [typhus.] An herb.

MAC'HAIEV'LIAN. n. s. [from Nicholas

Machiavel, a Florentine, of the fifteenth century; who inculcated the most detestable notions, and encouraged the "art of reigning tyrannically." He was an enemy to religion, as well as to sound politics; for he taught, that the most solemn obligations might be broken, and that no scruples should be entertained of any action that might compass a design.] A follower of the opinions of Machiavel. Bullock.

Subtle Machiavelians, and those which are frequently called the prudent.

Sp. M. Sandys, Esq. (1634.) p. 46. As our Saviour said, to forewarn all evil-doers. "Remember Lot's wife;" so ye I, to forewarn all arch-politicians, and cunning Machiavelians of this world, Remember poor Naboth's vineyard. Junius, Sin Stigmat. (1639.) p. 626.

MAC'HAIEV'LIAN. adj. Denoting the notions of Machiavel; crafty; subtle; roguish.

My brain
Italianizes my barren faculties
To Machiavelian blackness.

The Valiant Welshman, (1615.)

A most barbarous fellow, using Machiavelian atheism.

Rp. Morton, Discharge, &c. (1633.) p. 208.

MAC'HIAVELISM. n. s. [machiavelisme, French; from Machiavel.] The notions of Machiavel; cunning roguery. See MAC'HIAIEV'LIAN.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

MAC'HINAL. adj. [from machina, Latin.] Relating to machines. Dict.

To MAC'HINATE. v. n. [machinor, Lat. machinari, Fr.] To plan; to contrive; to form schemes; to plot; to conspire against. Cotgrave.

How long will you machinate!

Persecute with causeless hate! Sandys, Ps. p. 96.

MAC'HINATION. n. s. [machinatio, Lat. machination, French; from machinate.] Artifice; contrivance; malicious scheme.

If you miscarry,

Your business of the world hath so an end,
And machination ceases. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

O from their machinations free,

That would my guiltless soul betray!

From those who in my wrongs agree,
And for my life their engines lay.

Sandys, Paraph. Ps.

Be frustrate all ye stratagems of hell,

And devilish machinations cease to night.

Milton, P. R.

How were they zealous in respect to their temporal governors? Not by open rebellion, not by private machinations; but in blessing and submitting to their emperors, and obeying them in all things but their idolatry. Spald.

MAC'HINATOR. n. s. [machinator, Lat. machinator, Fr.] One who plots or forms schemes.

This is the design and the mischievous issue, which to cover and propagate, the cunning machinator pretends the exaltation of the cause of that grace which he designs to suborn or defeat. Glanville, Discern. x. p. 280.

MACHIN'E. n. s. [machina, Latin; machine, French. This word is pronounced masheen. Dr. Johnson.—But formerly it had the Latin accent, viz. on the first syllable. See the example from Ben Jonson. Dr. Johnson's earliest example is junior by nearly half a century to this.]

1. Any complicated work in which one part contributes to the motion of another.

But who hath then interpreted, and brought Lucan's whole frame unto us, and so wrought, As not the smallest joint or gentlest word

In the great mass or machine there is stir'd? J. Jonson, Virg. pref. to My's Lucan, (1627.)

We are led to conceive this great machine of the world to have been once in a state of greater simplicity, as to conceive a watch to have been once in its first material. Burnet.

In a watch's fine machine,
The added movements which declare

How fall the moon, how old the year,
Derive their secondary power

From that which simply points the hour. Prior.

2. An engine.

In the hollow side

Selected numbers of their soldiers hide;
With inward staff the fire machine they load,
And from bowels thrust the dark smoke. Dryden.

3. Supernatural agency in poems.

The churning of the Trojan fleet into waternymphs is the most violent machine in the whole
Æneid, and has given offence to several critics.

Adams, Spec.

The marvellous fable includes whatever is supernatural, and especially the machines of the gods.

Pope.

4. One name for a stage coach.

MACH'INERY. n. s. [from machine.]

1. Enginery; complicated workmanship; self-moved engines.

The Arabians were also famous for other machineries of glass. T. Warton.

2. The machinery signifies that part which the deities, angels, or demons, act in a poem.

Dryden—gives an account of his design of writing an epick poem on the actions either of Attila or of Black Prince, and of the machinery he intended to have used on that occasion.

Dr. J. Warton.

MACH'INING. adj. [from machine.] Denoting the machinery of a poem.

Of Venus and Juno, Jupiter and Mercury, I say nothing; for they were all machining. Dryden on Æneid.

MAC'HINIST. n. s. [machiniste, French; from machina, Latin.] A constructor of engines or machines.

Has the insufficiency of machinists hitherto disgraced the imagery of the poet?

Stevens on Shakespeare's Machets.

MAC'ILENCY. n. s. [from macilent.] Leanness. Dict.

MAC'ILENT. adj. [macilentus, Latin.] Lenn.

MACK. n. s. [A corruption of make, common in the north of England. Westmoreland and Craven Dialects, &c.] A sort; a kind; a fashion.

MACKEREL. n. s. [mackerel, Dutch; maguerreus, French.]

1. A sea-fish are gutted, split, and kept in pickle; as whiting and mackerel.

Curru, Surv. of Cornwall.

Law ordered that the Sunday should have rest; And that no nymph her noisy food should sell, Except it were new milk or mackerel. King, Cookery.

Sooner shall cats dipper in water clear,
And speckled mackerels graze the meadows fair,
Than I forget my shepherd's wonted love. Gay, Pastoral.

2. A pander; a pimp. [maguerel, old Fr. Minshew.] Obsolete.

MACKEREL Gale seems to be, in Dryden's cant, a strong breeze; such, I suppose, as is desired to bring mackerel fresh to market.

They set up every sail;

The wind was fair, but blew a mackerel gale.

Dryden, Hind and Panther.

MACKEREL Sky. A sky streaked or marked like a mackerel.

Let "water'd" signify a sky that has many high, thin, and small clouds, looking almost like water'd taffy, called in some places a mackerel sky. Hobbs, in Spald's Hist. R. Soc. p. 177.

MACRO'LOGY. n. s. [μακρολογία, long, and λόγος, discourse, Gr.] Long and tedious talk without matter. Bullock, edit. 1656. It is, in rhetoric, a redundant or too copious style.

MACROCOSMOS. n. s. [μακροκοσμος, French; macrocosm, and κόσμος.] The whole world, or visible system, in opposition to the microcosm, or world of man.

Throughout all this vast macrocosm.

Watson, Quodlibets, (1602.) p. 274.

There is a very rigid and strict analogy and conformity between the macrocosm and the microcosm, the world and man.

Spencer on Prodigies, p. 70.

MAC'TATION.† n. s. [macatus, Latin.]
The act of killing for sacrifice.

Here they call Cain's offering, which is described and allowed to be of the fruits of the ground only, beulah, a sacrifice, or macation.

Shakespeare on the Creation, Pref. p. ciii.

MAC'ULA. n. s. [Latin.]

1. A spot.
